In the senate Peffer's resolution to investigate senators on account of alleged use of their knowledge of public matters for private gain was laid on the table till after the tariff bill is disposed of. The seigniorage bill was discussed.

NATIONAL LEAGUE CLUBS.

Call For the Annual Convention at Detroit on Special.

CHICAGO, March 12.—The official call for the annual convention of the National Republican League will be issued from the national headquarters in this city to-day. The convention will be held at Detroit, June 20, and will continue several days. The ratio of representation will be six delegates at large from each state and territory, and four from each congressional district and one from each college Republican club in the United States. The following are ex-officio delegates: The president, secretary and treasurer of the National league; one vice president and one executive member of the national organization from each state, and the president and secretary of each state league, making four ex-officio delegates from each state. This gives each state practically ten delegates at large in addition to the four from each congressional district. The total representation will exceed 2,000 delegates.

For a Pacific Cable.

WELLINGTON, N. Z., March 8.—The delegates who have been attending the conference called to discuss the intercolonial postal and telegraph service, have passed a resolution in favor of a Pacific cable to America, the route to be via Samoa, Fanning island and Honolulu in preference.

THE TOBACCO HABIT.

THE USE OF SNUFF AND "FINE CUT" DECLINING.

Chewing In Public Is Far Less Common Than Formerly—Hold of the Cigarette Among the "Classes" In Europe—The "V" Shaped Pipe of the Caribbeans.

It is reported by the newspapers that ex-Speaker Reed has gone back to his cigar; that he nowadays puffs the fragrant Havana with all the gusto of former days. He is probably sorry already that he has resumed the soothing habit. One day last summer when at his Portland home he offered me a cigar, but failed to take one himself, he said in explanation:

"I stopped smoking some five years ago. I don't know why. I've always been sorry I did. I wonldn't advise you to stop. You'd regret it. I've made up my mind that whenever a man does smoke he'll be sorry for."

The habit of smoking tobacco is now well nigh universal among civilized people. But the use of the American weed, pulverized as snuff and shredded as fine cut or caked in plugs or twisted as pigtail for chewing purposes, has greatly declined. The falling off of the sniffing habit began many years ago, though it still lingers in some quarters, the solace of the aged. Chewing began to go out in the seventies, but it still maintains a much stronger hold than snuffing. But chewing in public or by public men is nowadays a rarity. Not many of the younger readers of this newspaper can remember the time when this picture of an American public man limned by the author of Martin Chuzzlewit was even the slightest semblance of truth:

"Their new friend said no more just then, being busily employed in cutting a quid, or plug, from his cake of tobacco and whistling softly to himself the while. When he had shaped it to his liking, he took out his old plug and deposited it on the back of the seat between Mark and Martin, while he thrust the new one into the hollow of his cheek, where it looked like a large walnut or a tolerable pippin. Finding it quite satisfactory, he stuck the point of his knife into the old plug, and holding it out to their host, inquired, with the air of one who had not lived in vain, that it was 'used up considerable.' Then he tossed it away."

It was General Choke who performed in this fashion before Martin Chuzzlewit and his cheerful friend and servant, Mark Tapley, and, though the former may perhaps be justly written down a caricature, yet it was a daily habit then know, "founded on fact," as was also the description of Mr. Chollop, who appeared to Mark and Martin further along in the book. Martin saw Chollop rid himself once of the juice of the delicious morsel he was masticating and drew back.

"'I can calculate my distance, sir,' returned Mr. Chollop, in reply to such inquire, sir, two foot clear in a circular direction and can engage myself too keep within it. I have gone 10 foot in a circular direction, but that was far a wager. I realized the stakes, yes, sir.'

"He was silent for a time, during which he was actively engaged in the formation of a magic circle round the chest on which he sat."

It has been stated by the doctors that, however much more disagreeable to the nonchewer than smoking the chewing of tobacco may be, it is less harmful. We have all heard and seen of persons who smoked themselves to death, but did you ever read or hear of a man who chawed himself into an untimely bourne. Be that as it may, there are times when even the quid has its uses. I used to know a reporter who never chewed save when he went to report horse races. He was so much of a slave to nicotine that he felt the need of it whenever he had to do work in a hurry. He could not smoke at the races, for the smoke got into his eyes and made it hard to see the horses. So he compromised for the time being on a bit of cut plug between his teeth, with perfectly satisfactory results.

As the habits of chewing and sniffing have gone out, the smoking of cigarettes has grown in. Perhaps the change is not for the better. Certainly, if all the doleful stories we hear and read are true, it isn't. But the little paper wrapped roll of smoking tobacco seems to have come to stay, and if American women ever start to be smokers they will begin on cigarettes. Indeed some of them have already made a very fair beginning in that direction, though none of the fair sex has yet been brave enough to smoke in the sight of strangers or on the streets. It is a common notion that one of the chief reasons why more women do not smoke is because tobacco affects their nervous system more directly than it does men's, but many readers of rural journals can remember the time when almost every one of the older women in "the neighborhood" used to smoke, and they usually smoked clay pipes at that, sometimes blacker than oblivion and stronger than Samson. Strangely enough, according to the theories of those who hold that the use of tobacco has a tendency to shorten human life, those smoking dames were generally much longer lived than their sisters who did not indulge.

Snuff taking lasted longer with the women than with the men, but few of the younger generation understand how universal the habit used to be with all classes and both sexes. In those old days the snuffbox was a personal possession held in high regard. It was made of wood, horn, ivory, silver or gold, according to the financial ability of the owner. Often it was studded with jewels, often it was adorned with exquisite paintings. The lover sometimes had his sweetheart's miniature painted on the cover of his box.

Not many persons are aware probably that among the perquisites arrogated to themselves by the United States senators in the early days of the republic was snuff at the expense of the government. The snuff is still furnished, but none now partakes of it save Captain Bassett, the ancient attendant upon the august senate.

Among the class known as the nobility abroad the precious cigarette case has taken the place of the jeweled snuffbox. These gilded persons take more kindly to cigarettes than do grown men in America. In Europe the cigarette is not thought to be out of place between the lips of a lady, and most of the present generation of queens and princesses smoke them. The women who have been prominent in diplomacy, including Mme. de Novikoff, Princess Metternich and Mme. Nishan Pasha, are devoted to cigarettes. The Austrian empress smokes in America. In Europe the cigarette is almost all the famous diplomats of Europe puff, and cigarette smoke to that of cigars, and Russian diplomats are known to have the most exacting taste in this direction. Russians generally are great cigarette smokers, but the common people use cheap black tobacco and rank Havana cigarettes as they consume them. One of the Russian papers has just published its circulation by printing on the back of a quality that may be used for cigarette wrappers. Like Mme. Blavatsky, the Russian high priestess of that curious cult, theosophy, consumed cigarettes in great quantities.

Whatever ill may be said of cigarette smoking, it is a cleaner habit than snuff taking. Which could not be associated with any degree of neatness by any one but a great artist. Snuff dipping, now happily almost forgotten, was undoubtedly a more uncleanly form of using tobacco than any other.

The tobacco plant, as every one knows, is of American origin. It seems to have been used by the aboriginal races from time immemorial by the aborigines. The pipes used in different localities differed somewhat in design, but were simply all prototypes of the designs adopted by civilized man, save those used by some of the Caribbean natives. Their pipes were like the letter V in shape. The tobacco was put in the hollow of the tube represented by the stem of the letter. The tubes represented by the arms were inserted in the nostrils, and the smoke was inhaled through the nose. Just when cigars and cigarettes began to be smoked is a question. It is considered likely, according to some authorities, that they originated with the savages. The modern smoker, by the way, is more and more inclined to forsake the pipe for the cigar, especially in this country, if he can afford it, and the expensively carved meerschaum, colored with infinite pride and patience, is not nowadays half as common as it was 20 years ago.

The controversy as to whether tobacco is injurious or not began in the sixteenth century when Jean Nicot (whence nicotine), lord of Villemain and master of requests in the household of the French king, got some of the plants in Portugal, whence they had been taken from the new world, and taking to smoking to it the members of the French court. The controversy has lasted ever since and is as far from being settled now as it was when Sir Walter Raleigh carried the habit into England. From France and England the habit spread over the world, and today tobacco is almost as universal an article of consumption as bread. It is not for this writer to say whether it has brought good or evil to humanity, but he is of the opinion that the people of today are as strong, as large, as healthy as and as intellectual as were their forefathers of the days before tobacco was an article of consumption.

I. D. MARSHALL.

AGAINST INCOME TAX

Democratic Envoys Should Be Evenly Distributed—The Laborer Has Been Deprived of His Wages, So Let the Rich Also Be Taxed.

Immediately after the Democratic administration assumed control of the affairs of government, being supported by a majority of the Democratic party in both houses of congress, the necessity occurred to the leading Democratic papers of the country to forestall by some means what they knew would be the inevitable consequences of Democratic control. History had shown that whenever the Democratic party had exclusive control in administering the affairs of government, the United States was invariably, without any exception whatever, plunged into a condition of dire distress to labor, to producers and manufacturers, caused by money panics, complexions and starvation.

Efforts were recently been made to mislead the press and to deceive the people upon the subject of the income tax which the Democratic administration may find itself compelled to impose as a means for acquiring revenue in order to meet the deficiency brought about by the diminished customs receipts through the inflated tariff for revenue only, and which is not a tariff for revenue in any manner, and to meet the deficiency brought about by the increase of expenditures above receipts of government. A tariff for revenue only is a direct tax upon the people; therefore, why should it not be followed up by other direct taxation, and why should not these taxes be levied upon those who are best able to pay them? Let the ills of the laws be paid by those who can afford to live in luxury, who have wealth, and who do not have to bother themselves with such small matters as providing for the morrow.

The history of the present Democratic party since March 4, 1893, has shown that it is distinctly and most decidedly the party that favors and has regard to the interests of the rich. Rich and important public offices have been apportioned for money and bought by the rich. The new tariff bill would place taxation for the rich in reducing the duty upon foreign champagne and upon certain objects, but what has the Democratic party during 1893 done for the poor man, for the wage earner, for the man depend upon his daily toil for the means wherewith to supply food and clothing for his family?

The only change that has been noticed by the great majority of the people, who are the wage earners and producers, is that the opportunity for earning wages has been taken from them, that their pay has been cut down, or that they are earning no money at all. As the poorer classes have thus received little attention at the hands of the present Democratic administration, therefore let the income tax, by all means be imposed. It is not fair that the rich should not receive their share of administrative favors, or that they should not suffer some loss the same as the poor classes.

This opposition to the imposition of an income tax rests entirely and exclusively upon the Democratic party of the country, which represents the rich and plutocracy, and which is headed by James Gordon Benedett of the New York Herald, who makes his money in this country, but spends it in Europe, where he lives. Mr. Pulitzer of The World is of foreign birth and lively sympathies abroad. The proprietor of the New York Times will not even patronize American industries, but has his paper printed in printing presses in England. The Evening Post of New York, an ably English advocate, has been owned by a foreigner, who has just left the country, taking several millions of dollars of American money with him, after receiving the usual president and his friends at a $40 per plate dinner. These are the people who should pay an income tax, but these are the people who are vigorously opposing it.

IN FULL COMMITTEE.

THE TARIFF MEASURE FINALLY COMPLETED

As Far as the Subcommittee Is Concerned—Sugar, Coal and Iron Transferred to the Dutiable List—The Free List Not Much Changed—The Metal Schedule.

WASHINGTON, March 9.—The senate finance committee has submitted the tariff bill to the full committee.

The free list is not so much changed as had been supposed it would be, and the alterations from it are far more numerous than the additions. The date when the free list shall go into effect is changed from June 1, 1894, to June 30, 1894. Apples of all kinds are stricken from the free list and placed on the dutiable list, as are also beef, mutton and pork and bone char suitable for use in decolorizing sugar. Bituminous coal, shale, coal slack and coke are transferred to the dutiable list, leaving anthracite on the free list. Cocoa fibre is made dutiable. Diamonds and other precious stones rough or uncut are added to the free list. Flour matting is made dutiable. Dates, cocoanuts, Brazil nuts, peanuts and gambier are also taken from the free list. Cod oil is made free of duty. Salted guts disappear from the free list. Iron ore is taken from the free list and also olives and orchids. The tax on the more important items is as follows:

Sugar, not above 16 degrees polariscope test, 1 cent per pound; for every additional degree or fraction, not above 90 degrees, 1-100 cent additional; above 90 and not above 96, 2-100 cent per degree; above 96 degrees, a duty of 1 4-10 cents per pound.

Molasses testing not above 56 degrees by the polariscope, shall pay a duty of 2 cents per gallon; molasses testing above 56 degrees shall pay a duty of 4 cents per gallon.

Whisky at $1.10 per gallon and the bonded period extended from three to eight years.

Iron ore, 40 cents per ton.

Lead ore, 3-1 cents per pound, including lead mixed with silver ores.

Coal, bituminous and shale, 40 cents per ton.

Coal or slack or culi, 15 cents per ton.

Coke, 15 per cent ad valorem.

The Metal Schedule.

Metal schedule—Iron ore including manganiferous iron ore, also the dross or residuum from burnt pyrites, 40 cents per ton. Wilson bill free.

Iron in pigs, iron, Ferridge, Spiegeleisen, Ferrosilicon, 22 1-2 per cent ad valorem. Wilson bill, 20 per cent.

All iron in slabs, blooms, loops or other forms, more advanced than pig iron, and less finished than iron bars, 25 per cent ad valorem. Wilson bill, 22 1-2 per cent.

Bar iron, rolled or hammered, round iron, in coils or rods, and bars or shapes of rolled iron, 28 per cent ad valorem. Wilson bill, 25 per cent.

Jointed and all other shapes of iron or steel, whether plain or punched, or fitted for use, 35 per cent ad valorem. Wilson bill, 30 per cent.

Boiler or other plate or steel, except saw plates hereinafter provided for, not thinner than No. 10, wire gauge, sheared or unsheared, and skelp iron or steel, sheared or rolled, in grooves, 30 per cent ad valorem. Wilson bill, 20 per cent.

Forgings of iron or steel, or forged iron or steel combined, 30 per cent ad valorem. Wilson bill, 25 per cent.

Hoops, hand or scroll iron or steel, 30 per cent ad valorem. Wilson bill, 25 per cent.

Railway bars made of iron or steel, and railway bars made in part of steel, rails and punched iron or steel flat rails, 21-2 per cent ad valorem. Wilson bill, 20 per cent.

The woollen schedule shows few changes. These are about 5 per cent reduction.

No change in cotton schedule. Collars and cuffs increased from 33 to 45 per cent ad valorem.

There is no change in lumber.

A New Provision.

In internal revenue section is a new provision directing the president to immediately notify the Hawaiian government that the United States will terminate in 12 months the treaty with Hawaii made in 1875.

No change is made in the rates fixed by the Wilson bill on imported tobacco.

The internal revenue section of the bill covers the income tax, with many verbal but few essential changes. It makes a tax of 2 cents on every pack of playing cards, similar to the provisions in the Wilson bill; a tax on all tobacco, cigars and cigarettes, weighing over 3 pounds per 1,000 of $3 per 1,000; paper cigarettes, of weight less than 3 pounds per 1,000, pay $1 per 1,000, and those wrapped in tobacco, 50 cents per 1,000.

The date for going into effect of the bill is changed from June 1 to June 30, and a duty is levied on articles imported or withdrawn for consumption.

Shot His Stepdaughter.

PRAIRIE DU CHIEN, Wis., March 10.—An attempted murder at Lynxville, 18 miles north of this city, has created considerable excitement. Mathias Ladotschka laid in ambush and shot his stepdaughter. Dr. Cole, from this city, was called there, and up to this hour the woman is still alive. The would-be murderer fled to the woods and the sheriff is after him.

Senator White's Successor.

NEW ORLEANS, March 8.—Governor Foster has received the resignation of United States Senator E. D. White to take effect on Monday, March 12. The governor accepted the same and appointed Hon. Newton C. Blanchard as senator to succeed Judge White.

Employment for 2,000.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., March 14.—The Johnstown Steel works, which have been shut down since Jan. 1, for repairs, have resumed operations giving employment to 2,000.

BANG FOR HIS LIFE.

The Disagreeable Alternative Frederick Augustus Presented to Musician Abell.

John Abell, a celebrated singer and musician who lived in the reign of Charles II, had a very great notion of himself and could not perform unless he pleased. There is a funny story told of how he was once made to sing against his will.

While traveling abroad for pleasure he came into the town of Warsaw. News was brought to the palace of the famous English singer's arrival, and Frederick Augustus, the king of Poland, immediately sent word that he desired Abell to appear before him.

"Tell his majesty," replied John curtly, "that it suits me not."

Back went the court messenger with a very face. He knew his master's temper too well.

"Well Master Abel," thundered the king, "what I will have him come! And take you, boy, three stout fellows with you."

The messenger and the three stout fellows between them managed to carry out the royal wish and presently marched triumphantly up to the palace with their unwilling captive.

The king was awaiting them in the great hall, where he had seated himself in a balcony that ran all round the sides. Above him an impressive chair hung from the roof by a rope.

"Now, then, into the chair and up with him," cried Frederick Augustus, with a chuckle. "We'll soon see if our song bird won't sing in his cage. Up with him, my merry men all!"

And up in the air swung Abell, who did not intend to open his mouth. When he gave a glance downward, however, he changed his mind. Into the hall beneath him a number of wild beasts had been turned loose.

"Sing, sirrah!" the king shouted, "or down you go to play with my brown ladies."

One look at those "brown babies," growling and snarling below in a very unbabylike manner, was sufficient to convince the stubborn John. Sing he did, and he often used to declare in after days that he never sang so well in his life as when he was hanging there, a hundred feet high above the fierce beasts.—New York Journal.

Don't Try to Cheat a Lawyer.

A young lawyer, just starting in his profession, hung out his sign in a town where there was only one other lawyer, an aged judge.

Elated old fellow, thinking to get legal advice for nothing, called upon the young man and contrived in a sort of neighborly way to get some legal questions answered. Then, thanking the young man, he was about to leave, when the young man asked for a $5 fee. The old fellow went into a violent passion and swore he never would pay. The young lawyer told him he would sue him.

So the old fellow went down to see the judge and said:

"That young scamp that's just come into town! I dropped in to make a neighborly call on him, and he charges me $5 for my legal advice."

"Served you right," said the judge. "But have I got to pay it, judge?"

"Of course you have."

"Well, then," said the man, "I suppose I must," and he started off.

"Hold on," said the judge, "arn't you going to pay me?"

"Pay you! What for?"

"For legal advice."

"What do you charge?"

"Five dollars."

The result was that the old fellow had to pay $5 to the young lawyer and $10 to the old one.—Toronto Globe.

The Gallery Gods' Applause.

Lawrence Barrett once told me of a conversation he had with Edwin Booth. The latter had been congratulated upon an ovation given him by a crowded house on the opening night of an engagement. "The sweetest music to my ears," said the great tragedian, "is the shouting of the boys in the gallery. I know they are not applauding because I have a reputation or because they wish to make a display. They simply give vent to their natural enthusiasm. When they shout, I know that I am giving a good performance. As for the parquet, it may give the sounds out of politeness. A dramatic critic who had certain notions as to how a line should be read will applaud if I read it his way; otherwise he will remain quiet. I can never analyze the applause of the front rows, but the gallery is sincere in its likes or dislikes."—Chicago Record.

Disappointing.

She was a very cultured and fashionable young lady, albeit she was only seventeen, and she was a resident of New York. A gentleman calling on her parents had an opportunity to have a brief tete-a-tete with her.

"I presume," he said, "that when you grow up you will marry, as all little girls do?"

"No," she replied languidly. "No, I hardly think I shall."

"Indeed! That will be so disappointing."

"Possibly it may be to mamma and to the young gentleman, but not to me, I fancy," and she lolled back in her chair quite tired to death, don't you know.—Detroit Free Press.

Unappreciated.

A single word sometimes reveals a man's inmost thought.

"Who are those girls playing a duet on the piano?" asked one man of another at an evening party.

"One of them is the daughter of the hostess," was the answer.

"And who is her accomplice?"—London Tit-Bits.

Excusable.

Customer—Waiter, this bullock's heart is very badly cooked.

Waiter—Well, sir, the fact is, the cook's been crossed in love, and when ever he has anything to do with a 'art it so upsets him that he doesn't know what he's a-doin of.—London Million.

THE REINCARNATION THEORY.

A Beautiful Explanation That Was Painful in Its Final Application.

LondlordAller is always looking for a good thing and always recognizes it when he sees it. This he benefits by Washington paper, and the local application makes it the more interesting:

If there is a good story born in Washington, it is a two to one shot that its cradle will lie in the back parlor of John Chamberlin's. Dr. Edward Bellamy came over from Philadelphia one night and sat therein entertaining a choice group of friends with tales of the far east. In the edge of the group sat a man from Pennsylvania, who had come over from Potterville on some government contracting business. He was all ears and eagerness. His name was Strauss. Finally he certainly became too intense, and he broke loose.

"Doctor," said he, "what is dot new religious I heere off about China? My wife has got it ferry bad, and I don't understand it."

"Tell me the name," said Bellamy. "Is it Mohammedanism, Buddhism, Shintoism, Taoism, Confucianism or what?"

"Oh, it is no name, but der name is like a tramp's migrashun of der soul, an'd it?"

"Oh, you doubtless mean transmigration of the soul."

"Yah, dot's it. You dell me about dot."

"Certainly. Transmigration of the soul is a very pretty poetic doctrine of metempsychosis which our friends of the Theosophical society have borrowed from the far east."

"Here, here, doctor! Tell no vet dot means, so I can understand what you vas talking about."

"All right, I will tell you in plain language. Take yourself, for instance. You live to the ailleted age of threescore years and ten, and then you pass away. Your soul goes into the body of a bird—a canary, we'll say—and from your gilded cage you fill a very handsome with the melody, living a life of luxury and feel from the dainty fingers of beauty"——

"Oh, dot is peautiful, peautiful! I like dot!"

"And then you die again, and your soul goes into a lovely flower in a garden, and you fill all the air with fragrance and delight the eye with your exquisite color and delicacy of petals"——

"Ah, dot is fine! I like dot reticles."

"As I was saying when you interrupted me, you live the life of a flower, until one day a donkey gets into the garden, and attracted by your loveliness he eats you, and your soul passes into the donkey"——

"Yah, yah."

"When some former acquaintance comes along, strokes your long ears and says: 'Why, Strauss, is if you? How little you have changed!'"—Pottsville (Pa.) Republican.

Know When They Are Hungry.

Pigeons must have the credit of possessing some intelligence. A curious and very interesting sight may be seen each day, Sundays excepted, at one of the windows of the office of Henry W. Williams, in the Rialto building, opposite the postoffice. For the past few years some 20 or 40 pigeons have been there regularly fed at 11 o'clock. A basket of cracked grain is purchased as a time for the purpose. The birds gather on the west side of the postoffice and watch for the window to open. They know perfectly well when that hour arrives. If there should chance to be any delay in opening the window, they will often fly over to the other windows of the same office and tap at the glass to remind the clerks who may be sitting there that it is time for their breakfast. The minute the window opens they all swoop on and about the sill and push and crowd and stand on each other's backs and sometimes fight, so eager are they to pick up the grain which is spread all about the outside. They soon become quite tame and readily eat out of the hand.—Boston Transcript.

Pumice Stone.

Pumice stone is a porous feldspathic scoria from volcanoes. The pores are linear and so fine as often to be barely visible except by means of a magnifying glass. Its specific gravity is given as 2.4 —water being the unit—but by reason of its spongy texture pieces are often buoyant enough to float on water. It consists chiefly of silica, with sometimes 17 per cent of lumina, 6 per cent of soda and 4 per cent of potash. It is of grayish shades of color, passing into yellow and brown. The chief source from which it is obtained for commercial purpose is Campo Bianco, one of the Lipari islands, where it forms a hill nearly 1,000 feet high. In the arts pumice is largely employed, mostly in a pulverized state, as a polishing material for ivory, wood, glass and marble. It is also used in lamp for grinding and smoothing metallic surfaces, leather, etc., and in the preparation of parchments, etc. Quantities of the pulverized pumice are used in making fancy soaps.—Brooklyn Eagle.

West Virginia.

West Virginia, with less than 800,000 inhabitants, has but three cities and is essentially a rural and half settled region. In spite of her enormous wealth in timber and mines also, many of her counties number only a handful of people. No West Virginia county has 50,000 inhabitants, and only 10 have more than 30,000, while 12 have less than 10,000 and two less than 5,000. In many of the mountainous counties the conditions of life are simple to the last degree, and the people are far removed from the great currents of national life in spirit as well as in distance and time.—New York Sun.

VERDUROUS LAWNS AND FOLIAGE.

An Englishman Tells About the Careful Gardening in His Native Land.

Lewis Rose, a practical gardener, came to this country 10 years ago from England, where he was a farmer, and he trims and cuts according to English rules. Speaking of this country, he said:

"You Americans do not know what good lawns are. In England the houses of the gentry are surrounded by acres of green sward that looks just like velvet. They mow the grass with a machine every week, and after the mower comes a heavy stone roller that rolls it down as flat as a piece of paper. It is just as smooth as that table cover there stretched over the table. The roller is to press down and heal any little break or tear in the turf made by the machine. If you break the turf anywhere, it is just like breaking your skin. You must fix it directly, or there will be a sore place on the lawn. Even if it gets well there will always be a scar there unless you mend it carefully. You should see the English lawns after a shower! The green is beautiful, and every blade of grass stands up straight, but all the little blades are of exactly the same length, and they look soft and level. The perfume of the new grass is delightful. They have windows generally that come down to the floor, and on the walls outside the house are climbing rose bushes all in bloom. The combined odor of roses and new mown grass is very pleasant.

You have to go at a lawn as if it were a piece of embroidery you were at work on. First you must have a good rich, decaying mold for the grass to grow in. You cannot make grass grow in sand. Then as the grass comes up you must go over it step by step and dig out all the coarse grass and weeds and be sure to mend each place after digging up the roots. Then you will begin to find patches where no grass appears. You want to have grass seed handy and sow these places with dot. A water my lawn twice a day—In the morning before the sun gets fairly up and at night after it goes down. I mow the grass every week. After you have a good lawn you must watch every inch of it. You have no idea how easy it is to let a patch here and there get poisoned to death. When you find any foreign substance on a lawn that is likely to poison the grass, you want to dig it up, put fresh soil and fertilizer under it and fit a new sod neatly by it of turf in the hole you have made. Then keep an eye on it afterward and water it well. The rich, decomposed sweepings from the stable make the best fertilizer.

In pruning trees you want to cut off every long shoot and make your trees compact and bushy like a full-blown rose. Even weeds have a beauty and their trees get scrawny, and they don't always cut them enough to prevent decay in some of the branches. It is easy to trim trees if you understand this principle. And the only reason I have been successful with my lawns is that I have been willing to take pains with them and do a lot of hard work.—New York Sun.

A Workman's Time Checker.

An English time check has been designed for use in factories and workshops for keeping a register of the time of the workmen. Its inventor claims that it is the only apparatus of the kind actuated and controlled by electricity. It contains no special clockwork and no complicated parts and requires no fixing. As many clocks may be fitted to one clock as may be desired, and any ordinary clock can be adapted for, the purpose. Each man is provided with checks, one of which he drops into the slot of the apparatus on entering the workshop. The checks subsequently removed, and after their numbers have been registered placed on a board ready for the men to take when next leaving work. Any number of clocks can be provided, but as a rule two only, marked respectively "early" and "late," are required. When the time for beginning work has gone by, the "early" slot is closed by an electrical attachment, and the "late" slot is opened. Before the instant quit of work commences the "late" slot is closed, and the "early" slot is made ready to receive the checks of the workmen.—Exchange.

Very Ancient Jokes.

When Themistocles was trying to get money out of the Athenians for the Grecco defense fund and told them that the Athenians would succeed in the two great gods, persuasion and necessity, the Andrians replied that the Athenians were well off with two such powerful gods, but they had two gods who always dwelt in their country—poverty and impossibility.

Cyrus' bitter jest about the fishes to the wretched Ionians, who had declined his overtures, and then after the taking of Sardis wanted to come to terms, has not much cruelty to be found therein. "Say," said the insulting victor, "that a piper, seeing fishes in the sea, were to play to them, thinking they will come out to the land, and when he was disappointed of his hope took a net and inclosed a great multitude of the fishes and drew them to land, and seeing them flopping about said to the fishes, 'Cease dancing to me, since you would not come out and dance when I played.'"—Westminster Review.

HON. LORING FLETCHER is home from Washington for a brief business visit. "Your Uncle Loren" says at the rate the democrats are carrying sail there must be a corporal's guard left for '96, and he thinks the republicans will win hands down.

DAVE HILL thinks free trade democracy is all played out, and he proposes to organize the democracy on a protective basis and lead them in '96. Dave has been fooled more than once and if he imagines he can lead democracy (in any guise) to victory, that's where Dave is fooled again.

THE United States navy, though never considered (by Englishmen) to be in it beside the English navy, has always been able to give that navy pointers in the best way to conduct one and now is teaching Great Britian that small guns for the navy are the best—the most practical, and England will discard the great overgrown cannon on board her ships of war.

THE Duluth Evening Herald has a purported telegram from Minneapolis to the effect D. M. Sabin is a pronounced candidate for the United States senate. Well, that's all well enough, and reasonable enough, and all right enough, but the balance of it, that goes on to say that "Governor Nelson recognizes in Mr. Sabin a great power and will try to use him (Sabin) as a horse to ride into the U. S. senate himself as Davis' successor" is all bosh—the silliest twaddle. While it may all be true that Mr. Sabin is a great political power in the state it is not true that he is a greater political power than Governor Nelson, and it is not true that Gov. Nelson needs such a horse to ride into the Senate on. Gov. Nelson could ride over to the U. S. Senate at the time he left Congress had he chosen, and his course since then has not been such as to alienate his friends. If the governor wishes to go to the Senate he does not need a snake-shift, his merits alone will secure him all the help he requires.

THE government report of wheat still in the hands of the producers, shows 31,000,000 bushels less than in any year for the past eight years at this time of the year and yet, in the face of this fact never before, since this country raised any wheat of any importance has that commodity been as low as at present. It will be remembered that last fall the shrewdest wheat dealers in the country freely predicted that wheat would bring good prices as soon as the spring of '94, and this prediction was based upon the well-known shortage that existed over former crops. The question very naturally occurs—then why is the price so disproportionately low?" It strikes us, that in the light of the present low price of wheat, and the further fact of a greater shortage than ever before can easily be seen the effect of a good home market for our breadstuffs. It is a well-known fact that for a very long time nearly, if not quite all of our great manufactories have been practically idle—hardly a wheel turning and the thousands of operatives in them idle—almost entirely without the means of buying our breadstuffs. There can be no doubt whatever, that had the United States used as much wheat for food purposes during the past winter as usual the price of that cereal would be very much greater than it is today. Had the republican party continued in power the manufactories would have continued to run as usual, spending hundreds of thousands of dollars more for work than they have done which money would have found its way into the pockets of farmers eventually to pay for wheat. And the present state of things seem bound to continue just as long as the uncertainty in relation to the tariffs are as it does at this day. We may argue against this condition of things as much as we like but the facts remain the same and it is these same facts that operate against the welfare of the country, at present.

Ex-president Harrison in a speech from a railroad car platform voiced the sentiment of every true American citizen when he said: "Those who believe in a protective tariff have the opinion that the American interests ought to be protected by American legislation. (Cheers.) That is the theory upon which all congresses and parliaments legislate in the old country, and we think this is the American policy. Now, it is very noticeable that all through our great centers of population free traders and protectionists alike are all urging city councils and boards of county commissioners either to vote money to devote to the relief of the poor and unemployed or to secure them some kind of public work in order that men may earn their daily bread. (Cries of that is right.)

"Now, if that is right, it is also right for congress to so frame our tariff legislation as to bring the most work to this country that is possible. It is very clear that the blankets we need cannot be made here and in Europe both. They will all be made here or all be made there, or part here and part there, and the larger the number of blankets we have to make the larger the market we will have for wool, and the more work we will have for our American workmen."

THE Alexandria Post and News have consolidated and will appear in the future as the Post-News, published by S. C. Mitchell, of St. Cloud. But a new paper, called the Republican has just been started, so Alexandria will not suffer for lack of papers.

THE Biennial convention of the State League of Republican clubs will be held at Harmonia hall on March 28th. Each club is entitled to three delegates besides the president and secretary who are ex-officio delegates. The delegates to the convention will receive tickets to the Mc-Kinley speech in the evening. Clubs electing delegates should report their names as soon as possible to John Goodnow, Minneapolis, Minn.

ADDITIONAL LOCAL.

It is said that the Labor Party seriously contemplate putting a ticket in the field for the coming spring election. This would be an exceedingly wise movement.

The cure with which each party is watching each other in the matter of probable candidates shows a healthy state of things seldom manifested in city politics. It certainly augurs well for the best interest of the city, showing that the greatest care will be used in the selections for the various offices. One great trouble in the past has been the manner in which such important selections have been made.

Judge Spendley and Judge Gossman are rounding very high this spring. Their official seats will not be raffled for.

We are betting dollars to dough-nuts that the democrats will probably nominate Alex. McKinnon—or somebody, for may or. They see that they have just got to put their best foot forward in order to win—and all this time Pat Russell shut saying anything but just sawing wood.

Mrs. A. Bailey is so far recovered as to be able to be out this week.

Probably never in the history of this city has so much attention been paid to making up a good ticket as this spring.

Among the mayoralty possibilities on the democratic ticket are A. C. Wilkinson and S. W. Vance. Well, they might go a great deal farther and do worse—they in the price so dis-tressingly low?" It strikes us, that in the light of the present low price of wheat, and the further fact of a greater shortage than ever before can easily be seen the effect of a good home market for our breadstuffs. It is a well-known fact that for a very long time nearly, if not quite all of our great manufactories have been practically idle—hardly a wheel turning and the thousands of operatives in them idle—almost entirely without the means of buying our breadstuffs. There can be no doubt whatever, that had the United States used as much wheat for food purposes during the past winter as usual the price of that cereal would be very much greater than it is today. That Grading Matter.

Last September, suddenly and without warning to the parties directly interested, the council passed a resolution ordering a large amount of grading in Simpson's Woodland addition, and in due time the tax levy made, whereupon a taxpayer, in an article in public print asked Alderman J. E. Morrisey to explain why this levy was ordered that nobody asked for. Mr. Morrisey replied briefly that he never noticed an anonymous "attack" and said he would explain if the writer would ask it over his own signature. The writer promptly replied but Mr. Morrisey maintained a discreet silence for a long time, but later did make a reply through an obscure sheet that nobody took—then came a remonstrance, signed by everybody that was affected by the grading, was sent in to the councilmd that body appointed a committee consisting of Aldermen Morrisey and Norrie of the second ward to investigate and report. Before this was done Norrie was taken sick and resigned from the committee and Jennings in the 1st ward, Watts in the 3rd, were added. They investigated and found that almost everybody was opposed to having the work done. At the council meeting a large number from the addition appeared before the council to protest. The report of the committee concurred with the sentiment of the people and then, (for the first time) Alderman Morrisey discovered that the person why he insisted on taxing the addition so heavily was "because Cooke would not build a sidewalk 150 feet long." Mr. Morrisey presented a petition signed by four, two of whom had since signed the remonstrance to the work and one of the others would have no tax to pay for the work while the remaining one would have to pay about $3.50. Mr. Jo. still insisted that it ought to be done, but if the council would order Woodland avenue graded (so as to catch Cooke) he would be willing to sign the addition? Or is quite singular that nobody over there could see just how bad they do need that grading even though many of them would have to sacrifice all they have ever there to get it, but this only proves that the property owners are often ungrateful and don't know what they do want, for Morrisey of coursenought only the grasol—that's what he was in the council for. From the present outlook it is probable that Morrisey will never, in this world at least, receive proper recognition for his valuable services in behalf of the benighted inhabitants of the addition but he should be consoled with the idea that in the far distant future, some great historian, scanning the pages of history back to the year 1894 will see how live, shall find, high upon the scroll of fame emblazoned in letters of living light, the name of James E. Morrisey, and that his fame will go thundering down the ages—no Cooke's sidewalk to Saunderson's Woodland extension, then, and not till then can such distinguished services be adequately rewarded.

Prof. Gambell, Euclid's phrenologist delineated the character of our business and professional men to the great amusement of all present, and as this was entirely a gentlemen's affair as far as the entertainment was concerned, the ladies, bless them, did the gracious act and stepped in and footed all the bills, and did themselves proud by surprising the gentlemen by an original song of their own, which took the house by storm.

In true American spirit, in fact so well did they present the cause of Old England that they won one vote from the judges; (probably a lady who had a fellow-feeling akin to that which is always said to be had for the under dog in the fight.)* Almost every one present professed his remorse by swearing allegiance to his native country, and wished it distinctly understood that he was championing the cause of England merely as an advocate—and we must confess that they made out an extremely good case for their client—but the champions for the Yankee nation were too much for them and won with hands down. The leader for the negative made a good hit when he asserted that "America had whipped Great Britian three times (the only one, (the revolutionary war) it took seven years to do it, the second, (the war of 1812) it took two years, and third, (in the Corbet and Mitchel fight) it only took nine minutes to dress the old lady out in proper shape." These exercises are of great benefit to the young, in fitting them for public speaking and the avidity with which each responded to his or her name when called upon shows that the interest taken in them is very great. We do not propose to play the part of a critic upon an entertainment that furnished as so much pleasure and will say that the little folks are doing nicely. One lad possesses a voice and a manner, that, with proper culture and due gravity, would make him a star rival to Bill Nye and other humorists—even now you could catch glimpses of the great humorist in selection and voice. Something of the extent of our city school system begins to dawn upon one as we listen to those exercises—participated in by so many young people, and reflect that this is one of the two overflow schools of the city, while the regular city schools are six or eight in number—and every building crowded to its utmost capacity. No city of its size in the Northwest can excel Crookston in its school facilities and very few if any equal it.

Euclid Items.

EUCLID, March 13th, 1894.

Fred Davis visited the county seat this week.

C. C. Murney and George Nelson went to Crookston Wednesday to celebrate their victory at the polls.

Miss Amelia Biever, of Grand Forks, is visiting her parents and friends.

Miss Rose Kennedy, of Crookston, is kept busy dressmaking for the Euclid ladies.

Miss Hattie Davidson came up last week to see Patterson and Mother Davidson, and returned to her studies Monday evening.

Our old timecitizen, Chas. Teal, Jr., is talking of locating at Argyle in the veterinary surgeon business. We will be sorry to lose Charlie.

H. C. Misner and sister and A. H. Pitkin took in Crookston and the show-storm on Monday last.

Mrs. C. E. Misner and daughter, Pearl, are up visiting friends and taking in the "Hard Time Social."

A. H. Pitkin, a former merchant of Crookston, loves, has taken charge of the Misner store, and expects to move his family here about the 1st of July. We welcome Mr. Pitkin.

Our minerals are talking of raising a purse for Locke, broke of the paper reporting the dog item from here last week, as they feel very grateful that no names were given of the murderer.

Hugh Douglas intends to run a herd in the northwestern part of Parnell township this season. He has the use of Mr. D. Stevens' well.

Mr. C. E. Harrington represented a hard times to perfection at the social Wednesday evening.

Dr. Chapin and Prof. Grimbels won much applause by their remarkable hits in singing original songs at the social. The ladies could not resist such pleadings and filled them up on sour bread and biscuits.

Mr. H. C. Misner, as toast master, called on the following gentlemen to respond to various toasts, which was done in due and ancient form: Capt. Hancock, S. Currie, M. P. Lessey, E. E. Harrington, Robert Causley, Dr. Chapin, H. C. Stubr, T. E. Biever, G. W. Wood, Fred Gambell, Peter Stubr, E. C. Murrey and Theo. THE FARMER'S EGGS.

HOW THE McKINLEY TARIFF HAS ENRICHED HIS BASKET.

Large Importations of Foreign Eggs Were Checked — Over $2,000,000 Saved to American Producers Yearly—Eggs From All Parts of the World.

Produce from foreign farms is to be admitted free of duty into the United States, causing greater competition, more stuff in the markets and consequently lower prices. Manufactured goods from foreign countries are to come in greater quantities, and many of our mills must be closed or run on part time. This will lessen the demand for farm produce. The people who have been working in the mills will have less money to spend, and with the markets glutted with foreign farm stuffs prices will be very low. The American farmer must be prepared.

Let us first take a look into his eggs basket. Good eggs, fresh from the farm, have been selling during the last three or four years, until the fear of free trade recently settled upon the country, for much more money than they brought five and ten years ago There was a reason for this, and farmers should ponder over the reason. The free trade people say that farmers have not received any protection from the McKinley tariff. We say they have, and we are going to show the farmers how they were protected, why there was a better demand for their eggs and why they were sold for higher prices.

Let us look back for a period of 10 years—from 1883 to 1893. Between 1883 and 1890 there was no tariff upon eggs. The hen product of the American farmer, raised by the American farmer's wife, was sold in the American markets in open competition with the eggs laid by hens in Canada, in Austria, Belgium, China, Denmark, France, Germany, England, Scotland, Ireland, Mexico, the Netherlands and China. This will be a surprise to many farmers, but it is a fact nevertheless.

In case there should be any doubt about the matter we give for a year before the McKinley tariff put any duty upon eggs to protect the American farmer the imports of eggs by countries during the year ending June 20, 1889:

	Dozens. In Duty.
Austro-Hungary	1,000,000
Belgium	29,333	$7,333
China	170,000	8,425
Denmark	74,000	18,500
France	16	04
Germany	75,000	14,119
England	4,994	831
Scotland	1,000	167
Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island	3,657,222	891,491
Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and the Northwest Territories	11,731,444	1,804,023
British Columbia	675	90
Hong-Kong	12,219	181
Italy	25,000	3,762
France	16	02
Netherlands	18,667	2,800
Russia	500	70
Cuba	1,503	164
Turkey in Africa		8
Total	16,010,600	$2,419,976

This was the result of free trade in eggs. It was quite important. In that year 16,000,000 dozen were bought from foreign countries almost 10,000,000 dozen eggs and paid to foreign farmers almost $2,420,000. This represented over 15 cents for each dozen of the foreign eggs. This money might much better have been paid to American farmers and given to their wives and daughters, who take care of the poultry, instead of sending it to Europe, to Canada, to Mexico or to China. Such a large quantity, nearly 16,000,000 dozen of eggs in a year, over 1,333,000 dozen a month, over 300,000 dozen a week, nearly 60,000 dozen of foreign eggs a day in our country, had a visible effect upon our supply. It glutted our markets and cheapened the price for American eggs.

But it is not only the farmers who are the losers. They must remember that, too, because it is important. Where most of the foreign eggs are received and sold there must be less demand for American eggs, and farmers living near those markets must sell their eggs elsewhere. The forces are always supplied by other towns. With a large lot of foreign eggs in the markets of New York and Boston, the farmers of New York state and of Massachusetts must sell in some other state farther west or south—into Pennsylvania, for instance. Then the Pennsylvania farmer is forced to sell some of his eggs in Ohio, and the Ohio man has to go to Chicago or the Illinois farmer gets into the market of the Nebraskan man.

This is how free trade in eggs works. It creates too large a supply in some markets, and our farmers have to find other markets where there are no foreign eggs, and thus compete with one another.

Let us now see to what extent the McKinley tariff, by putting a duty on eggs, has protected the American farmer's egg basket, whether or not it checked the importation of foreign eggs. Here are the figures for 11 months:

IMPORTS OF EGGS, YEAR ENDING JUNE 30.

	Dozens.	Dollars.
1883 under free trade	19,799,705	$2,867,604
1884 under free trade	15,677,260	2,077,093
1885 under free trade	16,093,450	2,470,473
1886 under free trade	15,997,088	2,173,454
1887 under free trade	13,930,054	1,960,080
1888 under free trade	13,045,961	2,010,666
1889 under free trade	15,916,980	2,413,976
1890 under McKinley tariff	11,241,240	1,704,188
1891 protected	7,988,160	1,226,592
1892 protected	4,188,462	552,949
1893 protected	3,295,842	362,537

*Protected Oct. 6, 1890, at 5 cents per dozen.

This is a remarkable exhibit. We find during the eight years, from 1883 to 1890, when we had free trade in eggs, that we imported on an average more than 15,000,000 dozen eggs every year, valued at $15,000 dozen of foreign eggs sold in this country in eight years. What an enormous quantity! What did they cost? During the eight years we paid away to foreign farmers more than $18,770,000 for eggs alone in good American money. We paid away over $2,596,000 every year for foreign eggs; almost $50,000 every week of the eight years sent abroad to foreign farmers! This was what free trade did.

Now let us see what protection did. The McKinley tariff put a duty of 5 cents per dozen on foreign eggs so as to protect the farmer's egg basket, and this protection began on Oct. 6, 1890. It made a difference at once, because we find that we imported nearly 900,000 dozen foreign eggs less that year than in 1889, when there was no protection. But look back at the figures for the next three years—for 1891, 1892 and 1893. In 1891 we bought nearly 7,000,000 dozen foreign eggs less than in 1890 even, nearly 11,000,000 dozen less in 1892, and nearly 12,000,000 dozen less in 1893.

It is thus clear that the longer we had protection, the better it was for the American farmers' eggs basket. Each succeeding year we bought fewer foreign eggs. In 1893 we paid to foreigners much less than $400,000, and we used to pay over $2,500,000 every year for foreign eggs when there was no protection. The result was that we only bought eggs, and not nearly so many of them, from Canada, and from China for the chinese in California. But we bought none from Austria or Belgium, France, Germany, England, Scotland, Italy or the Netherlands. Protection kept the European eggs exclusively out of the country, and protection gave the American farmer's market to American farmers.

Most of the foreign eggs that we have imported came from Canada, and now that there is to be no more protection the Canadian eggs will have to pay duty to pay out millions of dollars every year for foreign eggs. It may be asked why the American farmers cannot sell their eggs in Canada. There are two reasons why they cannot. There are but half a dozen small markets in that country, with a total population only one-fourths as large as New York city. This is one reason.

The other reason is that they cannot protect her farmers by a tax of 5 cents per dozen upon eggs, so as to protect American farmers from selling there. The McKinley tariff protected our farmers, but the free trade Wilson tariff does not. The free trade tariff throws the American markets open free to the Canadian farmer, while the Canadians tax the American farmers. The Canadians protect themselves, but the Wilson bill of the Democratic party will not protect the American farmer's egg basket.

CHARLES E. BUCKLAND.

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN EXPORTS.

Protection Increases Foreign Trade, but Free Trade Does Not.

One of the greatest and most hackneyed arguments of the free trader is that the American system of protection prohibits the export of American made goods, the higher wages paid here in this country preventing us from competing with foreign countries for the trade in the markets of the world; hence it is the disposition of the free traders to take our home market from us, which is the best in the world, for the sake of inducing the wages of American labor to the foreign level to enable us to compete with foreign countries in foreign markets.

This is a glib and smooth sounding species of argument that has unfortunately deceived too many of our people in the past. Before the great agitation to American labor and industries has been finally completed by the free trade conspiracy it is well to expose the complete and utter fallacy and falsity of this free trade exploitation. It is not a fact that protection prohibits the export of American manufactured goods into foreign markets. It is not a fact that free trade can export to the markets under protection. It is not a fact that free trade is essential to the acquisition of foreign trade. It is not a fact that free trade promotes and extends an export commerce with foreign countries.

These plain and decided statements of The American Economist can be very easily substantiated. Let us compare the export trade of manufactured goods from the United States and from the United Kingdom, taking the latest possible period for which the official statistics of both countries are available, as follows:

EXPORTS OF MANUFACTURED GOODS.

United Kingdom	$940,200,856	$976,038,110
United States	185,807,282	182,667,257

These official figures of the London board of trade and of the bureau of statistics of the United States treasury department show that the export trade in manufactured goods from free trade England was $38,837,175 less in 1892 than in 1892. On the other hand, we see that the exports of manufactured goods from the protective country of the United States was $635,000,000 larger during 1893 than in 1892.

Comment is unnecessary. We await an explanation from the free traders of the reason why free trade diminished the English export trade last year by nearly $38,000,000, while protection increased the export trade of the United States by $35,000,000.

Sound Doctrine.

Foreign trade considered as a market to be supplied and to be made an object of protection and encouragement amounts to little, but foreign trade when including importations is of immense importance as a possible disturber of our national economic condition. Exportation and importation must always be equal. If there is a difference between the exported and imported products of agriculture and manufacturing the difference once must be made up by importing or exporting gold.—Flavius J. Van Vorhis.

The Free Trade Fiends.

When peace and plenty blessed the land
And workmen's wages their command,
Who brought the news from quarters strange,
That labor then had sought a change?
The free trade fiends.

When factory doors were open wide
And happy workmen were employed,
Who feared their trades with lines of age,
Who want, and more on some message?
The free trade fiends.

When labor's home was love's retreat,
With peace and comfort there to meet,
Who were the tempters came to lead
The people to the mourner's trade?
The free trade fiends.

When children were the smiles of youth,
That rivaled even baby Ruth,
Who seared their cheeks with lines of age,
With want, and more on some message?
The free trade fiends.

One once proud workingmen could buy
The best the market could supply,
Who brought them down to blasted hope,
The people's foe, the can of soup?
The free trade fiends.

DA GAMA GIVES UP.

The Brazilian Rebel Admiral Offers to Surrender.

WASHINGTON, March 14.—Advices received at the state department from Minister Thompson at Rio Janeiro indicate that the Brazilian rebellion is about ended. The dispatches from Minister Thompson contain the information that Admiral Da Gama has gone aboard the Portuguese warship Mindello, and has sent to President Peixoto by the Portuguese officer an offer to surrender on condition of full protection for himself and his followers. Secretary Gresham believes this marks the end of the Brazilian war.

Peixoto Will Accept.

WASHINGTON, March 14. — Another dispatch was received at a late hour by Secretary Gresham from Minister Thompson containing the additional information that Da Gama asks only that he and his officers be allowed to leave the country and the lives of his private soldiers and sailors be spared. It is regarded by persons and officials without question that the Brazilian government will accept the surrender with the terms asked for by Da Gama.

SCORED THE LORDS.

Earl Rosebery's Speech at the Opening of Parliament.

LONDON, March 14.—The feature of the opening session of parliament was the speech of Earl Roseberry, the new premier. In opening his address he feelingly alluded to the retirement of Mr. Gladstone, but declared that while leaders had changed there would be no change of party policy. The Welch church question would be pressed to a successful conclusion, and the policy of home rule would be definitely pursued. He concluded by saying the house of lords, as at present constituted, is an anamoly, and that the declarations regarding that body contained in Mr. Gladstone's last speech in the house of commons would be the policy of the Liberal party. Lord Roseberry was loudly cheered during the delivery of his speech.

FEAR A ROYALIST UPRISING.

The Story of the Enlistment of Canadian Volunteers Now Contradicted.

VICTORIA, B. C., March 14.—The Hawaiian steamer Warrimoo just arrived, bringing confirmation of the enlistment of Canadian volunteers for the service of Queen Lilliokalani. The plan was fully described in dispatches sent from here early in January, which at the time were discredited as false. It now appears that their authors were in full possession of inside information on the subject.

PENSIONS RESTORED.

Commissioner Lochren Signs an Order Affecting Several Thousand Cases.

WASHINGTON, March 14.—All suspensions of pensions in cases where payment has not been already resumed or where the pensioner's name has not been restored to the rolls will be removed by an order signed during the afternoon by Commissioner Lochren. The order, which was sent to the chief of the finance division, is as follows:

"In accordance with the provisions of the act of congress approved March 3, 1893, you are hereby instructed to at once take such steps as may be necessary to remove suspensions of pensions in all cases in which action of resumption of payment or dropping from the rolls has not been taken."

This action affects the cases of between 5,000 and 4,000 pensioners. The pension agents will be instructed to pay these pensioners their former rates until otherwise ordered by the bureau.

Decrease In Pension Applications.

WASHINGTON, March 10.—The decrease in the number of claims received daily at the pension bureau is shown in a statement prepared at the department. The number of pensioners on the rolls is now approximately 965,000, against 952,000 for the corresponding week of last year. The number has, however, steadily diminished since Sept. 1.

Columbian Cards On.

CHICAGO, March 10.—The world's fair grounds are guarded by bat eight men, as the result of a strike of the employes of the Columbian guard. Seventy-two guards have thrown down their swords because of the reducing of the force from a popular sergeant, while an unpopular officer was continued in the service.

The Roster Case Begun.

MADISON, Wis., March 8.—This entire morning in the roster trial was taken up by Mr. Olin, attorney for the plaintiff, in opening the case to the jury. The court restricted the limits of his address to the presentation of evidences intended to be introduced and the theory of the plaintiff's case.

Director Agree to Pay.

NEW YORK, March 10.—The directors of the Jefferson Commercial bank of Brooklyn, some of whom are under indictment, may not be prosecuted, owing to the fact that they have agreed to pay the worthless mortgages held by the institution and to pay the depositors every dollar due them.

Ho Shot Collegbau.

GIRLS WHO FENCE.

A Popular Fad In the Exclusive Circles of Society.

If the fencing fad continues to spread among the society women of New York with the same rapidity it has attained within the past year or two, there will soon be a dearth of foreign teachers to instruct the fair devotees, and they will have perforce to put up with a native American talent. Indeed it is no secret that several Americans have already taken to the foils in a professional way.

Fencing is a delightful and healthful exercise, and the number of sedy foreigners who have found the art of the fencing master an easy method of earning a few dollars is surprisingly prodigious.

And why not? The American woman has discovered that exercise with the foils will promote gracefulness, supple muscular vigor, and those robust health charms in the New York girl make a good figure in fencing with her acoustomed dash and energy. Masks, foils and a fetching fencing costume are consequently commented among the almost indispensable articles of a young lady's outfit; and if, possessing these, she can get her name inscribed upon the rolls of one of the swell fencing clubs her success in life may be considered assured.

The most exclusive of all these clubs is probably the Berkeley, whose membership comprises some of the younger set of the very smallest social circles in the metropolis. Miss Pauline Whitney, the charming daughter of ex-Secretary William C. Whitney, is among the members of the club who are most regular in attendance, and is the opinion of M. Capdevila she is one of the most promising pupils, though as yet hit a beginner.

The members of most of the fencing clubs are governed in the matter of costume solely by their individual tastes and fancies. Some have adopted a uniform dress that is simply stunning. The skirt reaches a little below the knee, and the blouse is loose, with turnover collar and cuffs. The material is silk poogee, and the deep hem of the skirt and the edge of the cuffs and collar have a feather stitching of scarlet silk. About the waist is worn a belt of red canvas, with leather straps and buckle, and the hands are covered with jaunty gauntlets of buff doeskin. Black silk stockings and tennis shoes of black suede, with scarlet uppers, complete a costume which would make even a plain girl attractive, and which adds a dainty charm to the loveliness of many of New York's most beautiful daughters.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO ITALY.

Victoria Will Sojourn at the Villa Fabbricotti, in Florence, This Year.

Queen Victoria will soon make her annual pilgrimage to Italy. Whither her visits seem to have become as regular as those of the swallows and the lake of Florence, the City of Flowers, has retained its claims on her majesty's regard, and she will sojourn there again this year, though not in the grand old Villa Palmieri, where she spent the spring of 1888, but in the Villa Fabbricotti, at Montughi, one of the nearest hilly suburbs of Florence, has been taken for her majesty's use, and the villa's most recent villas have been engaged for her rather numerous suite. The queen herself selected the locality of her new domicile on her last visit because of its peculiar beauty and pointed out the villa which she finally would inhabit her requirements.

Villa Fabbricotti is nearer to Florence than Villa Palmieri. It is on the same side of the Arno, but is approached by a different gate, the Ponte Rosso. It dates from the fourteenth century, when it was owned by the old Florentine family of the Buonincgni and was called the Villa Ambrogiana from the beautiful forest of cypress trees which surrounds it. Its present owner, Count Fabricotti, has restored, enlarged, redecorated and refurnished it, so that it is quite up to date in the matter of comfort, while possessing all the charm of picturesque associations.

The villa is built of white stone, outlined with darker color, and has a pretty tower. It faces south, and standing on the middle of the terrace commands an extensive and beautiful view, being itself a conspicuous object against a background of evergreen hills and cypresses. The grounds below the villa are laid out in a series of beautiful terraced gardens, through which pedestrians may approach the house, and there is a driveway winding round by an easy incline, shaded by beautiful trees and brilliant with gay flowers. The domain is not as extensive as that at Palmieri, but the grounds of several of the neighboring villas have been placed at her majesty's disposal, so that she may extend her drives without coming out upon the public highway.

MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of three hundred and seventy-five dollars, which is claimed to be due and before at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Henry Steege (unmarried), mortgagor to the Minnesota Loan and Trust Company, a corporation created under the laws of the state of Minnesota, mortgagee, dated on the 20th day of October, A. D. 1888, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the 31st day of October, A. D., 1888, at 1:30 o'clock p. m., in Book 34, of mortgages pages 83 to 85.

Which said mortgage together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said mortgagee to Clara A. Reynolds, mortgagee herein, on December first of the year last mentioned, dated the Third day of January, A. D. 1894, and recorded in the office of said register of deeds of Polk County Minnesota, on the fifth day of January A. D., 1894 at 11 o'clock a. m., in Book 34, of mortgages, on pages 483 and 484 and thereafter the said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said mortgagee to Clara A. Reynolds, mortgagee herein, which said assignment dated the 6th day of January, A. D., 1894, and recorded in the office of said register of deeds in and for Polk County Minnesota on the 22nd day of January 1894, at 11:30 o'clock a. m., in Book 61 on page 380 and Whereas by the terms of said mortgage it is provided that in case of default in the payment of any installment of principal or interest, as therein mentioned in said mortgage, and said default should continue for ten days, said principal shall become due and payable, and said mortgage also contains a provision to pay and discharge all taxes levied upon said mortgaged premises when they become due and payable, and also contains a covenant for the insurance of the buildings on said premises, and that the moneys received for the benefit of the mortgagee, under the insurance which may be effected, may be applied by the mortgagee at its option upon the unpaid debt or any part thereof, whether due or not, or may be used in whole or in part to pay for the repair or rebuilding of the buildings destroyed or damaged by fire, and in case of default in the conditions thereof, also an agreement to pay to the said mortgagee its successors and assigns, in case of a foreclosure of said mortgage, the sum of Seventy five dollars as attorney's fee, and whereas, default has been made in the payment of the sum of three hundred and seventy five dollars, which is claimed to be due and before at the date of this notice upon the said mortgage and to the statute in such case made and provided, as the first day of January, A. D., 1894, duly paid and discharged the same amounting in the sum of Thirty eight and 31-100 dollars.

And whereas, the mortgagor failed to keep said mortgaged premises insured as covenanted in said mortgage, and whereas, the mortgagee is entitled to the sum of Seventy five dollars for taxes and insurance with interest from the 26th day of July 1893.

And whereas, there is now due and payable upon said mortgage at the date of this notice, exclusive of cost of sale, attorney fees, to be paid on account of taxes and insurance, and the said sum of Seventy five attorney fees, to be paid on account of taxes and insurance, and the said sum of Seventy five dollars attorney fees, the sum of Seventy one hundred and forty-nine (149). North or south, in Polk county and state of Minnesota, and described as follows, to wit: The Northeast quarter (N. E. ¼), of section thirty-three (33), in township one hundred and forty-nine (149), north of range forty-six (46), west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and seventy-nine and 72-100 acres according to the United States Government survey, and whereas, no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt remaining secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the said power of sale and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in said mortgage, and hereinabove described, at the front door of the court house, in the city of Crookston, in said county and state, on the 23rd day of March, A. D. 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest and the taxes, if any, on said premises and fifty dollars, attorney's fee as provided for in said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of three hundred and seventy-five dollars, which is claimed to be due and before at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Henry Steege (unmarried), mortgagor to the Minnesota Loan and Trust Company, a corporation created under the laws of the state of Minnesota, mortgagee, dated on the 20th day of October, A. D. 1888, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the 31st day of October, A. D., 1888, at 1:30 o'clock p. m., in Book 34, of mortgages, on pages 83 to 85.

Which said mortgage together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said mortgagee to Clara A. Reynolds, mortgagee herein, on December first of the year last mentioned, dated the Third day of January, A. D. 1894, and recorded in the office of said register of deeds of Polk County Minnesota, on the fifth day of January A. D., 1894 at 11 o'clock a. m., in Book 34, of mortgages, on pages 483 and 484 and thereafter the said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said mortgagee to Clara A. Reynolds, mortgagee herein, which said assignment dated the 6th day of January, A. D., 1894, and recorded in the office of said register of deeds in and for Polk County Minnesota on the 22nd day of January 1894, at 11:30 o'clock a. m., in Book 61 on page 380 and Whereas by the terms of said mortgage it is provided that in case of default in the payment of any installment of principal or interest, as therein mentioned in said mortgage, and said default should continue for ten days, said principal shall become due and payable, and said mortgage also contains a provision to pay and discharge all taxes levied upon said mortgaged premises when they become due and payable, and also contains a covenant for the insurance of the buildings on said premises, and that the moneys received for the benefit of the mortgagee, under the insurance which may be effected, may be applied by the mortgagee at its option upon the unpaid debt or any part thereof, whether due or not, or may be used in whole or in part to pay for the repair or rebuilding of the buildings destroyed or damaged by fire, and in case of default in the conditions thereof, also an agreement to pay to the said mortgagee its successors and assigns, in case of a foreclosure of said mortgage, the sum of Seventy five dollars as attorney's fee, and whereas, default has been made in the payment of the sum of three hundred and seventy five dollars, which is claimed to be due and before at the date of this notice upon the said mortgage and to the statute in such case made and provided, as the first day of January, A. D., 1894, duly paid and discharged the same amounting in the sum of Thirty eight and 31-100 dollars.

And whereas, the mortgagor failed to keep said mortgaged premises insured as covenanted in said mortgage, and whereas, the mortgagee is entitled to the sum of Seventy five dollars for taxes and insurance with interest from the 26th day of July 1893.

And whereas, there is now due and payable upon said mortgage at the date of this notice, exclusive of cost of sale, attorney fees, to be paid on account of taxes and insurance, and the said sum of Seventy five attorney fees, to be paid on account of taxes and insurance, the sum of Seventy one hundred and forty-nine (149). North or south, in Polk county and state of Minnesota, and described as follows, to wit: The Northeast quarter (N. E. ¼), of section thirty-three (33), in township one hundred and forty-nine (149), north of range forty-six (46), west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and seventy-nine and 72-100 acres according to the United States Government survey, and whereas, no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt remaining secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the said power of sale and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in said mortgage, and hereinabove described, at the front door of the court house, in the city of Crookston, in said county and state, on the 23rd day of March, A. D. 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest and the taxes, if any, on said premises and fifty dollars, attorney's fee as provided for in said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

PROBATE NOTICE.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court, Special Term, Polk County.

In the matter of the estate of Betsey O. Syverson, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Jens Syverson, praying for the payment out of personal estate that has come into his hands the disposition thereof, and for the sale of certain real estate for payment of the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased, and for the allowance of his account as administrator, and for the assignment of the residue of said estate to the persons entitled thereto.

Monday, the 26th day of March next, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the probate office in the city of Crookston, in said county, then and there to show cause if any why said petition should not be granted to said Jens Syverson as mentioned in said petition and praying that license be to him granted to mortgage the tracts of land described in said petition.

And it is ordered by said court that the personal estate of said Betsey O. Syverson, deceased, be assigned and distributed to and with the charges of administration, and to pay any taxes, assessments, or other charges that are a lien or belong then upon her estate, or to pay for any improvements made or labor bestowed on the said premises of her real estate, or any part thereof.

And it is further ordered, that the said petition be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, Minnesota, said county.

Dated at Crookston, the 23d day of February, A. D. 1894.

The water question that is so important to some cities of the Northwest is solved for Crookston in the fact that pure cold water can be so easily obtained in artesian wells.

E. C. Davis says if you want to know something about hard times take a trip east and you will find something out. No better times expected until the factories start up again.

The mandamus case brought against Auditor Webster in the Lowell ditch case was decided in favor of the auditor, on the ground that complainant had no right to make the writ perpetual.

Don't forget the poverty party at G. A. R. hall this evening. The ladies of the Relief corps have spared no pains to provide ample entertainment for all and a good time is assured. Everybody invited.

H. C. Misner drove down from Euclid on Monday with Mrs. I. W. C. Misner and Mr. A. Pitkin, of Sabula, Iowa, who is looking the country over with a view to locating. He may decide to locate at Euclid.

Alvah Newland, convalescent from typhoid fever, has developed a fine large abscess on his ankle and is again laid up for a time. The little chap proves to be quite a paleful affair, but it is hoped no serious results will follow.

Almost every farmer with whom we have talked during the past winter has declared his intention to sow not over half his usual area of wheat. Some will sow more than a good bit and others will try 50 or 100 acres of flax.

The only thing about the social to-night that will not be poverty stricken will be the supper—which will be the finest in the land for only 25 cents, or two shillin's. The funniest rigs you ever did see will be on exhibition.

If you see any funny parbs on the street this afternoon don't get frightened—it is likely to be only some one going to the poverty social at the G. A. R. hall. By the way you can all get supper there from 5:30 till 9 o'clock. Go and see the fun.

"March to search" is the old adage. It searches out any weakness of the system, resulting from impure blood. Those who use Ayer's Sarsaparilla find March no more searching or even disagreeable than any other month. This medicine is a wonderful invigorator.

Horses seem to be extremely cheap in the city this spring and not a very big demand for them. We have heard of one lot of ten or a dozen that a purchaser can take his choice from the lot for $90. Some of the big farmers are offering to sell off their surplus, intending to reduce their wheat acreage.

E. C. Davis says the poor in eastern cities are buying provisions in extremely limited quantities. As for instance, five cents' worth of flour, three cents' worth of sugar; one cents worth of tea; one cents' worth of kerosene and so on, yet some people wonder why wheat don't bring a higher price!

From the number of inquires we have had in relation to the subject it would seem that the demand for flax for seed would exceed the supply—in fact we know of but few who have any for sale. If any JOURNAL reader has any for sale an ad in the JOURNAL would no doubt bring plenty of customers.

Engineer Tom Hunt, who has been on the dry docks for repairs for a week or ten days is building about again. While engaged in his duties about the yard, near the coal-shed he stepped on a chunk of coal and turned his foot wrong side out sprahing it so severely as to lay him up awhile. He is all right again.

Amost the questions as to whether the city ought to buy and operate the water-works, W. J. Murphy—manager of Crookston Water Power & Light Co., says their plant is for sale to anybody who can put up the cash. Taking his stand-point as a criterion to judge by there would seem to be no advantage to the city in owning the plant.

C. P. Cahoon met our reporter on Friday morning with a smile something less than a mile long—and an open cigar box, containing a goodly number of Brown's selects, and asked us to select one in honor of Cahoon's select that had arrived the night before. He was too elated to say more, but we learn that it is a big bouncing boy—regulation weight. C. P. says he can't realize that these are hard times!

Mrs. Thos. R. Johnstone is recovering from an attack of fever.

H. P. Brown was over to Fisher Wednesday on one of his missionary trips.

Jack McPhee went up to Argyle this week, to purchase a thoroughbred hunting dog.

W. E. Kelsey, Tom Creighton and Jim Kelly went out to Wylie yesterday on a collecting expedition.

Use Valley Roller mills best patent flour, $1.00 per 100 pounds. Every sack guaranteed to be up to the highest standard.

Fred Davis was down from Euclid this week trying to hire a man on the farm for the season. Says his father has been on the sick list of late, but is doing nicely.

A. E. Koeppe sold his house to a Mr. Pfaaf last week. Who says times are dull with no sale for property? Mr. K. expects to get away some day this week.

Wm. Fleming was over from Mallory Wednesday, on business. Mr. Fleming feels keenly the loss of his two sons, who died this winter of typhoid fever, and his face shows the suffering he has undergone.

Thomas Wallace, out in Fairfax, rejoices in the arrival of a young populist. The little chap arrived last Thursday—as fine a boy—Tom says, as ever came to Polk county to grow up with the country.

Engineer Fred Alby came over from Minot on Monday evening, to transact some business and chat with the boys. Fred says Crookston holds her own with other cities of the Northwest in great shape and has made marked improvements since he was here last, some two years ago.

William Cameron has rented his farm near Fisher to Mr. Dickson, and intends to locate at Fosston and will engage in the livery business there. Mr. Cameron has been a very successful farmer and will undoubtedly be successful in the livery business, and will be a valuable addition to Fosston.

The coming city election promises to be the most lively one for several years notwithstanding that few time it looked as though it would be very dull and tame. Making the fight on party lines seems to have deepened the interest and whatever tickets are placed in the field will be selected with the utmost care without doubt.

Rev. Lee W. Squier and Mr. Olde returned from Warren on Thursday evening where they went to give a part of the lecture course. Mr. S. says they were right royally entertained by the good people of Warren, who hoist upon the balance of the course at an early date. The trip was a financial success as well as being an extremely pleasant one.

S. E. Chaplo came down from Argyle on Thursday of last week to transact some business and chat with his old friends. If S. E. continues to live 15 to 20 minutes longer without meeting his fate he will be a good deal of a banker. We learn that one thing he came down for was to have an earnest consultation with Sam Wallace on the subject.

Thos. R. Johnstone, the well-known horse man, has accepted a position with Hugh Thompson and will have charge of his two horses, Maleon and Keota Garfield. During the season he will make regular trips to Fisher every week. Mr. Johnstone is one of the best men in the country to handle horses, and Mr. Thopson is fortunate in securing him.

On Saturday last our streets presented a very business-like appearance notwithstanding; poor roads outside. Lots of hay and stacks of wood were on the market, and now and then a farmer came in with two or three hogs for sale. Farmer Webber had two fine ones which he sold a JOURNAL reporter netted 7 cents dressed. The butchers say more pork came in on Saturday than on any day since last fall.

Chief Rauch offers a very good suggestion in relation to supplying pure artesian water for those who depend upon the river-water. His idea is the sinking of a tank of sufficient size to be supplied with artesian water for family use especially. In case of a fire that should exhaust the reservoir, the change could quickly be made to the river. No doubt some day some such a plan will be adopted.

E. C. Davis returned to civilization on Sunday morning from a trip to Boston, Washington and other cities in the interest of the new patent iron railroad tie. He has so far succeeded in enlisting the interest of noted railroad men as to secure the putting down 15 miles of his track for a trial. Mr. Davis seems quite confident that he has a fortune and this opinion is shared by very many others who have seen the plan.

Pelkey Bros. have sold their residence on Jerome's addition and intend to go to the Rainy Lake country this spring. Prospects are that carpenters will have a chance to reap a big harvest up there just as soon as settled weather comes and work adds fair to be plenty there during the entire summer. Until settled weather comes but little can be done as there is but little if any lumber there as yet ready for building purposes.

Fontaine & Anglim are selling best pute..t flour for $1.50 per 100 pounds.

J. B. Merrill, of Fisher, was in the city Monday on business. Mr. Merrill is one of the contractors on the Lowell ditch.

The location of Crookston, upon rolling lands that afford ample drainage, is one of the most healthy that ever can be found in the country. Add to this the fact that an abundance of pure water can be had at slight expense and you have all that is needed to make of Crookston the largest and healthiest city in the northwest.

Pastor Smith of the Congregational church has recovered so much that it is expected he will be able to resume his duties in a couple of weeks. During his illness the services in the church have been faithfully kept up, Mr. A. A. Miller and Mr. C. E. Corwin conducting the exclesses. Mrs. Smith is able to be around again.

Fontaine & Anglim have just issued a spring circular, with a new price list of goods that is way down low. They announce their intention of doing a cash business hereafter, and on this account are enabled to offer lower prices hereafter.

The question arises whether the rumored sale by T. B. Walker of all his pine lands in the northern part of the state will affect the saw mills here and at Grand Forks. It is said that Minneapolis parties have secured all the Walker pine with a view, it is thought of manufacturing as much of it as possible at Minneapolis. It has always been the impression here that there is much of it that is not readily accessible to Minneapolis if so a change of owners can make no difference.

On Monday Chief Gongyer received a telegram from Grand Forks, asking him to look out for a young man with a team, arrest the man and hold him for Dakota justice to overtake. Shortly thereafter the chief got track of a man who was trying to dispose of a team and asked him in. The man proved to be the one wanted and gave the name of James Fisher. Admitted the theft and said he had to do something for a living. He had been trying to sell one horse to Ole Bjoln, the livery man for $25, Ole, however smelled a mice and did not bite, but reported the case to the chief who soon had the man under arrest.

W. J. Murphy, manager of the Crookston Water Power & Light Co., asserts that his company would be very glad to dispose of the plant, but he takes six or eight columns in the Crookston Times to advance reasons why the city should not own its water-works and light plant. If they really desire to get rid of the plant why waste so much time and space in the center to convince people that it would be folly for the city to buy the plant? This hardly looks consistent. If the company is really anxious to dispose of its plant what difference does it make to them whether it is to the city's interest to buy or not?

Town clerks, or others interested in the welfare of their town could contribute an item of interest by writing us a report of their respective town meetings, together with the officers elected. The JOURNAL would gladly be at the trouble of putting these items in type and publishing them, and they would be of value and interest to the various towns. Every year a few enterprising town clerks attend to these matters, but there are very many towns who never see the names of their officers in type. A postal card and a few moments time is all it need cost the interested parties. Let us have a more full and complete report this year than ever before.

The JOURNAL is informed that the populists called a mass meeting on Monday evening to decide whether a populist ticket should be placed in the field. It is said that about 30 people attended—each having and exercising a right to vote and it was decided to put up a populist ticket. If it is true that such a number was present and voting there, it looks reasonable to suppose that some other party interested will sufficiently to go in and help to decide in favor of putting up a popu list ticket, and such is said to be the case. Of course it is none of our business how they do, but the other two parties have appeared to work within their own lines in coming to their decisions, and if the pops have been obliged to combine in order to come to a decision in the matter of placing a ticket in the field it is reasonable to suppose that the combination will result further and control the complexion of the ticket.

Prof. R. S. Knudson has resigned his situation with the Grand Forks Lutheran college and will take charge of the commercial department of the Crookston Normal School and Business College. Mr. Knudson was the founder of this school, and in addition to his well-known ability, he is popular with the people here.

Tom and George Young's, Dougherty's and Bradshaw's teams arrived this week from Meiner's lumber camp on the reservation, having completed the winter's work.

J. N. Burgess went up to the Rainy Lake country last Saturday. Mr. B. has been up there before and is confident that there is plenty pungs up there for the rustlers.

What the JOURNAL said of the effects of partisan tickets on city politics is proving true. Each party is on its mettle to see which shall put in the field the best business ticket.

In relation to the onslaught upon L. S. Hancock's dog, related in our last issue, H. C. Misner informed a JOURNAL reporter that Hancock had nothing but bird shot in their guns. We did not know but they had pupsen seals in their guns judging by the execution—or the lack of it. P. S. The dog did die—of a broken heart.

Mrs. and Mr. Ole O. Christianson lost their little adopted daughter, Aggie, on Tuesday. The funeral will take place to-morrow.

A. E. Persain is making preparations to get out a city directory, which will be issued as soon as he can secure the material and get it printed.

E. J. Hasseltine and family, old time residents of Euclid, who have been in Wisconsin for the past year, have returned to Euclid, their first and only love. Welcome home again, Jay.

Jay Hasseltine, who left Euclid a while ago for Wisconsin to better his condition, returned on Wednesday morning well satisfied that he could not do it. Mr. H. is one of those farmers who have made money in this county, and the fact that he returns so soon is quite significant. Jay said when the train reached Ada he got out on the platform to stretch his legs and enjoy a good breath of fresh, pure Minnesota air, and felt rejoiced to be back again to old Minnesota.

The annual town meeting passed off very quietly, the following being elected: Supervisors—Rob't Cheney, Chairman. Thos. Myers, Paul Nelson; Town Clerk—H. C. Misner; Treasurer—E. C. Murrey; Assessor—Peter Stuhr; Justices of the Peace—M. P. Lamey, 2 years, G. H. Fargo, 1 year; Constable—George Nelson.

Andy Catches On.

Andrew Elken took charge of the stock of Alderman, Sylvester & Elseth as trustee, on Saturday last. Mr. Elken is too well known to our readers to need an introduction. It will be remembered that he was a member of the firm of Elken Bros., who started the store several years since. Andy invites all his old friends to call and see him.

Prices Twine.

The Semdla alliance urges all alliances to call meetings to arrange for buying prison twine. This is a matter of importance to every farmer who uses twine and when they make their contract, if they do, they should not forget to include a clause that will oblige the management to furnish serviceable twine or no pay. It may be that this polnter may prove beneficial, at least it can do no harm to give it all the attention it deserves.

Populist Nominations.

The nominations in the various wards by the populists are as follows: 1st ward, Aaron Olds. 2nd ward, Hans Morlberg; 3rd ward, John O. Sundet; 4th ward, Ole Anderson.

Temperance Lectures.

Elder River Falls Preacher "Rev. R. H. Buttery, of Crookston, is giving a course of three very interesting temperance lectures in the M. E. church this week. It is a feature of much commendation that the speaker does not follow in the old rut of heaping abuse upon the heads of the liquor dealer and drinker but treats the subject from the standpoint of business economy, which proves intensely entertaining. His last lecture will be given this evening, subject, "Verdict Against Rum."

Republican Caucuses.

To-night at 8 o'clock the republican caucuses will be held in the various wards, and every republican who has the best interests of the city at hand should turn out and help to select a good business combination for next Saturday. The primary is one of the most important factors in good government and these should not be neglected. Every good live republican citizen should make it a point to be at the caucus to-night, help to place a good sound business ticket in the field and then off with his coat and elect it. The opposition will work like beavers.

Democrats Nominate.

At the democratic caucuses in the various wards on Wednesday evening the following named persons were nominated for aldermen: 1st ward, Alberic Chafot; 2nd ward, Jos. E. Morrisey; 3rd ward, M. E. Kirsch, 4th ward, Louis Rivard.

Flax Raising.

From a recent report of the market price of flax, covering a period of ten years we note that there has not been one fall during that time when flax did not bring a remunerative price. Taking that estimate as a basis there seems to be no good reason why flax for a few years, should not be a good crop to handle—especially when the fine atures as in the face that there is absolutely no profit in raising wheat at present prices. If sown flax could be sowed in Polk county to affect the annual output of wheat, the result must necessarily be of great benefit to the farmers. It strikes us that this is a good subject for the alliance to take up and discuss for it must be obvious that this idea of raising wheat year after year is a ruinous one. A few years of something else, whatever that is must prove advantageous to wheat growers.

St. Patrick's Day.

St. Patrick's day was observed in this city by the sons and daughters of Erin in a manner peculiarly their own. In the evening an entertainment was given in McKinnon's hall to a crowded house, consisting of speeches, music and readings. The affair was highly enjoyed by a crowd as great as the hall would admit, in fact many could not find seats and many went away rather than enjoy a crowd. Where all did so well it would be difficult to particularize, but we must risk the charge of partiality when we particularly mention the "Kathleen Mavourneen" of that truth ny no Irish lad, Larry Corney O'Connette, which brought the house down that hard that nothing would satisfy them until he re-appeared in "Pat Malloy." An' thin, be that same token there was that brave Irish lad, John Crawford, who with just a faint suggestion of Scotch brogue, gave "The Battle of Fontenoy" in great style. "Norine Mauveen" by Miss Tillie Fortier, Miss Eruline Fontaine and Messrs. Lanctot and Murray, was exceedingly well rendered and encored to the echo. Miss Fortier has a clear, sweet voice which renders her a favorite in musical circles, while Miss Fontaine, though perhaps not quite as well known as a singer, won well deserved applause. As a whole the exercises were highly enjoyed by all.

Easter Services.

FIRST M. E. CHURCH.

11 a. m.—annual Easter sermon—"Resurrection of Christ, and the Conversion of the World."

3 p. m.—Knights Templar service.

8 p. m.—Sabbath School Easter concert.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

Easter services will be conducted at the Congregational church on Sabbath next, the pastor, Rev. J. G. Smith, officiating for the first time in 12 weeks. Everybody cordially invited.

Will Diversify.

Mr. Wm. Fleming, who was up from Mallory last week to sell some timothy seed, remarked to a Journal newspaper of that town that he was the only man in Polk county who has 1891 wheat to sell. I have not sold a bushel of the three crops and I do not feel encouraged to pursue that sort of business. I shall not sell a very large area to wheat this year, but will try something else. I have a lot of choice timothy seed for sale, free from foul weeds. Think that flax would be a good substitute for wheat in this country for a few years until wheat gets around to a living price—if it ever does."

Grand Forks Sewers.

While the Grand Forks News has been raving about "Crookston sewage" it would have been far more beneficial to its readers in that city if it had published the editorial pointing out the manifest deficiencies of its own system of sewage. We are told that it is hard to conceive a more disgusting sewage than has Grand Forks and if they have not already had trouble from that source they are very liable to have sooner or later. The latter should not cut the pot blank.

Concert.

Mr. J. Schiefstad, the violinist, assisted by the eminent pianists Miss Marie Finseth, of Grand Forks, the celebrated singing society "Skaldon" Miss Martha Munch and Prof. Titus, will give a concert at the Crookston Normal School and Business college hall, Tuesday evening, the 27th of March, '94. A fine program will be rendered. Admission 35c.

A Noble Boy.

While a number of youths were busy playing ball one day last week one of them chanced to toss the ball through the window of an adjacent building. Instead of sneaking off home, as many would have done the lad sought the owner, confessed his fault and offered to make restitution. That boy, if he lives will grow up into a useful and manly man, a credit to his parents, to himself and to the community to which he belongs. There is no human being who is not liable to makes mistakes but the true test of character is in owning up and doing all in one's power to right a wrong.

The Draymen Kick.

Last week the draymen appeared before the council by attorney and had registered a healthy kick against having to pay a city license while no adequate protection is granted them by the city authorities. Upon investigating this matter the JOURNAL is informed that there are certain parties who pay no license who make it a business to underbid on unloading cars of wood, on transfers and other business that regular draymen pay license to do, and further that delivery rigs are often sent to the depots for trunks for parties not connected with the concern to which the rig belongs and receiving a slight compensation therefor. So far as this goes their complaint seems to be founded in justice, for this kind of work is just what they pay the city a license to do. One suggestion that we heard strikes us as a good one and that was that the draymen form an association and prosecute all cases wherein their legitimate rights are infringed upon. An ordinance to cover the point they complain of is to be drawn and will no doubt pass.

CROOKSTON, March 17th, 1894.

EDS. JOURNAL: Allow me, as one very much interested in the question of hog-raising to make a suggestion that I think will be of practical benefit to all concerned. I wish to call attention to a habit that has proved a great draw-back to the perfect success of hog-raising in this county for ten years past at least and will until it is remedied, and the remedy is so easy that it is strange that it has not been applied before. Fully one-half our farmers neglect a certain necessary surgical operation on male pigs until the pigs are too old. I have handled hogs for the past 25 years but never met with such a large percentage of thick skinned hogs as I have handled in this county owing to the above mentioned negligence and that is all it is further is no other good reason for allowing male pigs to run so long before the proper attention is given them. The proper time is when the pig is four or five weeks old but very many wait five or six months.

Respectfully Yours,
ROBERT STANTON.

The Hard Times Social.

The hard times social given under the auspices of the W. R. C., at G. A. R. hall was so well attended that, although the provisions made were supposed to be fully ample, they ran out long before the hour announced for the supper curtain to ring down. The receipts from the supper were $48.60 and the supper was one of the finest that we have sampled in one while. The costumes were as many and various as were the tastes of those who were charged up. Across a rule suggested the shabby genteel style—an effort to make a penny go to the utmost limit and many and grotesque were the samples there displayed. Mrs. B. J. Duntley received the prize for the oddest costume of the ladies, and Albert Losey for the gentlemen. While the banquet was being served up stairs, recitations and music was indulged in down stairs in the G. A. R. post room. Upon entering the hall a pathetic scene met the eye—an old lady industriously grinding a hand-organ, while a little cap conveniently placed for coppers attracted many a dime, (and here also one was supposed to stop his partner for supper). The old lady was Mrs. Judge Reynolds, who was dressed as costume and entered into the spirit of the thing with all the eagerness of a school girl. As a whole the affair was voted a grand success and was very well patronized.

The Gold Miners.

The Rainy Lake gold miners are impatiently waiting the coming of spring to develope their mines. Hundreds are flocking in every day and nearly everybody living in tents. Two newspapers have started up and a big rush is anticipated just as soon as spring opens sufficiently to permit prospecting. Should the mines prove to be valuable it will have a tendency to settle up the northern part of the state rapidly.

Business Improving.

August George, who was at St. Paul last week, says he found quite an improvement in the business conditions quite encouraging to see. He says that there is money to be had on good security, but as yet not quite as much confidence in securities as he would like to see. It is thought that this will regulate itself to the changed condition of things at an early day. He procured some money that he is able to loan out on certain lands under certain circumstances.

Better Times Coming.

That a boom will again strike the Northwest is just as sure as it is the fact that it did so after the financial depression of 1873. There is not an old settler here who cannot well remember the times we had then and for sometime thereafter, at a time too, when the capacity of the country had not been fully tested. Who does not remember how the tenderfeet fled—at the first alarm, giving away what little stuff they had for anything it would bring and skipping out? And later, when the sun of prosperity again shone forth, how they wished they had not been so precipitate. At that time we did not know the capacity of this country, now we do, and it is just as true now as it was then that all who weather the gale will come out all right. It is true that it will require some sand but it requires that to live in any country on this earth. Once the country at large becomes settled and prices for our products better, we will soon forget the present troublous times in the light of a general prosperity.

Will Try Flax.

Chris Houston will try a flax crop if he can secure the seed any place. He would like to try 100 acres in flax. He says Himmelsbach Bros. had a yield of 16 bushels per acre and sold the crop at their nearest elevator for 85 cents per bushel. It would have taken a yield of about 28 bushels per acre of wheat to have equalled the price of the flax when sold. Had the flax been kept till December 30, it would have brought ten cents per bushel more than it did.

The Great Northern.

The prospects for the construction of the Great Northern road to Duluth this spring are good, and if that road is built it is more than probable that the Duluth & Winnipeg will build in here at an early date also. Located as Crookston is in one of the most healthy localities in the Northwest, with plenty of good artesian water on hand and any quantity easy to obtain, our progress ought to be rapid and sure. One year from the time these roads reach this point we should not be surprised to see Crookston double its present population and treble its present business.

Waived Examination.

Levi and Edgard Brouillet were arrested on a charge of removing buildings from land owned by Joe Merell, and brought before Judge Gossman and the case removed to Judge Spendley's court by change of venue. The parties waived examination and gave bonds for appearance in the district court. It seems that the Brouillets built the buildings upon the land in question with the understanding that when the railroad company got a good title they were to buy the land, but in some way they did not buy it and Mr. Merell did. The Brouillets then attempted to remove the buildings with the above result.

Farm Wages.

J. P. Bullun: "The subject of wages is one of vast importance for the consideration of farmers at this time. While I believe in paying all I can afford for labor, I also believe in figuring so that I can also be getting wages. At the going wages of last year, with the prevailing price of wheat the farmer had nothing left for himself, and I can see no way to do this year than to establish a basis that will allow the farmer to live also. He has to assume all the risks, take all the chances and should so plan his operations as to allow himself living wages as well as for his men. I cannot see how we can pay as high wages as last year and live."

Our Condition.

It is said that "time evens up all things" and if one will but stop a moment to think and compare present prices with those prevailing in the past, we think he must be forced to the conclusion that the present price of wheat is not such an unusual evil after all. For instance, the writer remembers when good horses were readily sold at from $300 to $300 per head; well-bidders at $200 and freight added; wagons $100-and upwards; onts for seed and feed 75 cents per bushel, and everything else in proportion, and wheat brought not over one dollar per bushel—far oftener muchless. How is it to-day? Desirable horses assess as first grade, serviceable work horses can be bought for from $50 to $100 per head—or about one-fifth former prices. Self-binders are not over one-third the price they were when wheat was from 75 to 85 cents; wagons and other machinery not over one half, onts are less than one-third, while everything the farmer has to buy is from one-half to one-third what he had to pay in early days. We believe that when farmer is entirely out of debt he can really save as much money under the present condition of things as he could when wheat was one-third higher and everything he had to buy from one-half to three or four times as high as now.

The dwelling of Ed Wagner at Duluth was demolished by dynamite. The explosive had been placed near the fire to thaw out. Otis Wagner, aged 13 years, was literally blown to pieces. The mother, Mrs. Wagner, is severely injured and may not live, and a young girl is badly hurt also. Wagner and another son were only slightly hurt.

The executive officers of the Minnesota Editors' and Publishers' Association met in Minneapolis Saturday to consider the subject of a summer outing. The matter was finally left to a special committee to investigate and report to the executive committee for final action. It is probable that a trip will be taken down the Mississippi to St. Louis.

State Treasurer Bobleter has received notice that $38,000 worth of state funding bonds of 1892 had been transferred from the Excelsior to the Greenwich Savings bank of New York. There is said to be a strong demand for these bonds at a premium, some having been sold as high as $1.07, although they bear but 5 1-2 per cent interest.

Shot From Ambush.

MINNEAPOLIS, March 19.—T. W. Murphy, a laborer, living at 528 Twentieth avenue north, was fired upon from ambush about 8:30 p. m., and shot in the left hand. The bullet passed through the middle finger, cutting the bone in two as neatly as if done by a knife. Murphy attributes the shot to some of his political or religious enemies.

Assignment at Mankato.

MANKATO, Minn., March 17.—R. F. Jones, clothier, has made an assignment. His liabilities are $10,000 and assets a little less. He has been in business here for several years, and has branch stores at Janesville and Elysian, which are included in the assignment. J. B. Richards is assignee.

WAITE WEAKENED.

COLORADO SUPREME COURT WILL DECIDE DENVER'S CONTEST,

The Governor Having Finally Decided to Allow the Matter to Go to That Tribunal — Militia Ordered to Cripple Creek on Account of Mining Troubles.

DENVER, March 17.—The war between Governor Waite and the old fire and police board never and the supreme court will settle the matter.

The situation during the morning was as the "calm" after the storm, the people anxiously awaiting the decision of the chief executive on the proposition to submit the matter to the supreme court and the governor undecided as to what course to pursue. There was no doubt but he would gladly compromise the disgraceful affair were it not for all the ill advice of some intimate friends and fear for his executive dignity.

The matter had assumed such features that the governor was almost compelled to adopt the suggestions of his legal advisers and allow the courts to settle the trouble.

For 10 days the fire and police department have been utterly demoralized, and the city has been without protection of any kind. The city hall was in the possession of armed policemen and deputy sheriffs; the building filled with arms and ammunition and dynamite; the local militia were under orders, the whole state militia prepared to march on Denver, and five companies of the United States troops in the city ready for the emergency that was certain to occur if the tension continued; the governor was being strained day and night by armed men, afraid of violence or arrest, and the whole populace was in a feverish condition.

At 11 o'clock, Governor Waite decided to submit the trouble to the supreme court for settlement. His communication to the court makes over 4,000 words, and after reciting the case from the first up to the present day, he asks the court to decide which men constitute the legal fire and police and excise commissioners of the city of Denver. This ends for the present the controversy which three days ago threatened to plunge the city and state into bloodshed.

Ordered to Move.

DENVER, March 17.—Adjutant General Tarsney has ordered the Denver militia to move at noon for Cripple Creek. Brigadier General Brooks has been ordered by the governor to have the First regiment, the Signal Corps and the Chaffee Light artillery at their armory to move at a moment's notice. A company of cavalry and one of infantry have left Colorado Springs, and a company has been ordered from Pueblo to Colorado Springs, where they will await orders.

Not to Aid Mine Owners.

DENVER, March 18.—Governor Waite has issued an order to Adjutant General Tarsney, in command of the troops at Cripple Creek, that the soldiers must not be used as a guard to enable the mine owners to resume work on the mines in question, but only to preserve the peace in the event of a conflict.

Want Troops to Remain.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Colo., March 21.—Although the militia is still here not a single arrest has been made during the day. This lethargy on the part of the civil authorities evidently influenced the governor to recall the troops. The mine owners and business men have appointed a committee to wait upon the governor and prevail upon him to rescind the order.

A PRIVATE MINT.

Somebody Turning Out Standard Silver Dollars.

OMAHA, March 19.—Four special treasury department secret service men, in addition to the regular force employed at division headquarters and the forces of the United States marshal's office are working in Omaha and vicinity to unearth a private mint which has turned over $60,000 standard silver dollars, being the same amount of silver and alloy as the government. The plant has been in operation some time and it is said it is impossible to detect the difference between the money made by the counterfeiters and the genuine turned out by the federal mint. The profits of the gang are made from the seigniorage, which is said to give the makers a rakeoff of 51 cents on each dollar made. The secret service men have secured a clue which they believe will reunit in the entire gang being jailed shortly.

Minnesota Elections.

ST. PAUL, March 18.—Elections were held Tuesday, March 13, in a great many Minnesota cities, villages and towns. Saloon license was an issue in the western part of the state, with results about equally divided between the saloon and no saloon elements. Republicans were generally successful where party lines were drawn.

Appleton decided against bonding for electric lights and waterworks.

Montevideo decided to bond for $6,000 to build a town hall.

To Cut Expenses in Two.

BOSTON, March 17.—President Bliss of the Boston and Albany railroad has ordered a reduction of 50 per cent in the running expenses of the road in this city, and to carry this out, a wholesale reduction and discharge of employes will take effect at once.

Denied by Officials.

SEATTLE, Wash., March 19.—Officials of the Great Northern say that there is no foundation for the published rumor that a freight train had been carried over an embankment and buried by a snowslide near Skykomish.

Convicted of Perjury.

WINNIPEG, Man., March 17.—The jury returned a verdict of guilty in the case of perjury against Charles Chamberlain of Toronto, who voted illegally at the last Dominion elections.

TARIFF PRINCIPLES.

SOME SOUTHERN SENSE ON THE QUESTION NOW AT ISSUE.

A Fair Argument Upon the Present and Prospective Effects of the Wilson Tariff Measure—"The Thing to Do Is to Defeat the Bill."

The tariff question in its essence is a simple one.

Some $450,000,000 of money is required for the expenditures of the national government. Of this about $150,000,000 is raised by internal revenue taxes, leaving $300,000,000 to be raised by custom duties.

The tariff question is simply, "How shall the duties required to raise this sum be distributed?"

The Republican theory is that they shall be so laid as to give the best protection or aid to American labor and American capital.

Hence the McKinley law laid heavy duties on articles which God has given us the natural facilities to make cheaply and in abundance and on articles of luxury or vice, and low duties or none on articles of necessity or of general use, and which we cannot produce, or on which we produce only a small part of our consumption.

Hence, to illustrate, high duties on iron, and free coffee, tea and sugar.

The Democratic contention is that it is unconstitutional to lay any duty on imports with a view to protection of home industries, and that all duties must be laid with a view to revenue only.

Hence, to illustrate again, they would place such a duty on iron as to induce the largest importation and bring the largest amount of revenue, and should tax coffee, tea and sugar.

The Wilson bill follows neither theory, but is a bill without principle—a monstrosity—seeking a seeming compliances with the Chicago platform on one hand and to cater to or save votes on the other.

It is an un-American bill, and in all its departures from the McKinley bill it discriminates against the American wage earner and in favor of the foreign manufacturer.

The bare proposal of its passage has been the prime factor in the terrible demoralization of business now prevailing throughout the country, and its passage will deepen and intensify the universal distress.

The passage of the bill will in a large measure change the economic conditions of the country, destroy old and large industrial centers in the attempt to create new ones, disturb and render uncertain existing values and produce great and calamitous paralysis of business.

It will be the supreme folly of a people who consume more than any other 100,000,000 people on the globe.

The proposal of the Wilson bill is to divide this market with foreigners. With a reduced demand for our manufactures comes increased cost of production, which can only be met by reduced wages to labor, and hence, anyway, the burden falls on the backs of the wage earners of the country. Then with reduced earnings of the great body of the wage earners comes lessened purchasing power, and the injury is reflected on all classes of our people.

"A fair day's wages for a fair day's work" is a demand founded in reason and justice, and the consumer should pay for his goods a price that, under good natural conditions, will allow the laborer this just reward.

God and labor only create wealth, and they work together and in harmony.

God has given no an empire with a richness of natural resources unequaled in the world's history, and with a human energy and skill to match.

What these combined resources and skill can do illustrate in the fact that pig iron has been selling this year in Alabama and Tennessee at less than the duty—$9.72 per ton—in the construction to the Democratic claim that the duty is always added to the cost of the articles to the consumer.

Then, admitting virtue in the Wilson bill, we will get no benefit from it, because of the lack of faith in the stability of the new policy which it begins, for everybody will wait to see how the people vote next fall. If, as is likely, the people vote next fall as they did last fall and return a protection congress, capital will again wait for a return to the principle of the McKinley law.

The only remedy for the present distress is to defeat the Wilson bill and leave the McKinley law to be amended by its friends as circumstances may demand.

IS READY TO REPORT

DEMOCRATIC MEMBERS OF THE FINANCE COMMITTEE

Finish Their Work on the Wilson Tariff Bill—Another Increase Made in the Sugar Schedule—Reciprocity Abrogated —Other Changes.

WASHINGTON, March 19.—The Democratic members of the senate committee on finance have completed their work on the tariff bill, and will submit changes which they have made in the bill as drafted by the subcommittee, at a meeting of the full committee to be held during the afternoon. The principal changes which they have made in the bill are in the sugar schedule, and that has been modified so as to take into account the color as well as the polarization of sugar. The change made will add one-eighth of a cent per pound on the color test, so as to insure to the refiner the much protection. This is in accordance with the original intention of the committee, but it has been claimed that the bill as at first reported to the full committee would discriminate against the refiners.

It is understood that the bill will be amended so as to make positive declarations for the abrogation of the reciprocities treaties made under the McKinley acts. This will be done simply to satisfy the sugar men and leave no doubt as to the intention of the bill in this respect and not because the Democratic members of the committee have any doubt that the bill as it now stands would accomplish this purpose.

To Eliminate Hawaiian Matters.

It is also probable that the clauses in the bill abrogating the Hawaiian treaty will be struck out. There has been some contention among the Democratic members on this score, and two or three votes have been taken upon a proposition to strike it out, a majority at first opposing this change. The principal argument which has been made for it was based upon the ground of expediency, and it has been urged that if it should be permitted to remain it would be the means of introducing the Hawaiian complications into the tariff bill discussion. All have agreed that this should be avoided, if possible, without surrendering too much, and the latest reliable statement is that this argument has won, and that the amendment will be stricken out.

These, together with the restoration of the present law regarding the tax on domestic cigars, will be the principal changes made. The lead ore duty and whisky tax, as well as the duty placed upon coal and iron ore, will remain as placed in the bill by the Democratic members. There will be a few changes in the fruit schedule, and a few minor articles which were taken from the free list and made dutiable will be restored to the free list. The bill when it next sees light, will also show several changes in the administrative part of the bill, and the amendment inserted by the members of the committee providing for the repeal of the entire McKinley act will be modified, to either specify what portions of that act shall remain in force, or to repeal the parts in conflict with the pending act.

A TEXAS CYCLONE.

The Lone Star State Visited by a Destructive Wind and Hail Storm.

DALLAS, TEX., March 19.—The storms which swept over North Texas Saturday and Sunday and which still prevail are unparalleled in severity. The death roll will reach at least the list of wounded over 100. At Emery, capital of Raine county, the cyclone knocked the town nearly out of existence. There were many other towns visited and handled roughly. Mayor Barry has called upon our citizens for contributions to relieve the sufferers, many of whom have been rendered sad mourn the loss of members of their families. Sunday night an electric storm, followed by a miniature deluge of rain fell upon Dallas and all the counties around us. No breaks in any of the railroads have yet been reported, but it is nearly certain many will occur. The river in front of the city is rapidly rising.

Mrs. John W. Noble Dead.

ST. LOUIS, March 19.—Mrs. John W. Noble, wife of ex-President Harrison's secretary of the interior, died suddenly at her home in this city.

The end of life came to her while standing in her dining room chatting with friends and waiting for General Noble, who had stepped from the room to call a carriage for a drive. The cause of her death was organic heart disease.

Miners Accept a Reduction.

PITTSBURG, March 19.—The river miners of the fourth pool have accepted the reduction offered by the operators and all have returned to work. The rate for running will be 1 1-2 cents a bushel. The strike was against a cut of, from 1 2-4 to 1 1-2 cents a bushel. About 1,200 men returned to work, and several hundred who have been working at the pool price will be obliged to accept a reduction.

Superior and Pacific.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., March 17.—Articles of incorporation of the Chicago, Superior and Pacific Railroad company were filed in the office of the secretary of state. The principal office is to be maintained at Chicago. Capital stock, $4,000,000.

Liquor Bill Defeated.

DES MOINES, March 19.—The Carpenter liquor bill was defeated in the senate by a vote of 26 to 12. The bill in the house was defeated by a vote of 57 to 58.

Oratorical Contest.

BELOIT, Wis., March 17.—In the state college oratorical contest Fred Staff of Beloit college won first place and will represent the state at the interstate contest at Indianapolis, May 4. Ripon and Beloit were represented by two speakers each.

DASH FOR THE POLE.

The Wellman Expedition Sails For Spitzbergen—Some Novel Features.

NEW YORK, March 14.—The well known journalist, Walter Wellman, and three American companions, sailed on the steamer Brittannic en route to Spitzbergen, from which point it will make its summer dash for the north pole.

Ten young Norwegians, who have had experience in Arctic expeditions, will join the expedition in Norway, and the party will start from Florence, Norway, for the islands of Spitzbergen about May 1. At Danes island, which is so far north that few explorers have ever passed it, headquarters will be established and the party will then steam to the edge of the great ice pack, a degree farther north. About May 15 the dash for the pole will begin.

That marvelous new metal, aluminum, has been utilized in the construction of sledges, boats and other apparatus, and thus equipped with far lighter paraphernalia than any previous explorer, Mr. Wellman expects to be able to push on north at the rate of from 12 to 20 miles per day. As he will have only about 600 miles to travel before the pole is reached, he expects to either reach that goal or a point very near it in 50 days. He will then return to the edge of the pack in 50 days more, his steamer will pick him up, and he will then return home.

AMERICAN FACTORIES.

Census Bureau Bulletin Relating to the Industries of the Country.

WASHINGTON, March 16.—The census bulletin on manufactures in the United States was made public during the day. The statistics are given for all classes of mechanical and manufactured industries. The total number of manufacturing establishments in the United States is reported as 355,401, against 268,826 in 1880. The summary of totals gives the following figures for 1890:

Capital, $6,182,475,305; miscellaneous expenses, $980,944,038; aggregate of the average number of employments, 4,771,812; wages, $2,282,822,285; cost of materials used, $5,468,868,833, and value of products, $9,370,107,624.

The contribution to the wealth of the country, it is stated, is more clearly shown by deducting $5,158,868,333, the cost of material used, from the value of the products. This leaves $4,211,238,-271 as the increased cost of the raw materials.

CONFERENCE BEGUN.

President Clark and Union Pacific Employes Get Together.

OMAHA, March 17.—After all the blow and bluster and declarations that the conference would never be held, the employes of the Union Pacific and President Clark came together at the railroad headquarters, and the wage conference, scheduled to open last Thursday, began. The meeting was held in the office of the general manager and was secret. The telegraphers were given the first hearing, and it is believed that three days will be consumed in presenting their side of the case. The men have stood firm and they now assert that their belief that the conference will terminate satisfactorily.

BAD FOR BANKERS.

A Decision Against Them by the Wisconsin Supreme Court.

MADISON, Wis., March 16.—The supreme court has handed down a decision in the case of Francis W. Noyes and Eugene S. Elliott, directors of the Pinckinton bank, Milwaukee, indicted with other directors by a special grand jury for having fraudulently received deposits while the bank was insolvent, and who were discharged from custody by Judge Johnson on the ground that the grand jury did not find sufficient evidence with the law. The supreme court reverses this order and remands the cases with directions that the defendants be remanded to the custody of the sheriff.

ROSTER CASE FINISHED.

A Nonsuit Granted by Judge Batzoker on the Defendant's Motion.

MADISON, Wis., March 16.—On the motion of the attorney the defense a nonsuit has been granted by Judge Seibecker in the roster case.

Adopted a Substitute.

LONDON, March 16.—When the house of commons met Sir William Vernon Harcourt, chancellor of the exchequer, announced that the government had decided to move the rejection of the amended address in reply to the queen's speech, when it is put from the chair, and to substitute another short address in reply. The substitute was adopted.

The Presidential Cave.

OTTAWA, ILL., March 16.—Attorneys U. S. Barrow and S. S. Gregory appeared in the supreme court and entered a motion for a writ of supersedeas to stay the judgment and sentence passed upon Presidergast, the murderer of Carter Harrison, pending the presentation of proofs in support of a new trial.

By Popular Vote.

WASHINGTON, March 15.—The house committee on election of president and vice president have agreed to the joint resolution of the chairman, Mr. Tucker of Virginia, for an amendment to the constitution providing that United States senators shall hereafter be elected by a direct vote of the people.

Oxford Won.

LONDON, March 17.—The 51st boat race between crews representing Oxford university and Cambridge university in boat clubs took place during the morning over the usual 4-mile 2 furlongs course from Putney bridge to the Ship at Mortlake. Oxford won by three and a half lengths.

Head of Burglars.

MILLER, S. D., March 17.—The sheriff has brought in Willard Davis, charged with many breakings. Dave and John Rorick have also been arrested. It develops that an organized band has been operating here for some time.

WORK OF CONGRESS.

Tuesday, March 13.

The senate spent the day discussing the Blind seignlorage bill.

The house began the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the government and fair progress was made. An amendment by Mr. Morse (Rep., Mass.) to cut off the appropriation for the interstate commerce commission was overwhelmingly defeated. Three minor amendments were adopted.

Wednesday, March 14.

Forty pages of the sundry civil bill were disposed of in the house during the day, making in all 63 in two days, and leaving only 16 pages more, exclusive of two paragraphs, those relating to the coast and geodetic surveys and the Missouri river commission, which were passed over temporarily. No amendments of importance were adopted, although the Northwestern members made a vigorous effort to increase the amount for the survey of public lands.

In the senate there was a test vote on the Bland seignlorage bill on a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed its third reading. The motion was defeated—39 to 45. A motion to reconsider was defeated by a vote of 37 to 44. It is expected the bill will pass by about the same vote.

Thursday, March 15.

The senate passed the Bland seignorage bill, 44 to 33, and adjourned till Monday.

The house debated the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Friday, March 16.

The house spent the day in committee of the whole considering the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The senate was not in session.

Monday, March 19.

There was no important business transacted in the senate, the entire day being consumed in the consideration of bills on the calendar. Most of these were measures of small importance.

The house immediately went into committee of the whole on the sundry civil bill.

APPROPRIATIONS.

Amounts to Be Expended by this Congress Compared With the Last.

WASHINGTON, March 19.—The total of appropriations of the present session of congress will exceed by a few millions the appropriations of the first session of the last congress. No official statement has been made by Chairman Sayers or the members of the appropriation committee, but a comparison of the bills already passed or reported with those of the first session of the last congress, shows that the total of bills which will leave the house will be about $366,461,-501. The senate usually increases the bills materially; last year appropriations crease reaching a total of $5,000,000, so that the aggregate for the present session is expected to touch $370,000,000.

Eight of the great appropriation bills have already been reported to the house and three of them have been passed. The total of these in their present stage is $94,941,752. This is about $14,000,000 more than the same bills carried two years ago.

Of the bills yet to be brought into the house no exact estimate is obtainable, owing to the care with which each bills are guarded. These are the agricultural, Indian, legislative, navy and river and harbor. Last congress they carried $77,494,777. In this the estimates are for $62,800,000. Should these bills be passed at estimated the total appropriations would be almost identical with those of 1893-3.

Ask Cleveland to Veto.

NEW YORK, March 17.—Two hundred members of the New York Produce Exchange have signed a petition requesting President Cleveland to veto the seignlorage bill on the ground that it would be detrimental to the business interests of the country.

The clothesline, as soon as its duty is ended, should be reeled up and placed in a hag until next time.

Dish towels and common towels can be ironed just as well in half the time if folded together once as if ironed singly.

Clothes when brought in should be separated and folded at once. If allowed to lie together, many wrinkles accumulate.

Pillowslips should be ironed lengthwise instead of crosswise if one wishes to iron wrinkles out instead of in.—Good Housekeeping.

THE PEDAGOGUE.

Vassar college was founded by Matthew Vassar in 1861.

Chicago has 800 private schools, 350 seminaries and 4 universities.

Leland Stanford university, though only in its third year, has already nearly 900 students, of whom about 300 are girls.

Massachusetts, with 324 towns and 28 cities, has 883,000 pupils in her public schools and 60,000 more in private schools and academies.

One Maine teacher says, "I can teach my pupils more physiology in half an hour with a cat and a jackknife than with all the textbooks that we have in the schools."

English grammar, so called, is a cautious according to Whitney. English nouns have two cases, pronouns three. Holbrook and Maxwell mention three cases, Harvey four, Harper and Burgess five.

SENATOR WASHBURN'S bill to grant right of way for the Duluth & Winnipeg railroad through the White Earth reservation, has passed the Senate.

THE Review, of East Grand Forks, has just turned its third mile-post and enters its fourth year, bright and smiling under the guiding hand of Bro. D. P. H. Strong, who shows magnificent staying qualities.

THE democrats are in a sweet row for that Grover will veto Bland's coinage bill, which, they say would cost them very many seats in congress next fall. To the average mind it would not seem to make any difference what action the president takes—he has already done enough to kill his party.

THE democrats are attempting to excuse the attitude of the administration in the matter of pensions on the ground that Judge Lochren was himself a brave soldier. No one disputes the bravery of Judge Lochren when he was a soldier, but the fact that the present administration is extremely hostile to the old soldier, and Judge Lochren, in order to hold his job must carry out the policy of the administration. Every obstacle that can possibly be divised is thrown in the way of the pensioner and every pension is grudgingly given.

THE Grand Forks Weekly News in its last issue had the only glimmering of sense it has yet manifested during the prevalence of the fever siege when it says that "perhaps the cause of the fever in both cities comes from the Indians on the reservation to the east of us." That is the most sensible thing it has said during the war, its columns being for the most part filled with absurd and silly rayings against Crookston. There can be no possible doubt that whatever was the cause of fever in Crookston it was imported and not original with us and no doubt came here by way of the river.

ADDITIONAL LOCAL.

John Miller lost his remaining child on Saturday. It will be remembered that his wife died last fall leaving twins one of which died soon after and the other one of which died on Saturday.

C. O. Espe reports that he has a contract to put down an artesian well for the city of East Grand Forks. They will make a thorough try to obtain pure water.

J. D. Richey, who has had charge of the penmanship and commercial department of the Normal School and Business College for about six months, has gone to Marysville, Missouri, where he takes a position in the postoffice. His place here will be filled by R. S. Knudson.

Geo. Kronschnabel, ex-mayor of Fertile was up on Monday looking after Peterson Br s. and Warming er's stables with a view to purchasing a good horse.

The N. P. R. R. will sell tickets to St. Paul and Minneapolis next week and one rate for round trip. Go 27th and return 29th.

Mrs Cora Underhill contemplates returning to Crookston and opening a Kindergarten. A hall has been secured and if the plan meets with sufficient encouragement she will undertake the school.

Quite a ripple of excitement was caused by the arrest this week of Chris Bond, a prominent young society man at the instance of Miss Bessie Brevik. Mr. Bond was taken before Esquire Gossman and the trial of the case set for Monday, March 26th.

Postmaster LePage informs the JOURNAL that he has had his commission a week or ten days but owing to the recent death of his child, and the fact that he is moving, he decided not to take possession of the postoffice until the beginning of the new quarter, April 1st. He says the only change he will make at present will be to substitute Bissell for Postmaster Dowler and appoint his own son to a clerkship. Otherwise the force will be and remain as it is for the present at least, for said he "I think the present force very efficient and I do not see where I could improve it."

Wm. Welsh, who was arrested not long since, charged with appropriating timber that belonged to the railroad company, was discharged in Justice Gossman's court on the testimony of the man of whom Mr. Welsh bought the timber in question. It appeared that the man bought the timber of another man to him unknown and let Mr. W. have it on a debt.

What we have seen of the McClure-Stanton imbroglio does not redound to the credit of the pastor in a remarkable degree. It seems that Robert Stanton read one of Dr. Kittridge's sermons in the Baptist church one Sunday morning recently, and in the evening attended the Presbyterian church to listen to Rev. Mr. McClure. Afterward Mr. Stanton told several parties that the gist of Mr. McClure's sermon was contained in Dr. Kittridge's sermon—in fact, sounded very like the sermon itself. This came to the ears of Rev. McClure, who last Sunday morning in his pulpit took occasion to score Mr. S. soundly, calling him an "ignorant pork-packer." In the evening Mr. McClure alluded to the subject again by way of apology for his intemperate language of the morning. It looks as though the parson made a very bad break.

The passenger department of the Northern Pacific has issued a little brochure entitled "The Yakima Valley" in which that portion of the State of Washington, its resources, products and advantages, are described in an attractive and flattering manner. The pamphlet can be obtained of any agent of the Northern Pacific.

Adolph Hydut succeeded in his ambition to get into the populist city convention. Said he wanted to get in so as to defeat Holston's nomination for mayor.

Clabot Declines.

On Thursday morning, when notified of his nomination for alderman in the 1st ward, Mr. A. Clabot emphatically declined to accept, and publishes a card to that effect. The JOURNAL is informed that the democrats will substitute a populist, Anton R. Erickson for their democratic nominee.

Simply Is the Dinner Fish.

As I sat here idly dreaming of the happy time that's gone,
Not a dollar in my pocket, and the winter coming on,
The thing that breaks me up the most, and makes me look so small,
Is the sight of that old dinner pail, hanging on the wall.

I've carried that old dinner pail for fifteen years or more,
And it never saw me out of work or destitute before;
For with shops and factories running and the best of wages paid
A prosperous lot of fellows were the dinner pail brigade.

But you see we wasn't minded, though it seems most mighty strange,
And said we thought the country would be better for a change;
And we railed about the tariff, and we blowed about free trade,
And we voted democratic, did the dinner pail brigade.

Well, a change was what we wanted, and we got it too, you bet;
For the shops and factories all shut down, and left us in the wet;
The banks suspended payment, and I lost my little all.
And the dinner pail hereby now, that's hanging on the wall.

I'm dependent now on charity for the roof above my head,
And I've seen my wife and little ones go hungry to bed;
But I've plenty time for thinking, and I see it isn't strange,
That I voted democratic jo-to have a little change.

Yes, we voted democratic, and you see the change has made
A lot of hungry beggars of the dinner pail brigade.
The workingmen are idle, but the workwood and the gall
Is to see the empty dinner pail, hanging on the wall.

DUNN'S BUDGET.

Interesting News and Gossip from the National Capital.

WASHINGTON, March 21, '94.

Between the tariff bill and the Breckenridge trial the south is having all there is going here in Washington. The south is especially interested as a part of the Breckenridge case, while the tariff is essentially a southern measure. So far as Washington is concerned, attention is about equally divided between the Democratic administration and the unsavory Kentucky case.

The Democrats are having a very serious time over their tariff bill, and it is plain that they are protectionists and divided on this point from the Republicans only in degree. Hill is leading the fight for protection. Gorman Hill's followers at the Chicago convention that forced the free trade plank instead of the Cleveland tariff plank in the platform, and it is that plank which is giving Hill, Brice and others so much trouble. It was intended to embarrass Cleveland, but it is not bothering him so much as it is the other fellows.

Senator Davis is giving evidence that it was a wise choice of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations when he was given a place upon it. He is highly appreciated by his fellow-members and his opinions on difficult points of international law are eagerly sought.

There was a big contest over the place for a vacancy on the Committee on Commerce the other day. When White, of Louisiana, went on the Supreme bench he left a vacancy on this committee and a dozen Democratic senators began a scramble for the place. It is this committee that I said was of so much importance, and it is well to remark that if Minnesota loses the place it will be hard to get it again. Blanchard, the new senator, notwithstanding his experience in the house, could not get the place.

I was glad to see that Joel Heatwole crossed out the Democrats in Northfield. I hope that the people of the Third District will send him to congress. He would be a credit to the state.

Representative McCleary got in his work the other day in behalf of the people of Jasper who are threatened by an amendment which Holman got in the Sundry Civil bill. McCleary did not catch it until it had passed so far, but that was not his fault. He did and could not know that the innocent proposition meant so much to a town in his district. Had he been in congress for the past five years he would have known all about it as the matter had been up before. It pays to keep good men in congress.

I understand I have been criticised for saying some complimentary things about Senator Washburn and advocating his re-election. Well, I wanted to see Mack Dunnell, John Lind, Dar Hall, Capt. Seidler and Sol Comstock re-elected. I did what I could to have Senator Davis returned. These men represented the state well, they knew what was wanted and knew how to obtain results. Keep good men in congress if they are doing their duty. Senator Washburn has earned re-election.

ARTHUR W. DUNN.

The trouble with most cough medicines is that they spoil the appetite, weaken digestion, and create bile. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, on the contrary, while it gives immediate relief, assists rather than impairs the assimilative process.

"What's in a name?" Well that depends, for instance the name of "Ayer" is sufficient guarantee that Ayer's Sarsaparilla is a genuine, scientific blood-purifier, and not a sham, like so much that goes by the name of "sarsaparilla." Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the standard.

THE FIRST IRISH POTATOES.

Sir Walter Raleigh Planted Them Near Cork, but the People Feared Them.

Sir Walter Raleigh was an aspiring old adventurer and lived as an administrator and colonizer, but he had a most commendable taste for planting and gardening, and to these branches of effort his influence remains potent. Three hundred years have passed since he lived in Ireland, in the county of Cork, on the vast estate which had been bestowed upon him, but the yellow wall flowers which he brought to Ireland from the Azores still flourish and bloom in the very spot where he planted them.

Near by, at Youghal, near Cork, on the shores of the Blackwater estuary, stands the Affane cherry which he planted. Some cedars which he brought to Cork are still growing at a place called Tivoli. Four yew trees, whose branches have grown and interlaced into a sort of summer house, are pointed out as having sheltered Raleigh when he first smoked tobacco in his garden at Youghal.

Raleigh tried to make tobacco grow in Great Britain, but the climate was not found amitable to it. So succeeded, however, by introducing the habit of smoking it, in making it grow in plenty in other places.

More important to the world than the spot where Raleigh sat and smoked his Indian weed is another spot in his garden at Myrtle Grove, in the town of Youghal. This spot is still bounded by the town wall of the thirteenth century. It was here that Raleigh first planted a curious tuber brought from America, which thrives vastly better than his tobacco plants did.

This tuber Raleigh insisted was good to eat, though common report for a long time pronounced it poisonous. Some roots from his vines he gave to other land owners in Munster. They cultivated them and spread them abroad from year to year.

This plant was the Irish potato. Before many generations it became the staple food of the Irish people—almost the only food of a great majority of them.

It was the "Irish potato" which came back to America and became the groundwork, so to speak, of the American farmer's and workingman's daily breakfast and dinner. Sir Walter's curious experiment in acclimatization became an economic step of the very first consequence, and the spot at Youghal which was its scene deserves marking with a monument much more than do the places where the blood of men has been shed in battle.

Wanted a Good Foot.

Models are an important part of a sculptor's need. I doubt whether in this particular we differ from our Greek predecessors, for we read of choice pressmen, such as peacocks, given by Phidias to his models, showing how much he valued them, presumably because it was as difficult then as now to get good ones.

To be a model is a business of itself, and when to remember the number of art schools there are in London alone, and the many artists who are onstantly dependent upon them, it may be realized what a large body of men they are.

The men are mostly Italians, chiefly, I am told, from the neighborhood of Naples. The women are, as a rule, English and have often sat from babies. To find a well formed foot is almost an impossibility among the best of them, owing to the long cramping in boots, but a friend once told me that he had a cast of the foot of an Indian woman that was as beautiful as the foot of a Greek statue.

Our English models lack often the suppleness of figure that distinguishes more southern races, such as the Italian, which is partly accounted for by the heavy, cumbersome clothes our climate necessitates. But such as they are we have to make the best of them, and a really good one is eagerly sought after. —Good Words.

To Keep the Eyes Bright.

To keep the eyes bright and clear all sorts of things are necessary. A good digestion and plenty of sleep rank first. When the eyes are tired, bathing them in very hot water is excellent. No sort of drops or washes should ever go into them except by the order of an oculist.

A Racking Cough

Cured by Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

MRS. P. D. HALL, 217 Genesee St., Lockport, N. Y., says:

"Over thirty years ago, I remember hearing my father describe the wonderful curative effects of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. During a recent attack of La Grippe, which assumed the form of a catarrh, soreness of the lungs, accompanied by an aggravating cough, I used various remedies and prescriptions. While some of these medicines partially alleviated the coughing during the night, none of them afforded me any relief from that spasmodic action of the lungs which would seize me the moment I attempted to lie down at night. After ten or twelve such nights, I was and had about decided to sit up all night in my easy chair, and procure what sleep I could in that way. It then occurred to me that I had a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took a spoonful of this preparation in a little water, and was able to lie down without coughing. In a few moments I fell asleep, and awoke in the morning greatly refreshed and feeling much better. I took a teaspoonful of the Pectoral every night for a week, then gradually decreased the dose, and in two weeks my cough was cured."

Mentor Items.

MENTOR, March 19th, 1894.

R. H. Collor returned from Woodside last week. Got tired of making wood.

The parties who were here from Grand Forks getting out ice for their summer supply returned last week. They only got out half of what they intended to ship, besides wanting to ship 80 carloads they intended to fill the ice house at the lake belonging to Maple Lake Land and Improvement Co. but the weather became too warm, the ice would not hold together in handling.

Election at this place was very lively for a short time, the second ticket came but too late, and the old officers went in again with an overwhelming majority.

T. Rustad has passed around the cigars lately having taken to himself a better half.

A. E. Abbott was married last week to Miss Dina Forden, of Tilden. We wish the new couple ever so much joy and may their life be blessed with happiness.

Jack Bight, the jolly genial gentleman that once was a Mentorite in the years gone by, dropped in on us, surprising everybody yesterday, having been away for several years. He has been laid up with a broken shoulder for 6 months in the hospital at Ashland, Wis., and after recovering he took a trip back to the land that is fairer than Wisconsin, and visited the old folks at home once more. He is still the same Jack in his ways but time has changed his appearance.

Joseph Tagley took a trip to Fertile yesterday.

Mr. Barnes, with the Sphuk & Keyes Drug Co., dropped in to see us to day; no one was sick in our quiet village so no business was transacted.

Mrs. Hannah Thomas died last week of typhoid fever having been sick since she returned from Grand Forks with her daughter's corpse.

Robert Knowles died last Tuesday and was buried in the cemetery at the Episcopal church on Friday the 16th. He had many friends here, also a wife and daughter who mourn the loss of a kind husband and protector.

Some night sharks had the check to run away with a ton of baled hay in town a short time ago. People will continue to be bold and daring when if they, through a mistake are believed to be honest and trustworthy.

T. J. Farden took a run to Beltrami on Thursday last returning on Sunday.

Otto Camp the Dugdale rustler was in town last week shaking hands with old time friends.

Euclid Items.

F. N. Gambell spent Sunday in Crookston.

With Robert Teal at the wigdiass, Euclid's well is progressing nicely.

Mrs. Clara Urodela, of Nebraska, is visiting at her parents Mr. and Mrs. Michael Diever.

Dr. Caplu spent Wednesday in Crookston on business, so he says—keep an eye on him.

Rev. Astwood seldom gets left but our cannon ball was too rapid for him Wednesday morning.

Our dog hunters are practicing at the target now, this is done to prevent cruelty to animals.

Wm. Anglim and Wm. Davidson appraisers of the estate of the late I. W. C. Misner, were in town Tuesday, put in a very busy day.

Tracey McCraken has bought the old Todd house and will move it out on his farm 6 miles northeast of town.

The candy pull given at Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Murrey's in honor of Prof. Gambell's 40th birthday was largely attended, and every one enjoyed themselves to the utmost. The only trouble was several felt quite "stuck up," about the time they went home.

Mrs. John McPhee of Crookston, who has been spending the week with Father and Mother Davidson out on Keystone is visiting Mrs. H. C. Misner while on her home trip.

Charles E. Harrington, the Chunicky M. Depew of Euclid, was seen on our streets yesterday during the storm wearing a straw hat and linen coat. Germun socks and overshoe accompaniement. "An investigation may follow.

Henry C. Stube went to Crookston Friday and since his return it is an unsolved problem whether his ears have grown four or five inches or is it because he has lost such quantities of hair. This question will be solved at the next sewing circle.

Euster Sunday this year falls on March 25th, the first time on that date since 1742, and it will not occur again until 1951.

At the Congregational meeting at the church last Friday, Robert Teal, Dr. J. S. Chapin and H. C. Misner were elected elders, and E. C. Murrey, George Rose and J. S. Chapin deacons.

H. C. Misner and P. Fairweather put away their summer supply of ice this week.

SENATOR BLANCHARD.

Louisiana's new United States senator, Newton C. Blanchard, had sufficient parliamentary experience in the house of representatives to qualify him for a position in the senatorial end of the capitol. He was a member of the house continuously for 19 years and did a great deal of hard work on several important committees, especially on the rivers and harbors, of which he was chairman at the time of his resignation from the house.

Mr. Blanchard represented the Fourth Louisiana district in the house and was elected for the first time in 1875. He is a native of the Pelican State and was born in Rapides parish in 1849. His home is at Shreveport, where he has been engaged in the practice of law ever since his graduation from the law department of the Louisiana university in 1871. From early manhood he has taken an active interest in the politics of his parish and the state, and when he was but 27 years of age he was chosen chairman of the Democratic committee of Caddo parish.

Three years later he represented his parish in the constitutional convention of 1879, which framed the present organiclaw of the state. He served as aide-de-camp, with the rank of major, to the state militia on the staff of Governor Wiltz, and also on that of Governor McEnery and for eight years was a regent of the board of trustees of the University of the South, at Sewanee, Tenn. The legislature which meets in July will elect successors to both Senator Blanchard and Senator Caffery, the governor having authority only to appoint during a legislative recess.

DAN COUGHLIN'S BRAVE WIFE.

She Was a Constant and Conspicuous Attendant at Her Husband's Trial.

It was a pathetic sight at the close of the long Coughlin trial in Chicago when the defendant, after the verdict had declared him guiltless of a crime for which he had once been sentenced to imprisonment for life, turned with streaming eyes from the jury, to whom he had been expressing his grattitude, and for the first time in several years embraced his faithful and devoted wife. With a degree of terest in the result of the trial than any one else except the prisoner at the bar, she had borne that the little woman who had so bravely borne herself during the four months through which the trial dragged should break down and sob convulsively when at last the strain was relaxed and her daring hope fulfilled?

A modest and unobtrusive little woman is Maggie J. Coughlin, but fair to look upon and has never passed the average of her sex. Her loyalty to her husband since he was first pressed of murder five years ago is as true and as touching as any that ever figured in song or story. Throughout both trials of his case she was in attendance at every session of the court and gave no outward sign of the sorrow that was tugging at her heartstrings. Husband and wife never spoke in court. Sometimes their glances met across the space that separated them, and her lips parted in a smile of encouragement to him, while her eyes told the story of wifely devotion that was forbidden to her tongue.

In her love, loyalty and devotion to her husband and in her sublime faith in his innocence Mrs. Coughlin was at once the heroine of the trial, the most pathetic and the most piteous figure in the Criminal case. She is still quite an attractive looking woman, though the years of mental suffering have left their traces upon her, and she looks older than the 27 years of her age that have passed.

Mrs. Coughlin is a native of Pennsylvania, but was reared in Michigan, where, at Ishpeming, she was married to Coughlin about 10 years ago. They have child, a daughter, who was but an infant at the time of her father's arrest. The little one was never told the truth concerning her father's crime, and still believe that he was employed at the prison.

Odds Overdresses.

The novelist Quida is decidedly plain looking, about 50 years old and "overdresses shockingly." She drives on the fashionable thoroughfares in Florence every bright day, a gay picture against the turquoise blue satin of her smart brougham, in an orange colored batist, much trimmed with lace, and a black guipure mantilla.

Why It Rains So Often In London.

The people of London consume 31.88 gallons of water per head each day. They can afford it because the world's metropolis has about 178 rainy days in a year.

A HOOSIER HUMORIST

ODD TRAITS OF POET RILEY'S FRIEND, JAP MILLER.

The Hero of a Famous Poem Tells Notions and Talks Philosophy at Martinsville—A Quaint Autobiography and Characteristic Interview.

Have you ever read James Whitcomb Riley's poem "Jap Miller?" If not, there is a treat in store for you. Lots of people, perhaps the majority of Riley's readers, have supposed that Jap was a creature of the poet's dreams or perhaps a composite picture of Hoosier traits. But he isn't. He's real flesh and blood, with plenty of avoirdupois and lives in Martinsville, where I've seen more than Riley's picture of him is more accurate than the average photograph. Here it is as it is printed in his volume called "Green Fields and Running Brooks:"

Jap Miller, down at Martinsville, is the hlam'dest feller yit.
When he starts in to ax'kilm, other fellers is apt to split.

Years like that month o' blim wasn't made for nothin else
But jes' to angify 'em down and flatter in them pails.

He'll talk you down on tariff, or he'll talk you down on taxes
And prove the pore man pays 'em all, and there's the odds! fact's.

JAP MILLER.
(Taken from life.)

Religion, law or politics, prize fights or base ball—
Jes' treat up Jap a little, and he'll post you on 'em all.
He's the comicalest feller ever tilted back a chair
And tells a show of tobacker kinder like he didn't care.
That's what the feller's strength lays—so-comical noodles and plain.
That hain't no dode about old Jap, you bet you, nary grain.
They 'bested him to counell, and it never turned his bit bed,
And didn't make no difference what emyloyd god.
His didn't dress easy finer or rig out in fancy close.
But his voice in council meetin's a terror to his foes.
He's for the pore man ev'ry time, and in the last campaign
He stumped old Morgan county through the sunshine and the rain.
And held the banner up'arts from a-trailin in the dust,
And cut loose on monopolies, and cuss'd and cuss'd and cuss'd.
He'd tell some frosty story ev'ry now and then, you know—
Tell, blame it, it 'ruz better'n a jack-o'-lantern show!
And I'd go furder yit today to hear old Jap orate
Than enny high toned orator that ever stumped the state.
Way, that 'un he heard Jap Miller, with his specs, sarkastic fun,
He's got more frends than enny candidate that ever run.
No matter what his views are, when he states the same to you,
They allus coincide with yours, same as two and two.
You can't talo home with him, or at least that ain't so seem
To startin in to down him, so you better not commence.
The best way's jes' to listen, like pore humble servant dus,
And jes' concede Jap Miller's the best man ever was.

As may be supposed, Jap is a very popular citizenin Martinsville, and the article there were greatly pleased when the poem was first published. Jap was immensely tickled with it himself. He had several thousand copies of it printed on cards for distribution among his friends. The reverse of some of these he used for business card, advertising the general notion store he keeps. On the backs of others was the following characteristic autobiography:

In the backwoods of Shelby county, Ind., in the spring of 1830, surrounded by wealth and and decaying vegetation, I was born, having 13 brothers and sisters. My parents did not want me. So when brothers or sisters got mad they thumped me. During this early period of my existence I had all the distance! childhood is liable to. Every now and then they thumped me for my weak body. Early in life I developed a wonderful appetite for anything and everything in the grub line. I am a natural product of the backwoods. Polished and refined by the rarest society of Martinsville, if there is anything good in my character, give me credit to my neighbors for their religious influences. If you should find some of the bad, charge it to my associates, for I believe that I am a creature of circumstances. I am not a member of any church, but a lover of good company.

If you are in trouble, come to me. I know what it is. This world is full of sorrow and sadness, and it is also full of sunshine and gladness. Don't be timid, but come and see me. I cannot come to you. I believe in magnetism, but not in spiritualism. My advice is to watch, for there is a devil in ev'ry human hoid. Don't let him in. If you are just doing something to make the world better, you are working for the evil one sure. Plant flowers, speak kind words and feed the poor, and when you cannot live any longer some one will shed a tear. Don't commit suicide, but wait. A man may get you. If you want to see me, come to Martinsville. If I am dead, come to the cemetery. Your friend, JAP MILLER.

Jap has written an account of his first meeting with the poet in a paper read at an Epworth league entertainment. He says when he first saw Riley he knew he was either a poet or a confidence man. They got acquainted quickly, though their questions and answers were all in the shortest possible meter. They sat in an alley back of Miller's store, and Riley made the promise so dear to Hoosier Before leaving, the poet promised to come back at 10 o'clock that night and tell Jap a Dickens Christmas story.

"That night at 10," says Jap, "I went back to the alley, and he was there. No one said anything for some time. Finally the Christmas story was begun, and it was finished at half past 1. We went home. He did not say one word. I did not say good night. In fact, we said nothing at all—we simply faded out of the alley."

QUEER PLANTS USED FOR FOODS.

Little Known Vegetables and Edible Insects of the Prairie.

Over at the department of agriculture, hidden away in an obscure corner, is an odd sort of exhibit of queer foods that lay out of the way people. There is a loaf of bread made from the roasted leaves of a plant allied to the century plant. Another kind of bread is from a dough of juniper berries. These are published by some tribes of Indians, while other Americans cakes out of different kinds of bulbs.

The prairie Indians relish a dish of wild turnips, which civilized people would not be likely to enjoy at all. In the great American desert the "screw beans," which grow on mesquite bushes, are utilized for food. Soap berries furnish an agreeable diet for some sayages in the country, which in California the copper colored aborigines do not disdain the seeds of salt grass.

Also in California the Digger Indians collect pine nuts, which are the seeds of a certain species of pine, sometimes called "pinons," by kindling fires against the trees, thus causing the nuts to fall out of the cones. At the same time a sweet gum exudes from the bark, serving the purpose of sugar. The seeds of gourds are consumed in the shape of mush by Indians in Arizona.

In addition to all these things the exhibit referred to includes a pair of preserved crickets which are eaten in that form by the Indians of Oregon. They are roasted, as are likewise grasshoppers and even slugs. These delicacies are cooked in a pit, being arranged in alternate layers with hot stones. After being thus prepared they are dried and ground to powder. They are mixed with pounded acorns or berries, the flour made in this way being kneaded into cakes and baked in the sun.

The Assiniboines use a kind of seed to stop bleeding at the nose. Among other curious things used for food are acorns, sunflower seeds, grape seeds, flowers of cattails, moss from the spruce fir tree and the leaves of the wild rose. The exhibit embraces a number of models representing grape seeds enormously enlarged. It is actually possible that the species of a grape by the shape of the seed. There is a jar of red willow bark, with Indians mix with tobacco to the extent of one-half. This, however, is only one of a thousand plants that are utilized in a similar fashion.—Washington Star.

A Jamaica Congregation.

In pours the black portion of the congregation. It is composed for the most part of women. They are gorgeously arrayed in silks and cottons of the most bewildering brilliancy, with golden bracelets shaped ornaments in their ears and twists of gold about their necks, and all are bounding and rustling with the utmost complacency and self satisfaction. There is a great many of them the first duty is to take off their boots or shoes. Small wonder, for half of them are in the habit of trudging 6 or 8 miles a day, barefooted to and from market, and the other half, if they do not use their feet so hardly, at any rate never confine them.

Poor or wanting in proper pride indeed is the humble woman who does not raise a pair of boots or shoes for Sunday use! It means agony, you may conceive, to keep pinched in a stiff leather prison two of feet used to free, untrammeled movement, but it has to be borne, and it is borne—for a few minutes. It is managed thus: On the road to church a halt is made at about 200 yards' distance from the building for the purpose of putting on the boots or shoes, which have been hitherto held in the hands. Church ended, the hobbled into and out of boots or shoes taken off, to be again put on as the service drawn to close. Church is again reached, and and a respectable distance from it the instruments of torture are again got rid of, not to be seen again for a week.—All the Year Round.

Electric Quantity and Tension.

Electric quantity and tension—or intensity—are terms based on the assumption that electricity is a fluid. Quantity is the amount of the fluid that a body contains as its charge and the tension or intensity on any point of its surface—translated into electricity lies on the surface—is the depth, or the distance from the same the density of the fluid at that point. The quantity has reference to the number of particles actuated and the amount of force lodged in the charge. Tension is a measure simply to the inductive force lodged in each. Particles that are highly electrified have a great facility to leap to a partner near them, and if powerful enough cause discharge. Tension or intensity, therefore, is the power to overcome and effect discharge. The quantity of electricity passing in a current is estimated by the unit known as Baffin's degree, or the magnetic needle by the chemical decomposition it effects, or by the temperature to which it will raise a wire of a given thickness and material. The tension or intensity of the current is the power by which it is made to act or exert force against resistance, such as that offered by a wet, long or thin conductor. Tension, strictly speaking, is not a property of the current, but of the battery which generates the current.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Where Snow Is Red.

Snow is sometimes found in polar and Alpine regions, where it lies unmelted from year to year and the annual fall is small, colored red by the presence of innumerable small red plants. In its native state the plant consists of brilliant red globules on a gelatinous mass. Red snow was observed by the ancients, as appears in Aristotle referring to it, but it attracted little or no attention until 1760, when Saussure observed it on the Alps and concluded that it was due to the pollen of a plant. It was also noticed by the arctic expedition under Captain Ross on Baffin's bay above on a range of cliffs. the red color penetrating to a depth of 13 feet. Less frequent is green growth on snow.—Ladies' Home Journal.

CONCERNING DREAMS.

They Occupy Only a Few Seconds and Are Affected by Sleep.

Doctors assert that dreams occupy a few seconds only—at most the space of about three minutes. This statement is startling to those who have not noticed for themselves what part time plays in such a connection. The writer has had several opportunities of proving its correctness herself, and many might arrive at a similar knowledge by asking to be awakened a minute or so after falling into a first sleep. All who dream will do so immediately on falling into unconsciousness. Another reliable test is to be found in the sleep that follows upon the morning summons for rising. A few more moments snatched for the tempting after does will not unfrequently mean a dream of a very elaborate nature—one which implies almost as many hours as seconds.

Are dreams affected by the events of our waking hours? is the question that has been asked over and over again, but the result of observation leads one to believe in such being the case—or, according to the importance with which we treat them. In connection with such a question events and solitude can scarcely fail to require separate consideration. Events that are all important to some do not command themselves in that light to others, and this fact leads one to express the opinion that, according to the intensity with which outward events occupy our thoughts, will our dreams be in any way affected by them.

To one woman the exercise of hospitality means the entire surrender of her mental domain to all the worries, real or imaginary, consequent upon the preparations for the contemplated entertainment. To another, the neatful directions once given, there is an immediate return to considerations which outweigh in her opinion the more material ones that hold a whilom place in her thoughts. In the one case culinary failures and visions of indifferent service will probably haunt the dreams that precede or follow that entertainment. In the other no such horrors are involved in the sleeping hours.

There have been startling instances of the brain power to solve difficult questions during sleep. A case in point is that of a lawyer engaged in a criminal defense. The examination of one witness after another seemed only to add to the proof of his client's guilt. However, one night with trying to find some point which might turn the scale in the prisoner's favor, he fell asleep, and in a dream the desired point stood out clearly. On awakening it was immediately worked out, and the verdict of "not guilty" was found consequent upon that revelation afforded during the hours of sleep.

When exercising the imaginative faculties to any great extent, the dreams would always prove the ideal character of the wakeful hours. The composer will dream of the melodies which provide him with an lullaby when dropping into slumber, and the artist and the writer enter the land of dreams in company with those that the pen or the brush are guided to depict with such a loving hand. Plots have been furnished and subjects for the canvas have been suggested over and over again in the land beyond of the night, when to all outward appearances there is nothing but the most peaceful slumber on the part of the sleeper.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

African Disappointments.

As a continent Africa is the home of a vigorous race of mankind, which, while resisting assimilation with European civilization, defies permanent conquest. European travelers, traders, missionaries, conquerors, may at their will and at their peril penetrate into this continent of Africa; but they cannot stay a day, and on the morrow the faint traces of their passage are obliterated by the permanent growth of barbarism. Grudgingly as it is sometimes conceded, it is nevertheless a fact that the bulk of the population of Africa is still untouched even by western civilization. I for one cannot believe that Africa will ever be incorporated or brought within the pale of western progress, for in order that Africa may progress it is absolutely essential that it be developed along natural lines, but as yet the inherent powers of native genius have neither been discovered nor have there been any cohesion among native tribes and in view of European rapacity are they, even if discovered, ever likely to be encouraged or fostered. No; Africa is a continent fated to be conquered and exploited by the heirs of civilization, to whom it may pay tribute, but homage never.—Nineteenth Century.

To Keep One's Youth.

A distinguished English scientist, Mr. William Kinnear, in a magazine article insists that the secret of perennial youth is to be found in the use of distilled water and phosphoric acid. He says that death, or disease that produces death, is caused by the presence in the human system of calcareous or earthy matter, and that the drinking of distilled water, which is itself a great solvent, and the use also of from 10 to 15 drops of diluted phosphoric acid in each tumblerful of water will remove such deposite and prolong human life to the very utmost limit. In several of the great hotels in New York distilled water is provided at the table and for the use of the guests in their rooms, and the advertisement of this fact attracts many patrons.—Detroit Free Press.

About Gingerbread.

The honestly luxury, gingerbread, has been popular ever since the fourteenth century. It was then made and sold in Paris du those days it was prepared with ryemeal made into a dough, and ginger and other spices, with sugar or honey, were kneaded into it. It was introduced into England by the court of Henry IV by their festivals and was soon brought into general use, treacle being after a time employed in the manufacture instead of honey.—Popular Magazine.

Extreme Agony.

I would be apparently well as going to bed but in an hour I would be awakened by shooting pains in the joints, and could not move without increased pain. Anything applied did not give relief until the doctor recommended blistering, which, though severe treatment, lessened the pain. During all my trouble I had thought seriously of taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. Finally I began with the medicine and I simply say that

CHAPTER IV.

Every one had given up all hope of ever seeing my brother again when one person, if a child of 9 may be called a person, strongly and continually began to assert that he was alive. How I became possessed of this conviction I now proceed to relate. It happened in this manner: On the night of the 31st of July, exactly three weeks and a day after the disappearance, I had a very singular experience, which, in spite of all absurd theories of brain waves, telepathy and I know not what, I still firmly believe to have been an instance of divine interposition. It was upon a Wednesday night, as I particularly remember, because my father always had service on Wednesday nights. I had been to church and returned with the rest of the family. I went to bed as usual at 7:30 in good health, if not in good spirits. Truly during those weeks we were all terribly afflicted and cast down. Between 8 and 9 o'clock as I lay wide awake I saw not a dream, but a clear, waking vision. At the time I was not thinking of Jack at all. I had just got into bed and was lying on my back and looking upward into the dark. I became aware of a light not far from me on the left and thought at first that some one had come into the room with a lamp. Turning a little to one side, I saw a fire burning and smoky. From which went up a good many sparks. This was all I saw at first, but presently I became aware that some one was sitting near it with his back toward me, bareheaded and perfectly still. It was Jack. I sat up and called him by his name. But he made no answer and did not move. Then I asked him a succession of short quick questions as to what he was doing, why he did not answer me, etc. There was darkness all round the place illuminated by the fire, but afterward I remembered having seen rough shelving, pots of ragged rock on which the firelight faintly played and flickered. I did see clearly a large lish which lay beside him on a flagstone close to the fire. To judge by his attitude, he appeared to be gazing intently into the heart of the blaze. Once he stooped forward a little as if to feed the fire. Still shouting questions, I sprang from my bed and rushed toward him, intending to lay my hand on his shoulder. Then I came violently into collision with something solid; it was a wardrobe which stood against the wall of the room in front of my bed. Recovering myself, I could see the vision still before me as clear and distinct as if I saw it with my eyes; indeed I have said the least doubt that I did see it with my eyes. Then soft arms were laid around me, and I was raised up. It was my mother, who had run upstairs, hearing my cries. She put me back in bed. All the whole family had rushed to the room greatly frightened by my screamings and loud, excited talk. Though there were candles in the room, I still saw the apparition, vision or whatever it might be called, and still urging my mother and brothers to see it, too, was deposited in bed and more forcibly held down; then when I was again able to look in the same direction the vision was gone.

Of course my mother concluded at once that I was ill, laboring perhaps under an acute gastric attack, the commencement of a gastric fever, and I was treated in the assumption that I was suffering from that common child's malady and dosed with the usual medicines. My mother was surprised in the morning to find no signs of illness upon me and still more so when the doctor declared that I was perfectly well.

Though I was kept in bed, my brothers were admitted to see me. Of course I told over and over again the whole story of the vision.

"Jack is alive somewhere," I kept saying, "and must be searched for."

"Why do you go on like that, Charley?" they said. "Don't you know that he is dead? It was a dream."

"It was no dream," I answered. "I was as broad awake as you are. I saw him, and how could I see him if he wasn't alive?"

"But how could he be in the room? There is no sign of fire here. How can you be so foolish?"

"No," I replied, "he wasn't in the room, of course. When I struck the press, which stands against the wall here, I could see him still beyond me. So of course he wasn't in the room. But he was somewhere else, and I saw him, and that's true."

On the following night, shortly after the big mahogany clock in the lobby struck 8, I continued to watch intently for the reappearance of the vision. Nothing came, however, though I heard the clock strike 9. But on the following night I had an experience quite as surprising to myself, though not to others, as that vision of the fire and my brother sitting between me and it! A few minutes after the clock struck 8 I seemed to grow suddenly and curiously cold, and while still staring out into the darkness I was aware of the words the "Devil's Parlor" coming into my mind. I did not hear the words at all with my ears. It was as if my mind had ears and that I heard the words in that way, very clear and distinct, but not at all as if spoken by any audible voice. I did not cry out or make any noise on this occasion, but resolved to stay awake and tell my brothers when they came to bed. I fell asleep, however, before they came and on awaking I awoke them and told what had happened. They treated me as little Joseph was treated by his brothers: nevertheless I saw them look significantly at each other. After breakfast and before school home they went off together, Ned bringing his cornopean with him. The "Devil's Parlor" was an unspeaking cleft, the opening to many deep and mysterious subterranean holes on the side of a long hill which lay about a mile westward from the rectory. As I often heard learned, my two brothers went to the cleft, shouted down into it both together, and Ned blew his cornet-a-piston, mouth downward, making huge echoes and reverberations there. Then they listened, but heard no reply. They hardly spoke to me at all after this and never about my mysterious visions and experiences. The same day I took from the sideboard in the dining room a great housemade brown cake, and going off by myself rolled it down the "Devil's Parlor." Two days afterward I took and rolled down another and continued to tell every one that Jack was alive and in the "Devil's Parlor." I had rolled down some half dozen cakes in this manner when my mother, who was aware of the rapid disappearance of her cakes, discovered me in the act of making off with one.

That night she and my father had a consultation on my case, and the following day I was sent off to an uncle and aunt who lived in an adjoining county. Of course my parents thought that my mind was affected, and my mother attributed it to excessively long school hours and too much brain work. At my uncle's I had nothing to do but amuse myself, and gradually I came to think that perhaps what my uncle and aunt said was true, and that these experiences were only dreams of a lively imaginations, which was the expression they used. I was to come home at Christmas, but early in November a messenger arrived with a letter from Ned addressed to my uncle, telling him to send me home at once. Something very-strange had occurred in the meantime—something that caused my visions and voices to be regarded at home in a quite new light.

CHAPTER V.

EDWARD FREEMAN'S NARRATIVE—THE LOST BROTHER.

In the month of October, long after the public excitement caused by the disappearance of my brother had subsided, and even after the local interest caused by Charley's curious behavior and conversation had died away, the suspicion, indeed the conviction, that John had met with foul play, while it remained general, was nevertheless made our own grief only the deeper and bitterer. Every one believed now that my brother had been murdered by Dhu-Corrig, where Jack was last seen, was not within sight of my house in the neighborhood, but in a secluded and secret and farm close by occupied by a returned Irish-American called Melody, a very big man, noisy, uncouth and given to drink. He was poor now, though it was he came home he had money. His wife was dead. He lived here with his mother, who was bedridden, and three children, the eldest of them called Dunnie, who was a pupil in my father's parochial school. No one liked Melody, nor am I surprised, his ways were so different from those of the rest of the people. One day I overheard a listener in the glebe say to another, "Melody is drinking again, wherever he got the money." I noticed the remark, for on the previous evening I had seen him staggering home from the adjoining village. He endeavored to enter into conversation with me, but I stepped out and could hear him bawling some impertinence after me. Melody had money and was drinking. The fact caused a good deal of interest and curiosity in the neighborhood.

A few weeks after the school master called at the glebe and inquired for me. I was let into the kitchen and noticed that his face was flush and pale. I brought him into the dining room and asked whether he was ill. He said "No," and was silent. I, too, was silent and only looked at him. He had a piece of paper in his hand which he kept twirling between his fingers in a nervous manner.

"I came about Master John," at last he suddenly said. "I fear, sir, there has been foul play. You know I taught his mathematics for his Michaelmas examination last year and was a good deal with him in the evenings. He then showed me his ring. It had a Latin inscription on the inside. Not knowing Latin, I do not rightly recollect the words, though I read them at the time, and he translated them for me.

"Master Edward, Master Edward," he cried in great agitation and laying the paper on the table, "are those they?"

"They are," said I. We stood trembling and looked at each other. Written on the paper in a large schoolboy hand were the words, "Nec sperne duriam."

"This is terrible, Mr. Gloster," I said at last. "Tell me all." He did so and to the following effect:

Dannie Melody, it seems, came to school one day looking very big and important and behaved so badly that he had to be punished. The boy's singular behavior arose from the fact that he was the possessor of a gigantic bill which he said his father had given to him. As Dannie was never known to have even a ha'penny his bright sixpence excited a great deal of curiosity, and all the boys were very eager to find out the cause of his father's unexpected munificence. Dannie, however, refused to tell, but, it seems, after having pledged him to fidelity, communicated the secret to a little pal of his. One day Mr. Gloster surprised these two friends idling at their desk, or rather examining together a piece of foreign paper. Before Dannie could conceal it Mr. Gloster snatched it up and demanded the meaning of the characters with which it was inscribed. They recalled to him the legend in the ring. The boy began to cry and said that he could not tell, that his father would beat him if he did. When the school was dismissed, Mr. Gloster kept Dannie back and at length got the secret from him.

Dannie, it seems, coming home one day found his father sitting by the fire and examining a gold ring. The moment the boy appeared he put it hastily into his pocket. He came back drunk from the village that night and slept long into the next morning. Dannie, the child's inquisitiveness, searched his father's pockets till he found the ring, and after examining it curiously for a long time finally the whim seized him of copying out the strange words which he found on the inside. He kept the copy and put the ring back in the pocket from which he had taken it. When his father awoke and got up, he called him to the house and said to him: "Dannie, you saw a ring with me last night. Well, you're to tell no one about it. If you do, I'll break every bone in your body." When he gave Dannie the sixpence as a bribe and made him give a solemn promise of secrecy. That was all Dannie had to tell except that his father the same day went to our nearest market town, Ballymoher, and sold the ring there, as Dannie believed, for he came back with money, but without the ring.

Mr. Gloster wished to know from me whether he should tell all this to my parents. Terrible as was the news and great as would be the shock to them, especially to my poor mother, I thought so. Of the effect upon them I shall say nothing. Letters to the evening Mr. Gloster and I set out for the house of Mr. Watkins, the subinspector of police. When Mr. Watkins heard this strange story, he resolved to arrest at once Melody and his son. A warrant was procured from the nearest magistrate, and about nightfall we came to Melody's cabin. It was absurdly small to be the abode of such a big man. The thatch was secured by lay ropes held in their places by stones attached to the ends, a row of which hung all round the cabin under the eaves like a necklace. The tenant's logs consisted of a sod a little distance in from the hovel, which led from the high road down the steep cliff to the sands of Dhu-Corrig. As we approached the big Irish-American issued in a stooping attitude from the little door-way and came along the causeway which overhung the haw—that is to say, the small yard lying in front of the cabin door. He saw us, a visible change of expression passed over his face.

One of the constables, showing him the warrant, laid his hand on his shoulder, saying at the same time, "I arrest you in the name of the queen."

"What for?" said he, looking very angry.

"For the murder of John Freeman."

Melody turned pale and, staggered. "Gentlemen," he said, "I never did it."

"Melody," said the subinspector, "Mr. Freeman's ring was seen in your possession. You may make any statement or explanation that you please, but I warn you that what you say will be used against you hereafter at your trial."

"Gentlemen," said Melody, "I'll tell you all I know about the ring. One morning I seen a flock of pigeons in the black hold beyant there that has the heap of white stones in the gable of it. I crept under the fence, and when I got near threw a stone or two at them. They fled away, but was of them flew so bad and sat down again so soon that I followed after and killed her. The ring was fastened to her leg with a piece of cord. I was afeared that some one would claim it on me, so I tuhld Dannie not to tell."

"And the ring, where is it?" said Mr. Watkins sternly.

Melody hesitated for a moment or two; then he said boldly:

"Sir, I losht it."

I perceived at once and every one there perceived, too, that he lied. The pigeon story, too, though told so circumstantially, we of course disbelieved. Dannie was arrested, too, and lod away crying bitterly. Melody was lodged in the county jail, and the boy taken in charge by the police lest his evidence should be in any way tampered with pending the trial.

Melody's cabin was searched by the police, but without discovering there any further evidences of his guilt. It was, however, now recalled that something like a fracas had occurred between my brother and the Irish-American on the evening before the disappearance. That was the evening of my brother's return from Dublin. He arrived unexpectedly by the post car from Ballymoher and walked home from the village of Dhu-Corrig, which was only three-quarters of a mile from the rectory. As he was leaving the village Melody was seen to join him, he being then in a tipsy condition. What occurred between them in the way of conversation was not heard, but after awhile my brother was seen to give him a strong push, not a blow, which sent him staggering across the road, after which he fell into the grip. Jack walked on then, taking no further notice of him. Jack said nothing about this affair to any of us.

Of the subsequent investigations and inquiries of the police I shall say little. Their theory of coarse was that Melody on the evening of the disappearance had joined my brother in the dusk of the evening, had struck and stunned him then on Dhu-Corrig, rifled the body and flung it into the water. Melody's arrest took place on the 15th of October, and of course created a great deal of excitement over the whole country. A detective came down from Dublin, but no further evidence was discovered against him save indeed the ring itself. This was found with a jeweler in Ballymoher and at once surrendered to the police. The jeweler, Mr. Campion, admitted that he had bought it from Melody, who had previously sold him a watch and other trinkets which he said he had brought home with him from America. I drove into town with Mr. Watkins and at once identified the ring.

The constabulary were still searching for further evidences of Melody's guilt when something happened which in all probability was the means of saving an innocent man's life—viz., complete corroboration of Melody's incredible story about the pigeon and the ring.

CHAPTER VI.

JACK'S CAPTIVITY AMONGST THE DANONS.

One morning in the middle of October I was looked from my bedroom window while dressing I saw a flock of pigeons of the slate colored variety, common on the coast, fly over the lawn and swoop a little as if they saw a slight in an adjoining field which had been tilled that summer. I felt a strong desire to have a shot at them, though I had not once taken out a gun since my brother's disappearance. One only gun, by the way, was Jack's, a long single barreled muzzle loader.

Having finished dressing I charged quickly, passed through the wood, and surveying the field from a distance saw the flock moving about in the dark colored stubble and over the fence of the field till I came within shot of them, as I judged. Waiting till I had three in a line, I fired and killed three. As I was bringing them home in triumph I noticed a piece of linen wrapped round the leg of one of the birds and fastened by cord. I cut the cord and unwinding the linen rag found it was the corner of a handkerchief, and here came the incident—they were Jack's—viz. J. F. For a moment I stood rooted to the spot, then in a flash of joy ran to the house and rushed into the breakfast room where the whole family was already assembled at prayers. "Jack is alive!" I cried, screaming, "Jack is alive!". Again I pass over the agitation of our family circle, for nothing are not easy to write about. We now saw that Melody's story of the ring was true. It was evident that Jack's imprisonment was not secret, and without other means of communicating with us, but left upon this plum. That Jack was alive when he sent down these carriers was plain, but was he alive now? Perhaps these messengers had been dispatched by him shortly after his disappearance and before bunger had made an end of him. My little brother Charley's vision then was true. My parents bitterly reproached themselves for not having given heed to that strange vision, which they now regarded as a special and miraculous interposition of Providence. I, however, begged Charley should be sent for at once in order that we might examine him more carefully about what he had seen. The coachman, saddling one of the horses, galloped off straight, taking with him the key and a healthy scribbled note, and just caught the mail car which was on point of starting from the village of Dhu-Danon, and gave the letter to him, bringing Charley with him. Meantime the police and coast guards were communicated with by my brother-in-law, and aido was in motion. I and my next brother, Owen, attended by some workmen, went down to the haw, where, as was the "Devil's Parlor." We had with us candles and matches and a very long rope. When we arrived there we shouted down the mouth of the chasm. We did this repeatedly without hearing any reply. This I expected, for I had shouted down there before. I then knotted the end of the rope round my chest and had them lower me into the cleft. Soon I was in dense darkness. The fire, if I may call it so, was at first crooked and ragged, then described sheer, so that I was in midair and could touch nothing with my hands. At another time I might have been afraid, but the hope of rescuing Jack drove out all fear. At length I felt my feet on the ground, gravel as I knew by the feel and the noise. I shouted, but there was no response. I struck a match and lit my candle. Almost the first thing I saw was Charley's cakes lying about. I did not count them. Had I done so the discovery and rescue of Jack might have come sooner and by a different way. The fact was that the avenue by which I had descended was a blind alley, not at all the same as the "Devil's Parlor." The place in which I now found myself was not at all what I had expected. It was like a small room walled with rock and paved with gravel. There were only bones of animals here and the bones which poor Charley fancied had been eaten by Jack. I gave the prearranged signal—a jerk at the rope—and was slowly drawn up out of this dark den. Till now all believed that the "Devil's Parlor" was a huge subterranean cavern. Five miles farther on there was a similar cleft leading into another cavern toward the west of the known depth. We went thither, and I descended that too. Here I came near to being drowned. It communicated with the sea and was filled at the bottom with salt water, into which, without seeing it, I was lowered, and in fact fell with a sonse. By the slackening of the rope those above concluded that I had reached the bottom. Though I tugged vigorously at the rope they heard nothing of it. I could not tug strongly while I was swimming, and then the great length of rope rendered it, I suppose, less sensitive. Here, too, all the way down and up again I shouted at intervals and heard no response. It was night when we returned home. No sign of Jack had been discovered by any one that day. The coast guards had been out since morning visiting the rocks and islands, of which there were several in the neighborhood, and had been as unsuccessful as myself. When I awoke next day, it seemed to me that I had had a very bad dream. I felt, nevertheless, but the moment my mother saw me she ordered me to my room. I refused to go, and my father had to exert his parental authority in a very stern manner before I could be got to obey. In the afternoon Charley arrived. I was aware of the fact, but of little more, for by this time the fever had so grown upon me that I was beginning to be unconscious. After this I remember no more till I began to be convalescent after a severe attack of brain fever. The searching for Jack had gone on without me during the remainder of October and the beginning of November while I lay at death's door. But the searchers had discovered no sign or trace of my brother. The police were utterly nonplused. I heard that a very clever detective had been sent down from Dublin, but after wasting a fortnight had returned, saying that we were all mad. I heard, too, that during all these weeks little Charley regularly every second day, wet or fine, used to go to the "Devil's Parlor" and roll down his brown cake. My mother made no objection. He still continued to do it even after I began to move about and after I had declared to him that there was nothing at the bottom of the cavern but gravel, bones and the cakes which he was wasting. I began to think of forcibly restraining him from this practice, for it was killing my mother, who used to weep for a long time after she had given him his cake and see him off. The neighbors watched him with the utmost compassion, and indeed I have never seen anything so pathetic.

"Was it said in your dream that Jack was in the 'Devil's Parlor.'" I asked him.

"No," he said, "but I believe that he is there without being told. I told myself."

When I was sufficiently convalescent to be able to move about again, I organized a search party of myself and believe we visited every cave and nook along the coast for 15 miles on either side of Dhu-Corrig. We searched all the islands and isolated rocks out in the sea, though they had already been searched by the coast guards. That Jack was or had been in some cavern I knew. These slate colored pigeons, blue rocks as they are called, roost in caves. Indeed we never called them anything but slate pigeons, for example, could do it—had been driven down and under the sea. I knew that under such circumstances he would not go his rod and wing view? Perhaps these messengers had been dispatched by him shortly after his disappearance and before hunger had made an end of him. My little brother Charley's vision then was true. My parents bitterly reproached themselves for not having given heed to that strange vision, which they now regarded as a special and miraculous interposition of Providence. I, however, begged Charley should be sent for at once in order that we might examine him more carefully about what he had seen. GOTHAM'S BIG VANS.

HOW THEY ARE USED FOR LONG AND SHORT DISTANCE MOVING.

Breakage, Time and Trouble Saved by These Large Vehicles—The Business of Moving Duy Reduced to a Science—Travel by Train and Steamboat.

The estimator for a storage and van company will walk into a house or a flat and estimate within a cubic foot of how much space the contents will take up packed, and he doesn't make any elaborate computations either. He just walks in a leisurely way through a house from roof to cellar or through a flat from end to end, and when he is through he knows. Houses vary greatly. One three story house might have in it three van loads. The same sized flike it next door might have six, but the estimator rarely makes a mistake. He might get half a van load out of the way in estimating a six load house, but this would be quite unusual. He would be much more likely to hit the mark.

The contract price for moving means for moving from any floor to any floor. If it is desired, the company will send barrels, boxes and packing materials and men to pack crockery, bronzes, books, bric-a-brac, and so on, at 75 cents a barrel or its equivalent in space. The time for loading and for starting the vans would depend somewhat on where the goods were going. If they were going 40 miles into the country, the vans would be loaded the afternoon before and would start at 2 o'clock in the morning. They would arrive at their destination at about 10 o'clock the same morning, the horses would be put up and the vans unloaded, the start on the return would be made at about 3 o'clock the next morning, and the arrival in the city would be at about 10.

Vans are specially constructed with large bodies and low wheels for transportation by steamboat or railroad. Whether horses are taken on such trips depends altogether on the distance the vans are going. If to a nearby point, the horses go along; if, to a distant point, it is cheaper to hire horses there. If vans were going to Newport, for instance, they would be shipped on a freight propeller, whose derrick would pick them up like great boxes of goods and load them on deck. On such a trip horses would not be taken, but hired in Newport for the loading there. Horses would meet the vans at the dock upon their return here. Vans are used at least as far as Louisville, south to Baltimore and Washington. In transfers, say to Long Branch and other nearby points, the horses go with the vans.

Fifty miles would ordinarily be about the limit of the distance that vans could go on their own wheels, but they sometimes go greater distances. Forty miles would be not at all unusual, and trips of 30 miles and less are common. The drivers know the roads within 40 miles around New York well. They know where the paved roads are and these that are most nearly level, and where the poorer or more difficult roads are, too, and so they know what sort of an outfit to take. Where the roads are good is a distinction the vans would be drawn by four horses. On bad or hilly roads they would take six horses. It is interesting to note, as the result of the drivers' observations, that the roads around New York are better than they used to be, and that they are steadily improving. Not infrequently the van companies move people from one point to another outside of the city. For example, a gentleman who lived in a town near Bridgeport, Conn., who was about to move to a place near Tarrytown, in this state, contracted with a van company of this city to move him. Three vans went up from the city on this expedition. The work took about two weeks. Here the distance to be covered was so great that it was impossible to make it in a single day, and the vans had to sit at night and went on in the morning. They went to and fro in this way until the work was completed. The bill for this job came to nearly $1,800.

The van companies move goods between points in the city as well as to and from it, and besides moving household goods they will estimate on and contract to remove the contents of a store or a building to another store or building. A recent moving job in this city came to about $1,200. Goods moving in vans on their own wheels are not insured. In transit by rail or boat they are insured at the request of the owner. The cost of moving by vans depends, of course, largely on distance, and it varies somewhat according to season and circumstances. It is cheaper between seasons, and the nature of the roads to be covered might have something to do with it. To Morristown, N. J., distance about 30 miles, the price in the busy season would be $65 a van and expenses, the expenses being ferriage and tolls. To a point, say, 12 miles from the city, in the busy season, the rate would be $20 a van and expenses.

The storage and van business has increased greatly in New York in recent years. The population of the city and its suburbs has increased rapidly, and there are now more moving days than formerly. Many leases now run from April or October, besides those that run from May, so that the business is more distributed through the year. The number of those who go out of town for the summer has increased greatly. Many persons regularly every year move household goods enough to furnish or partly furnish a house at the seashore or in the country. There are many persons who give up their rents in spring and store their effects and go away until fall.—New York Sun.

Talking and Writing.

The Older Dumas.

Of his Sheridan-like dealings with tradesmen an anecdote is told. During a search at ice a neighbor of Dumas sent to a dealer for some and was told that the limited stock on hand was kept for the use of the famous author. Then the gentleman sent again and bade his servant ask for the ice in the name of M. Dumas. The plan succeeded. The ice was given, and the servant put down the money on the counter. "Ah," cried the tradesman, "give me back that ice! Now I know that you are not from M. Dumas. He never pays ready money."

"My father," said M. Dumas on "once told me that if he could persuade a new life he would be a handsome woman till 20, a victorious general from 30 to 50 and a cardinal in his old age." Dumas, as he related this paradoxical desire, glanced toward Rossini and added: "I should prefer to close my life as an illustrious composer. Mon cher Rossini, when you enter a room, the very lacquey pronounces your name with pride as he announces you."

Then turning to the company he continued: "Annonce, for instance, M. Duc d'Aumale and Signor Rossini a same monsant and see on which side heads and 441 hearts will incline it." All eyes would be on the great musician who created "Il Barbiere de Sevigila." And then we all filled our glasses with arrogance of the vintage of 1811 and drank the health of Rossini. The old composer did not rise, but his face broke out into voluminous smiles as he shook the hand of the author of "La Dame Aux Camellias."—Philadelphia Times.

Pompeiian Business Notes.

A number of business announcements are to be found at Pompeii, that brisk little city to whose daily life the energy of Vesuvius has lent a kind of immortality. Here we get a large number of miscellaneous inscriptions dealing with matters of daily life, announcements of forthcoming gladiatorial games, edicts of magistrates, wine sellers' attempts to captivate customers, rewards for lost or stolen property, houses for sale or to let and other things of that sort.

We learn from one announcement that a glass of wine could be got for 1 as—about 3 farthings—while for 4 asses a good table real Falernian could be had. Another inscription informs us that a denarius—about 7¾ pence—was paid for washing a tunic, and the date when the last of April, is carefully recorded by the writer. Whether she was the laundress or the patient in question we are not decided, but it seems at least that she was in the habit of marking up her washing account on the walls of her house.

There are several such inscriptions on the same wall of this particular house, all dated—the 20th of April, a tunic; the eighteenth, on the 7th of May, a particle which need not be particularized, while on the day following two tunics are scored.—Macmillan's Magazine.

Dishes and Platters of Gold.

Queen Victoria's wonderful set of table furniture is kept in two fireproof chambers and is said to represent a cash value of £20,000,000. Among it is the golden table service made for George VI., calculated for 120 guests and containing the famous crystal champagne cooler which is large enough for a bathtub. There are many pieces in the service formerly belonged to Queen Elizabeth, besides splendid solid gold vessels from India, Siam and China. The value of the collection is a teacup once owned by Charles XII and a gold peacock made for George III at a cost of £40,000.—St. Louis Republic.

A Difficult Feat.

A member of a Houston volunteer fire company did not appear at the scene of the conflagration until after the fire was under control. The chief of the fire department reprimanded him bitterly for his neglect of duty.

"It's not my fault," replied the fireman. "I live quite a distance from the fire."

"That's no excuse. You must move nearer to the next fire."—Texas Siftings.

"And she refused you?"

"Yes."

"Perhaps it was a beety answer?"

"No. She took care that it shouldn't be. She sent it by a messenger boy."—Washington Star.

THE BLUE AND THE GRAY.

Preparations For a Grand Reunion on the Battlefield of Shiloh.

The veterans of Shiloh are to hold a grand reunion on that historic battlefield on April 6 and 7, the anniversary of the battle. Invitations have been extended to every living participant in the famous engagement, no matter in which side participant in the reunion, the blue and the gray will be equally honored, and "Yanks" and "Johnny Rebs" will fraternize on the field where 22 years ago they sought to exterminate each other. Among the prominent men who will be present are General Lew Wallace, General John A. McClernand of Illinois, General B. M. Prentiss of Missouri, General S. D. Lee of Mississippi, General James R. Chalmers of Tennessee, General William Preston Johnson of New Orleans and others.

The preservation of the battlefield of Shiloh as a national memorial park is a matter that has engaged the earnest attention for several years of many of the survivors of the troops on both sides who met there in the terrible battle of April 6 and 7, 1862. The Shiloh Battlefield association, which has this for its main object, now numbers among its members some 10,000 of the Federal and Confederate soldiers who fought at Shiloh, representing every regiment, battery and command that took part in the battle. All these are anxious that the field be preserved from the desecrating march of "improvement," that the graves of the unknown dead on both sides who are buried there be properly cared for, and that the positions of the various commands in the contest be marked while there are men yet living who can properly locate them.

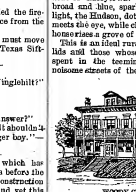
The association has brought the matter to the attention of congress and has done a great deal of work in the way of influencing public opinion in favor of its project. It recently sent a committee to the battlefield and secured options on the land from the various owners at what are thought to be very reasonable prices.

Colonel E. T. Lee, secretary of the association, on behalf of its committee, reported to the congressional committee which had charge of the matter in Washington that an appropriation will soon be secured for the purchase of the land and the maintenance of a memorial park like those at Gettysburg and Chickamauga. Major General John A. McClernand of Springfield, Ill., is president of the division at the battle, is president of the association.

HELEN GOULD'S CHARITY.

A Fresh Air Home For City Children Near the Hudson.

As is generally known, Miss Helen Gould is trying to do as much good as possible with her portion of the colossal fortune amassed by her father. One of the most worthy of her numerous philanthropic enterprises is the fresh air home for city children and teachers at Woody Crest, near Tarrytown, on the Hudson. The house was the property of the late Jay Gould and is situated a quarter of a mile from Miss Helen Gould's favorite country place, Lyndhurst. The house is like those at Gettysburg and Chickamauga. Like those at Gettysburg and Chickamauga. Major General John A. McClernand of Springfield, Ill., is president of the division at the battle, is president of the association.



WOODY CREST.

ery two weeks, beginning early this spring, from 30 to 50 children will enjoy an outing at Woody Crest. The children will come from kindergarten and day nurseries in New York, and often a sick, tired mother will go with her little one.

During the winter Woody Crest was the home of a small colony of little orphan girls, most of them incurables and all of them waifs and strays on the great sea of humanity, who there experience the only happiness their poor hopeless lives can ever hope to know. Books and games are provided for their amusement, and they pass their time out of doors in pleasant weather or in a playroom and workshop that has been fitted up for them in the house, where they can indulge in such instructive amusements as printing and scroll sawing, for which the means are provided.

Cheap Rates to California.

The Northern Pacific Railroad company has put into effect a series of low round trip rates to California points. Tickets are good until June 15th, 1894 and are good for stop-over under certain conditions.

These rates will enable those desiring to do so, to spend the winter in Southern California or to visit the mid-winter fair to be held at San Francisco. This latter event will undoubtedly be second only to the World's Fair, and will repay a visit as it will exhibit the resources and capabilities of California.

Buddie's Methodicalness.

Never has a man been more methodical in his work than Professor Raskin, nor more precise in obedience to the rules he has laid down for his guidance. His working hours have always been from 7 in the morning until noon, and to no account whatever would he exceed the limit. Within those five daily hours has all his work been produced—books, lectures and addresses, public and private correspondence. Work in the afternoon has always been by himself forbidden, and even to look the form of reading. His earlier works, of course, were written at Herne or at Denmark Hill or while on a tour on the continent. His later ones have been wrought in his Tarnen room upon the walls and ranged in ranks in the great Turner cabinet upon the floor, with its bookcases of wonderful minerals and manuscripts and early black letter books and the original manuscripts of a half dozen of Scott's novels, while the superb Angelica Della Robbia "Virgin and Child" over the fireplace at one end and the mineral cabinet at the other. With these about me did Ruskin show them to me on my first visit—the nerviest collection of anything in the equally perfect collection of gold ores and the rest.—McClure's Magazine.

The Chinese Dancehook.

I am reminded of a picture I purchased some time ago. I bought it because I thought it was the ugliest picture I had ever seen. I tried to find out the history or meaning of the thing for some time without any success until a few days ago while visiting Chinatown I found the ugly mess was one of the Taoist gods. In his early days his spirit had the power of leaving his body and roaming over the universe alone. When he did so some of these trips, several came and ate his body. So when his spirit returned it found only a few bones. After hunting around for a few days the spirit found the body of a dead dancehack beggar who walked with an iron cane in his hand. The spirit entered in this body and has lived in it ever since. Tih Kwaiet, for that is the god's name, has a crutch in his hand and a gourd in his mouth. Whenever he opens his mouth the breath has not flown out of the gourd.—Canton Cor. Louisville Courier-Journal.

Seen From a Balloon.

A remarkable feature is the view from a balloon is the bottom of lakes and ponds. While over Lake Erie Carl E. Myers, of Buffalo, was amply the lake is a mere fathom of a small lake or pond can be clearly seen, and Mr. Myers believes that on a clear day an accurate and good vision could see from a height of a mile submarine objects at a depth of 400 or 500 feet beneath the water.

SURROUNDED BY MYSTERY!

A Great Mistake.

A recent discovery is that headaches dizziness, dullness, confusion of the mind etc., are due to derangement of the nerve forces, which supply the brain with nerve force; that indigestion, dyspepsia, neuralgia, wind in stomach, etc., arise from the derangement of the nerve centers supplying the stomach with nerve force. This is the cause of many diseases of the heart and liver. The nerve system kills a tubercular sufferer as well as does by the accompanying germs. The little white lines are the nerves which convey the nerve force to the various parts of the body. Every disease of the human system is caused by the failure of the nerve force to reach the part affected. Dr. Miles' Nervine is a reliable remedy for all nervous diseases, such as headache, nervous debility, prostration, sleeplessness, dizziness, hysteria, nervous chills, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, at most prices by the Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind. Book of advice, $1 per bottle. Sold by Crookston Drug Co. Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine positively contains no opiates or dangerous drugs.

'Round Home.

Mrs. Tom Harris is recovering.

Wild geese have been seen in goodly numbers flying northward.

W. T. Nicholson and wife of Grand Forks were visiting friends in the city last week.

Ira C. Richardson of Thief River Falls spent Sunday in the city on his way home from St. Paul.

Wm. Sanders was over from East Grand Forks on Tuesday interested in tax matters at the court house.

Mrs. Chas. Misner returned home last Thursday evening from a pleasant visit with relatives and friends in Euclid.

Rev. C. B. Brecount of Warren is assisting Rev. Squier in conducting the revival services in the First M. E. church this week.

The Northern Pacific evening train will wait until after the McKinley speech on March 28th, so that all who wish to can start for home that evening.

A. J. Molstad's little boy was severely burned by vitriol on Sunday. In some way he got a quantity of it in his bare mail was terribly burned. Is doing nicely now.

The funeral of little Aggie, the adopted daughter of Mr. and Mrs. O. O. Christinson was attended on Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock. A large number of friends and neighbors were in attendance.

Take your grain to the McManus & Farley Roller mill. We grind for cash or toll the grain, and will take dry salt wood in exchange for grinding or feed. We grind every day except Sunday. [46-49]

Judge Spendley has rented his farm on section 8 in Crookston to Karl Hardie for a term of three years. Mr. Hardie is contemplating putting in a lot of vegetables and establishing a market garden while he engages in in grain raising on the side.

Chafin, the Broadway photographer, is making first-class cabinet photographs for $2.00 per dozen. They are not a cheap grade of pictures, but the finest work that can be turned out of a first-class gallery. Cloudy weather makes no difference.

Once upon a time last winter the pops canvassed all winter trying to devise way and means to down the Times crowd—they said. In due time the demo came in—in mass meeting—"to help the boys out" and they did help them "out." This year the same game is tried on a somewhat different basis. Will it win?

Rudy Burkhardt: "We had a very good week at the Clevevand last week but Monday of this week was a corker—breaking all records for business. It begins to look as though business was picking up when you see hotels as well patronized as the Cleveland has been."

Wm. Nenkom was up from Ada last week with a view to purchasing a trotter from Peterson Bros. & Warninger. It will be remembered that he was the purchaser of Gold Coin last spring, the horse that died in the fall. Mr. N. is a great lover of a good horse and evidently knows where to go to get one.

Whatever the outcome, the care with which the tickets will be selected this spring will be due entirely to the republican party for that party was the only one that had sand enough to take the initiative on a basis of party lines. The dems at first made a grand kick and then—after they thought they could work the populist party—and, why, then they co-heided saying it was all right. But never before in the history of the democratic party in this city was so much care exercised in the selection of the timber for their ticket as has been observable this spring.

The much talked of labor ticket does not materialize very rapidly.

Martin O'Brien has accompanied John Power on his trip to San Diego, Cal., as his attorney.

If it was not for Hicks' prediction we should think that spring had come to stay. But if Hicks' is correct it has not.

Tuesday's rain turned to snow in the evening, on Wednesday morning an inch or so of snow was on the ground while a light snow fell during the day.

Aleck McDonald started on Monday evening for a trip to Duluth, with a view to locating there should he be suited after looking the city over thoroughly. He has some real estate deals in mind.

Somebody has suggested the name of Geo. F. Carpenter as a candidate for treasurer on the republican ticket. Mr. Carpenter is a young man of steady habits, without an enemy in the city and fully capable and every way worthy the trust.

The pops nominated, for alderman in the First ward, Aaron Ecks, at their First ward caucus Monday evening. In the Fourth ward they could not find a man brave enough to make the run so they referred the matter to a committee to hunt somebody up who would consent to make the run.

There were 39 votes in the first ward populist caucus on Monday night to elect four delegates to their city convention. A. R. Hodston and D. E. Hatlestad ran neck and neck the former winning by one vote. The original slate seemed to be the winner.

If you want to see a handsome youngster go to Brown's studios and look at that boy colt that M. H. Brown advertises in another column. He is as handsome built as a colt need be and somebody is going to get him next Wednesday. He is from a noted line of trotters and shows his ancestry in every motion.

The Times seemes as of taking our locals from its columns and asks why we do not take our editorials from the same source? The well known unreliability of its local columns is the best safe-guard in that particular, and if the Times can't tell us how to take something out of nothing perhaps we may consider his editorial proposition.

It is whispered on the sly that the democrats are going to put them selves in their pocket and nominate E. M. Stanton for mayor. Not but what E. M. is one of the best of the crowd—but that's the rub, he is too good to enter into schemes for the aggrandizement of the Times crowd, and for that reason the schemers would unsaddle him to a man.

Before another issue the tickets will have been made, the issue drawn, the forces in the field and the battle on. More than usual care has been exercised in the matter of the making of the tickets and each party fully intends to put its best foot forward. Who the rival candidates will be is but yet hinted at, but it is safe to say that no party intends to make a "retrograde movement" if it can help it.

The Times wonders why we paid no attention to a cowardly anonymous attack upon us that recently appeared in its columns. We gave all due consideration to the source from which it came, considering it worthy its source—the columns of the Times; have only to say to those who have paid any attention to it that it is a lie out of whole cloth wholly without a shadow of foundation in fact. But what can you expect from a paper that can brazenly defend the actions of the board of county commissioners in the printing deal?

Julius Yachgo, one of the thrifty German farmers who live along the river on the Fisher road, was in the city on Tuesday. Mr. Z. came to the county in the early day without a dollar and by economy combined to dependently well off. He has always been sober and industrious, paying strict attention to his own business, careful not to get into debt heavily. He says that he can make as much money raising wheat now as he ever could—everything considered, but he don't believe in the all wheat idea and practices diversified farming. It is such careful farmers as Mr. Yachgo that always manage to get along however adverse the circumstances. They never try to overdo by farming a whole township or so in a slip-shod manner, and lose more money than they make. They believe in doing well whatever they do and they nearly always make a success of their business.

Ole Hanson was in from Mentor on Wednesday.

G. H. Palmer has moved his office into No. 29, Recklit Block.

Hans Horberg says: It's a girl; born Sunday.

E. K. Austin greeted the arrival of a girl baby on Wednesday morning.

Money is no object to me, I am offering the best cabinet photographs for $1.50 per dozen. P. E. Lynne.

S. C. Johnson will open a feed store at Thief River Falls with Carl Helford in charge.

T. G. Thompson says he intends to go down to hear McKinley speak if—

O. L. Rumery rejoices in the arrival of a little boy at his home on Sunday.

Krohn & Renne are getting things nicely fixed up. They have added a stock of fine cigars.

Judge Benson went over to East Grand Forks on Saturday, to attend to some Probate business.

R. L. Benson came down from Erskine to visit his son, Judge Benson, and the little new grandson.

Col. C. H. Brush, bank examiner, paid the Merchant's National Bank a visit on Tuesday, and the First National on Wednesday.

P. J. Lachapelle: "When you see the chicken hawk you may depend spring is here. That interesting bird has arrived hence you may depend on an early spring."

Some of the nominations already made for alderman are exceedingly good ones and indicate that the various parties are right on their mettle, and intend to trot out their best timber.

While he has sold a goodly number of horses this spring, considering the times, Mr. M. R. Brown still has enough to supply all reasonable demands, which he is offering at the rock prices on time. Before you purchase a team be sure to see what Mr. Brown has to offer.

Henry Stuhr was in from Euclid last week chatting with friends. Henry says it is a difficult matter to find a member of the milling company that made the celebrated raid on Capt. Hancock's dog. Everybody solemnly declares he knows absolutely nothing about it.

Doc. Warninger says that Chris Greenhalgh's trotter "P. J." is looking in finer condition this spring than he ever saw him before. This makes Ludner Fisher, who has had charge of "P. J." this winter, blush and resolve that "P. J." shall justify his looks by his performances on the turf this season.

Judge Benson had a case brought before him on Sunday rather out of the usual order in probate court. The lad was utterly destitute of clothing or money and so appealed to the sympathy and love of the Judge that he decided not to commit him to an asylum but will try to raise and educate him as a preacher. The boy was one day old on Monday.

It was laughable to see the spasms of rage into which the Times fairly reeled over the "obscure sheet" business. Everybody of good average common sense understood the allusion perfectly and indulged in a hearty laugh when the Times man put the cent on himself—and we have to admit that it fitted him as nicely as it did the one it was really intended for.

Miss E. Veronneau returned from Chicago this week, after having made a fine selection for the spring trade. While in Chicago she had the pleasure of listening to Madame Melba, the new Italian signer, at the Auditorium. Melba is all the rage in Chicago, and it is said that she already rivals Patti, and many predict that she will surpass that noted singer.

The Times man makes a great parade about what (he says) Geo. P. Rowell says of the circulation of the Times. What the '94 directory says we do not know; as that work is not published as yet. In the '93 directory the Times has no guaranteed rating. Rowell gives a guaranteed rating only on affidavit of the publisher or proprietor of a paper. McKenzie swore, in the Ware case that he did not know what the circulation of the weekly Times is, was sure it had 240, and it could not have been so very long before that trial that he sent his sworn statement to Rowell, whatever it was.

Judge Spendley: "Speaking of the price of wheat reminds me of my early experience in Minnesota. Our nearest market was Red Wing, 120 miles away and it used to cost me 15 cents per bushel to have my wheat hauled there. One season I received 85 cents per bushel for wheat and thought I was making big money. The next season wheat only brought 45 cents—then it was different. I got discouraged and sold my farm for what it would bring and a few years later the purchaser could have taken $80 per acre for it. In those days most of the wheat was cradled and raked and bound by hand requiring an army of men all through harvest. We did not have the advantages of improved harvesting machinery then. This country never has seen such times as we had in those days and is not likely to. Think of hauling wheat 120 miles to market at a cost of 15 cents for it! That's hard times."

Since MacKenzie undertook the job of white washing the county commissioners there seems to be nothing too mean for him to say of the JOURNAL or anybody who had anything to do in exposing that "job." It is not my wonder that he would like to shove the burden off upon to some somebody else—but its no use, the people are onto Mac and his little jobs, and all that he can say or do will not change the stubborn facts. It was a job of his own seeking and now that the people fully understand it he will have to suffer the consequences.

That was indeed a bad break that you made, Mac., in attempting to defend the action of the board in letting the printing contract at a price far above what it could have been done for and doubtless you begin to realize how bad a break it was. But then it was a job of your own seeking, a job that you alone seem to have profited by, and you have got to take your medicine. That was indeed a nice little profit, for the time being, but will it pay you in the long run?

The Times would like to have people forget about that county printing deal, and its efforts to white wash it, and seems to imagine that by keeping up an incessant warfare on the JOURNAL it can draw public attention from its own high-handed, outrageous attempt to justify such actions, and that is why it also so people to lie about us in its columns. But the people are onto you Mac, in that printing deal and your obvious squirming will not avail. The are not all fools and therefore knew that the printing was not let by their advantage, and you, who received the benefits of it seem to be about the only one who says it was all right.

Democracy comes high but the people must have it—vide the county printing award by the democratic board of commissioners.

Don't forget the auction sale of horses at C. R. Brown's stables on Wednesday next. You have no idea how far a little money will go at that sale.

M. R. Brown went down to the Lockeu farm on Wednesday to act as auctioneer at that sale.

R. A. Wilkinson was up from St. Paul last week.

John Teldeman was in from Euclid on Saturday last. He reports the recent arrival of a daughter at his home.

John D. Overholt and Frank Hutchinson were in from Maple Bay on Monday.

John Biever and Chas Nicholson, were in from Euclid on Monday.

The republican league club elected P. J. McGuire, T. G. Thompson and L. W. Larsen delegates to the league convention at Minneapolis on March 28th.

Dr. Chapin, of Euclid was a caller at the county seat this week.

The county board is in session this week.

J. McCaffrey returned from Angus, Wis., this week. When he left there farmers were getting ready to go to seeding. Rivers were all open, log up and everything indicated an early spring.

Charlie Misner received a letter this week from Andrew Goff, who is located at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and is doing well there we learn.

Miss Belle Degin nd, a sister of Mrs. P. J. Russell died at Drayton, N. D., on the 17th. The body arrived in this city on Sunday evening and on Monday was taken to Black River for interment.

E. D. Childs returned this week from a trip to New York City, of over a month's duration.

Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Munson were called upon to part with their little three months old child on Tuesday. Soon after its birth the mother was taken with fever, and when nearly recovered suffered a relapse and is lying very ill at the present time with the chances all against her recovery.

It there is any kind of a shindy that T. B. McManus enjoys better than a fair and square political fight we don't know what it is. Just now he is right in his elements.

A person can get a pretty accurate idea of the condition of things in the east by talking with Capt. E. C. Davis, who spent a portion of the winter in eastern cities. His descriptions are vivid and realistic and show that as hard as times are here we have the advantage of always being able to procure food which is not always possible there. Anybody who feels dissatisfied with his lot in the Red River Valley should interview Capt. Davis and find out how poor people in the east have to make shift to live—and don't succeed very last sale.

John Power, of Black River, received news last week of the death of a brother at San Diego, Cal. The brother was an old resident of California and is said to have left a large fortune that goes to Mr. Power and a brother and two sisters. Mr. Power starts this week for California to look the matter up.

Horses For Sale.

I am selling horses right along every day at prices to correspond with the price of wheat and on time to suit. I am selling good horses at prices lower than ever before known in Polk County and if you intend to purchase a team this spring it will pay you to call and see what I have got to offer. This is the chance of a life time, an opportunity such as is not likely to occur again for years to ever. Call and look them over.

Report of committee accepted and adopted and M. R. Brown, chairman of the committee on resolutions, after a few pertinent remarks read the following:

REPUBLICAN PLATFORM.

The Republican Party of the City of Crookston, in convention assembled, for the purpose of nominating candidates for the various city offices, hereby make and publish to the people of the City of Crookston, the following, as its declaration of principles:

1. That the deplorable conditions now prevailing throughout the United States, due to doubt, distrust and a departure from the principles upheld by the Republican Party, make it the duty of all republicans to thoroughly organize in every state and municipality and thereby become more efficient in winning the battle which will give to labor its just reward, and again crown the nation with the proud distinction of success and prosperity enjoyed during thirty years of Republican administration.

2. That the direct responsibility now assumed by distinct political organizations will be beneficial to our city, in evoking a higher patriotism, and securing the best efforts of our people for the city's welfare.

3. That the responsibility for the city's administration heretofore has been too general; that this betterment by the Republican party for a distinct political ticket has already borne good fruit in our more orderly caucuses, and in securing the attention of our best citizens to the interests of the public.

4. That we demand a just, equitable, and strict enforcement of the law and city ordinances, and in such manner as is conducive to the best interests of the city, and condemn any and all attempts to manipulate or truckle with the ordinances or law in any manner for political purposes.

5. That the only efficient remedy for our depressed business conditions is by the employment of labor, and the protection of labor industries. That the principles of protection to labor and industrial enterprises, advocated and upheld by the great Republican party, are the principles which will surely restore prosperity to our nation, and drive poverty and its attendant miseries from the homes of our people.

6. We favor the city offering such encouragement as will secure and promote manufacturing industries in our city, thereby giving employment to our resident laborers and mechanics, especially during the winter months.

7. That the city make all its improvements as early in the spring as the ground will admit thereby giving employment to our resident laborers at a season of the year when work is scarce, and before the harvest commences.

That our resident laborers and mechanics be given all the city's employment on all public and private improvements, thereby benefiting their condition and comforts, and thus promote the business interests of the city, and resulting in a mutual benefit.

9. That our health or sanitary laws be more rigidly enforced, by having filthy streets, alleys and yards cleaned, and cess-pools abated, thereby giving more work to our resident laborers, and thus promoting the health and happiness of our people.

10. Recognizing the necessity of furnishing pure water for domestic purposes, we favor a thorough investigation as to the desirability of the city owning its own system of water works, using artesian wells for supply, and the erection of a proper lighting plant for the city, obtaining proper estimates from competent sources of the cost of installment and operating the same, and the laying before the people in convenient form the result of such investigation, that the people may act intelligently in bringing about the desired results.

11. That we favor all reasonable efforts and encouragement for securing about more direct railroad connection with Duluth, and the establishing of division headquarters of railroads in this city.

12. We favor a thorough and equal assessment of the real and personal property of the city, to be entirely new and not copied, as followed by from old assessment rolls, and pledge ourselves that the assessment about to be made shall be made by the assessor from personal observation and valuation of property listed on a basis of its present value, so that all property shall pay its just proportion of taxes, and that such assessment be thoroughly examined and reviewed by the board of review of the city council.

13. That the city accounts be kept and such changes as may be necessary made in the system of keeping the city's accounts as may enable the city to publish its financial statement in our city papers at least ten days before each city election as provided by our city charter.

14. That we rely on the strength of our principles and the fitness of our nominees for success and in no personal abuse of our opponents.

Relying upon the wisdom, justice and truth of the foregoing declaration of principles, we cordially invite the co-operation with us of all citizens of the City of Crookston, regardless of their former political affiliations and ask that they unite with us in the responsibility and the work necessary to ensure success.

Respectfully submitted,
H. R. ROBERTSON,
Chairman.

The report was unanimously adopted and a motion prevailed to proceed to ballot for candidates without nominating speeches, the first ballot in every case to be informal. On motion the chair appointed Fred Hall, C. O. Christianson tellers. The first ballot for mayor stood: Cromb 20, Wheeler 7, Walsh 1, E. C. Davis 1, Steenerson 1—total 30. Motion to suspend the rules and declare the nomination of John Cromb unanimous prevailed. The first informal ballot for alderman at large resulted:

Wheeler 23, Bjoin 3, Simmons 2, scattering 2—total 30. Motion prevailed to suspend the rules and make the nomination of Mr. J. W. Wheeler unanimous.

On ballot for clerk, W. A. Lanctot received 28 votes, and the nomination was made unanimous by motion.

For treasurer the most stubborn fight of the session occurred. On the informal ballot the vote stood:

Lindell 10, Carpenter 9, Christianson 9, scattering 2. No choice and the first ballot stood:

Christianson 13, Lindell 11, Carpenter 5. This being one vote too many was ruled out. Mr. Carpenter withdrew his name and the next ballot stood:

Christianson 15, Lindell 10, blank 1; on motion Mr. Christianson was declared the unanimous choice of the convention.

For assessor the informal ballot stood:

August George 18, Fred Silver 6, Dave Huggard 5, McGuire 1—total 30. On motion August George was declared the unanimous choice of the convention.

Informal ballot for constables:

J. E. Greenhalgh 15, A. A. Glenn 12, Wm. Bloom 23, Geo. Holz 2, the nomination of Bloom and Glenn was made unanimous on motion.

On motion the chair appointed the following gentlemen:

CITY CENTRAL COMMITTEE.

M. R. Brown,
W. A. Hammond,
H. F. Brown,
H. F. Brown,
Felix Fournet,
H. Steenerson,
J. J. McGuire.

The chair appointed a committee to wait upon the nominee for mayor and aldermen at large and bring said gentleman before the convention. While they were out the convention indulged in a little oratorial pyrotechnics. Mayor Stephens responded to vociferous calls in a neat little speech, he complimented the convention upon its nominees and the platform upon which they would run and urged diligent and earnest work. E. C. Davis made a few enthusiastic remarks which were received with cheers. Upon the return of the committee Judge Montague responded to vigorous calls and made an earnest speech urging good solid work and condemning a mud-slinging campaign. Said he: Don't call the Democrats down on their promise of $1.25 wheat made us in the last campaign; perhaps they did not mean we were to have it last fall, perhaps they meant some time in the long future. The chairman, they have all they can bear without being reminded of their little inconsistences. You have a good ticket, a good platform and a good cause, rally to its support heartily and enthusiastically and you will win for you will deserve it. The Republicans have taken the lead in the matter—that party always is in the advance in every good work, and other parties have said we were right and have followed in our footsteps."

At this time the committee appointed with J. W. Wheeler and reported that Mr. Cromb had been suddenly called home from the bank on account of the illness of his wife. The chairman, in a few appropriate remarks informed Mr. Wheeler of the action of the convention and that gentleman responded briefly in a few well-chosen words, pledging his earnest efforts to see the action of the convention ratified and his best efforts for the welfare of the city if elected. August George responded to calls and said that it had been awful of him that he was considering a change of residence to Crookston because he had lived elsewhere a few years, "why," said he, "I am better acquainted with Crookston than with any other city in the Northwest. I have loved this city; in fact I may say I have loved her so well that I married one of her daughters and a more loyal citizen you will not remember. I like the platform you have made here to-day and would rather be beaten on this platform, following the old flag than to win in any other way."

W. A. Lanctot, Wm. Bloom, A. A. Glenn, H. Steenerson, Judge C. O. Christinson, Wm. Marin and others each made a few earnest remarks pertinent to the occasion and the convention then adjourned sine die.

The Democratic Convention.

The democrats (42 of 'em) met in mass convention at 2 o'clock on Thursday. After laboring painfully until 9:30 p. m., they sent out post haste for a doctor—to ascertain if he would accept the nomination for mayor. Dr. Dunlap, the physician in question, when found, thanked the committee and said he would—not, so they had to return to their labors and sometime before midnight brought forth the following ticket:

For mayor—Alexander McKinnon.
Ald. at Large—Adolph Rauch.
Treasurer—A. C. Cowing.
Clerk—J. V. E. Wyatt.
Assessor—C. H. Mix.
Constables—J. W. Kelly and Thos. Johnstone.

After which came adjournment and later on the fire works.

The Populist Convention.

On Thursday evening the people's party (15 of 'em) met in convention at the city hall in the first ward and entered on organization, after which they adjourned to the office of L. E. Gossman, where, after a great deal of harmony and anxious care they incubated the following ticket:

Mayor—P. M. Ringdal.
Alderman at large—E. Columbus, Treasurer—Jos. Mathews.
Clerk—George E. Strawbridge,
Assessor—Eli Steenerson,
Constables—O. DuCharme, and M. C. Malone.

After this patriotic ceremony the members present indulged in a sort of a general love feast until adjournment.

A Lively Fire.

At about 2:45 on Friday morning the fire bell rang out in shrill tones summoning the department to attend to a lively blaze, that was getting in its work on the Central house. About a half dozen of the boys responded with alacrity and soon arrived on the scene, but valuable time was wasted before the seat of the trouble could be located and before the balance of the department arrived. The building being of wood, burned rapidly and was entirely ruined. It was owned by the First National bank and insured for $2,000. It was built in '78 or '79 by Joseph Terrien who later on built a three story addition and was being managed by A. C. Rolstad who lost nearly all his furniture, covered however by insurance. On the first floor of the three story addition was a saloon run by J. A. Johnson, and it was in the liquor room, in rear of the saloon that the fire originated, being the fourth time it is said. That the fire was of incendiary origin is as seems perfectly clear, but by whom and for what purpose does not seem so clear. Mr. Hodson, the landlord, informed the writer that he slept in the room over the one in which the fire is supposed to have originated, that he was awakened by the smoke filling his room and that he barely had time to escape with his wife and a few things before the whole business was in flames. It chanced to be a very still night and adjoining property was unharmed.

Boy Lost.

It was rumored in the streets on Saturday morning that a boy had been lost during the storm on the evening previous, and policeman John Kyle was looking for his brother during the morning. It seems the lad was out to some entertainment during Friday evening and when he got as far as Lancaster & Arries barn he went in to take breath and Frank Arries took care of him for the night. He will not show up at home until about 10:30 Saturday morning meantime a good deal of anxiety had been had at his behalf.

Suicide.

The body of a man was found in the woods near Fosston on Sunday, and Deputy Coroner J. V. E. Wyatt went up to inquire into the cause of death. The body had very evidently lain there for some time and near it lay a rifle, while a ball hole in the body in the region of the heart plainly indicated the cause of death. From some articles in the clothing the man was identified as one Nels E. Jacobson, who disappeared from Fosston, last fall and the cause of his suicide is supposed to be a love affair with some girl in Norway. The body was buried on Saturday, and the coroner returned on the evening train.

MR. COXEY'S MARCH.

The Common Weal Aggregation Sets Out For Washington.

MASSILLON, O., March 24.—The march of the "Common Weal Army" to the national capital began at 12:30 p. m. The army was rather small in numbers when it started out, but new recruits, not merely singly or in pairs, but by scores and hundreds are expected by the leaders to join the main line at every stopping place, and Commander Coxey is sanguine that when he reaches the national capital he will be at the head of 100,000 American citizens. His son will ride at the head of the army, wearing a combination suit of blue and gray and carrying the ensign of the common weal, a white flag of peace. Mr. Coxey himself followed in a carriage.

Drawn by Six White Horses.

while Lieutenant Carl Browne bestrides a noble stallion. The object of the pilgrimage is already well known. On the arrival of the army in Washington it is intended to round up before the Capitol and demand the enactment of two bills. One of them authorizes the secretary of the treasury to issue $500,000,000 of treasury notes to be expended in the improvement of the country roads of the country, and the second authorizes municipalities to issue non-interest bearing bonds and to assure notes thereon. On its way to Washington the army is expected to be fed by the voluntary contributions of sympathizers along the route, and an appeal has been issued to farmers, capitalists and laboring men to bring forth liberally of their larders to the end that the strangers within their gates may not be permitted to go hungry.

Washington is to be reached on May 1. The authorities of Canton have sworn in an extra squad of police in case the demonstration should take an objectionable turn, and many other towns, which the army is to pass through, have followed suite.

FRUIT ALL KILLED.

It posts From the Recent Cold Snap Tell a Story of General Destruction.

INDIANAPOLIS, March 26.—The cold wave which is now sweeping over the country has not only cut the chances for a fruit crop in this state down to a very low degree. For several weeks prior to the one that has been unusually warm for the season, and the result was that when the cold snap came it caught the fruit trees just ready to burst the swelling buds into blossoms. It is thought that peaches were to a large extent killed by the severe weather in January, but such as escaped that are now very fully gone. Cherries, plums and apples are almost totally destroyed in the central and northern part of the state, but it is hoped that the hills in the southern part (the great apple section) have saved the staple fruit.

All Crops Damaged.

DALLAS, Tex., March 26.—Reports show killing frosts from the Red river south to a line drawn east and west through Waco. The fruit section around Tyler suffered severely. In some sections in the northern portion the ground froze to a depth of two inches. Young corn was cut down and the oat crop damaged. Throughout the belt it is thought the fruit crop is cut short and in many places destroyed.

In Missouri and Kansas.

KANSAS CITY, March 26.—Signal Officer Connse informed an Associated Press representative that Sunday night's cold snap was the most severe on record during March since the establishment of the signal bureau in the city. Reports from Southern Missouri and Kansas indicate that early fruits and vegetables have all been nipped in the bud.

Strawberry Crop Killed.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., March 26.—The entire strawberry crop of Tennessee has been killed by the freeze. Considerable attention is paid in this state to this and other fruits, and the loss will be heavy. The preceding warm weather by the advancement of growth, added to the damages.

Sixteen Above in Kentucky.

MIDWAY, Ky., March 26.—The cold wave that reached here Monday forced the mercury down to 16 degrees. Early gardens, tobacco plants and much of the fruit that had escaped earlier freezes have been killed. It is believed that the wheat that is already jointed is greatly injured.

Effect in Michigan.

DETROIT, March 26.—Latest advices from various points in Michigan give a variety of opinions as to the cold wave's effect on fruit crops, all agree, however, that early peach buds have seriously suffered. Wheat is unhurt; some strawberries and blackberries are frozen.

Tobacco Killed.

VERSAILLES, Ky., March 26.—Sunday night's freeze killed all the tobacco plants, early gardens and much of the fruit. Early wheat is also damaged. Tobacco growers are feeding hens as the plants were forward and unusually fine.

Peach Crop Ruined.

ATLANTA, Ga., March 26.—Runny & Moon, the largest peach growers in the peach district of Georgia, say that 90 per cent of the fruit crop has been killed by Sunday night's freeze. All vegetation is killed around Atlanta.

WORK OF CONGRESS.

Wednesday, March 21.

The senate quickly settled down to routine business, and a number of bills were taken from the calendar and passed. Among them was one granting right of way to the Jamestown and Northern through the Devil's Lake Indian reservation in North Dakota.

Nothing of importance was done in the house.

Thursday, March 22.

The house spent the entire day in filibustering over the O'Neill-Joy contested election case from the St. Louis district. The report of the committee in favor of unseating Mr. Joy (Rep.), and the Republicans are determined that this shall not be accomplished unless the Democrats produce their own quorum.

The senate considered Senator Hansbrough's bill for exterminating Russian thistles. Before any definite action was taken the senate adjourned until Monday.

Friday, March 23.

The Democrats once again without a quorum, and the attempt to consider the O'Neill-Joy election case was abandoned until next week.

The military academy appropriation bill was passed practically without debate. The house will now take up the postoffice appropriation bill.

The night session was occupied with the passage of private pension bills, and at 10:30 the house adjourned.

The senate was not in session.

Saturday, March 24.

The house, with only 30 members present, considered the postoffice appropriation bill in committee of the whole.

The senate was not in session.

Monday, March 26.

Both houses of congress had very brief sessions, transacting no business, and adjourning after passing resolutions regarding Senator Colquitt's death.

COLQUITT DEAD.

The Georgia Senator Finally Succumbs to Paralysis.

WASHINGTON, March 26. — United States Senator Colquitt of Georgia died at his residence in this city at 7:40 a. m. Around the bedside when he passed away were Senator Gordon and his daughter Mrs. Jones, Senator Colquitt's private secretary, his nephew Mr. Bunn, his son, Mrs. Colquitt, three unmarried daughters and his daughter, Mrs. Marshall of Chicago.

The remains of Senator Colquitt will be taken to Macon, Ga., for interment, and will be accompanied by committees of the two houses of congress and the family of the deceased and that of his colleague, Senator Gordon.

TELEGRAPHERS COMPROMISE.

Union Pacific Employes Adjust Their Differences.

OMAHA, March 26.—Judge Caldwell will not have to hear arguments by the Union Pacific telegraphers in regard to wages, for the operators have compromised their case with the officials of the road. The terms was made public after the first time Monday morning, though the agreement was reached late Saturday night. After the operators had gone over the schedule under the rules with Superintendent Korty, the case was referred to President S. H. H. Clark, and after a long conference he agreed to accept the terms offered by the men. The exact terms of the new schedule are still kept from the public but the men claim that they have scored a big victory, and have secured every concession which they demanded.

Railroad Traffic Resumed.

AN OLD PRESCRIPTION.

On This Particular Occasion It Failed to Do Its Work.

The crowd had gathered about a horse and buggy in the middle of the street. The horse had balked.

"I'm a string around his ear," said one of the bystanders. "it gives him something else to think of. I never knew it to fail."

A string was produced and wound tightly round one of the animal's ears.

It had no effect.

"Dinsfold him," suggested another. A bandage was tied over his eyes and an effort made to start him.

Same result.

"Back him,"

"He won't back," said the exasperated owner. "I tried that."

"Try him with an ear of corn."

The ear of corn failed to move the obstinate horse.

"I'll see if I can't persuade him some other way," said the exasperated owner of the animal.

He took a whip and belabored the beast with it till somebody threatened to have him arrested.

Then he kicked him awhile.

All in vain.

Finally a benevolent looking old gentleman forced his way through the crowd and said:

"I have seen a great many balky horses started by building a fire under them. Can you get some straw or shavings?"

A boy was sent to a neighboring furniture store for some excelsior. He came back presently with a large armful. It was placed on the ground under the horse and a lighted match toneled to it.

As the first feeble flame rose from it and the smoke began to curl about his legs the horse snheut a little. He turned his head, took a calm survey of the situation, and when the combustible stuff burst into a big blaze he moved forward about six feet, in full possession of his faculties and without any unnecessary haste, and stopped again.

And the elegant buggy was damaged not worth by the flames before it ecarred to anybody to scutter the blazing stuff.

And then an old colored man in a faded suit of secondhand clothes and a hat with half the brim gone went out and spoke kindly to the horse, patted him on the head, climbed into the damaged buggy and said, "Git along, sonny."

And the horse moved off at a brisk trot, with head high in the air.—Chicago Tribune.

The "Tomb of Cain."

The early traditions concerning the city of Damascus are curious and interesting, even though intrinsically and contradictory. By some of the ancient writers it was maintained that the city stands on or near the site of the garden of Eden, and just outside there is a beautiful meadow of red earth from which, it is said, God took the material from which he created Adam. This field is called Ager Damascenus, and near its center there formerly stood a pillar which was said to mark the precise spot where our first parent was created. A few miles off there is an eminence called the Mountain of Abel, supposed by some to be the place where the first two brothers offered their sacrifices, also the spot where the first murder was committed. The most interesting spot pointed out, however, is about three leagues from the city, where an old ruin is shown all the orient believe to be the tomb of Cain. The traditions respecting this famous spot are known to acquaint the Christian era by several hundred years. Up to the time of Vespasian the interior of the tomb is said to have been lighted and warmed by one of the "ever burning" lamps so commonly used by the ancients.—St. Louis Republic.

A New Kind of Insurance.

Agent—Cash, good morning, Mr. Talked-to-death. I've called to see you about insuring you in my company. I want to——

Mr. Talked-to-death—Oh, go away! I don't want any insurance. I'm already——

"But, sir, you don't understand. This is——

"No, I tell you! I've been nearly talked into my grave by insurance agents, and I——

"Also, we're talking business! That's just why you ought to take a policy in my company."

"What's your company?"

"Why, it insures you against being talked to death by insurance agents!"—Boston Traveller.

MORTG GE SALE.

(First publication Feb. 15th, 1894.)

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of one hundred and seventy dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice, upon a mortgage duly executed and delivered by Knut Steen and Jahn, his wife, mortgagors, to Polk City Trust Company, mortgagee, bearing date the 9th day of December, A. D. 1890, and with power of sale contained therein, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the 9th day of December, A. D. 1890, at 9:30 o'clock a. m. of said day, in book 37 of mortgages, on page 101, and no proceedings having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover said debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in said mortgage, viz: The west half of the southwest quarter of section one (1), in Township one hundred and fifty-two, Range forty-four from the 5th principal meridian in Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which said sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk county, at the front door of the County Court House, in the village of Crookston, in said county, on the 17th day of March, A. D. 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgages in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

TARIFF FIGHT ON.

THE WILSON BILL REPORTED TO THE SENATE

In Its Amended Form—Debate Will Begin Monday, April 2—Sundry Civil Appropriation Bill Passes the House. Holman Defeated by Northwesterners.

WASHINGTON, March 20.—The tariff bill has been fairly launched on its way in the senate, Mr. Voorhees, the chairman of the finance committee, reporting it to the senate and giving notice that on April 2 he will take it up for consideration. The rest of the day was taken up by Senator George of Mississippi in a discussion of the legal aspects of the Hawaiian question, defending the action of the president. There was but little interest manifested in the proceedings and there was a very slim attendance in the galleries, while the Republican side was almost deserted. Several unimportant bills were passed in the afternoon and after a brief executive session the senate adjourned.

The Important Changes.

The most important change made in the tariff bill, as reported, is in the sugar schedule, a change being made by which an additional duty of an eighth of a cent a pound is given on all sugars testing above 16 deg. by the polarscope test, or which are above 16 Dutch standard in color.

The provisions abrogating the Hawaiian reciprocity treaty are struck from the revised bill, and a specific declaration is inserted repealing the reciprocity treaties negotiated under the McKinley act.

In the internal revenue schedule the committee strikes out the provision which the senate sub-committee inserted first taxing cigars and cigarettes weighing more than three pounds $8 per thousand, and cigarettes in papers not weighing more than three pounds $1 per thousand, and wrapped in tobacco 50 cents per thousand, thus leaving the tax on these articles unchanged from the present law.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL PASSED.

The House Adopts the Appropriation Measure Without Division.

WASHINGTON, March 20.—The sundry civil appropriation bill was passed by the house without division. The amendment for the appropriation for the general land office, amending the provision of the act of 1891, repealing the timber culture and pre-emption acts, which was adopted in the committee at the suggestion of Mr. Holman, and which was bitterly opposed by the Western members, was defeated in the house. The clauses which sought to require an accounting by the disbursing officers of soldiers' homes to the treasury department and annual reports by the boards to the secretary of war, fell under Mr. Black's point of order.

The bill, as passed, carries $217,000 more than it did as reported from the committee on appropriations. The four appropriation bills passed by the house —District of Columbia, pension, fortifications and sundry civil—carry a net reduction of $24,314,958, as compared with the same bills for the current fiscal year.

AS A TAX MEASURE.

The Anti-Option Bill to Be Reported to the House.

WASHINGTON, March 24.—The house committee on agriculture has completed its consideration of the anti-options bill and authorized it to be reported to the house in amended form agreed upon.

As agreed on, the bill provides that every "option" contract and every "future" contract shall have affixed thereto, internal revenue stamps representing taxes as follows: For every 10,000 pounds of cotton, hops, pork, lard, bacon, dried, salt and pickled meats, 1 cent, and every 1,000 bushels of wheat and other grain, 1 cent.

Where the Tax Comes In.

Every cancellation, clearance, acquittance, contango, beckwardation privilege, waiver, or other agreement by which an option or future is terminated, otherwise than by actual sale and delivery, or such termination is delayed or obviated, shall have affixed thereto internal revenue stamps representing taxes as follows: For every pound of raw or unmanufactured cotton, hops, pork, lard and bacon, 1 cent a pound; for every bushel of wheat, 2 cents, and for every bushel of corn, oats, rye and barley, 2 cents.

ENDS PROHIBITION.

The Iowa Senate Finally Passes the House Bill.

DES MOINES, March 22.—The senate has passed the house liquor bill which is now law. Iowa under considerations thus destroying the Iowa policy of state wide prohibition. The law provides for a saloon in every city, and many conditions are required before the sale of liquor may be commenced.

DES MOINES, Ia., March 23.—The house by a vote of 51 to 44 passed the bill giving women the right to vote in school and municipal elections. The result was greeted with great applause.

DES MOINES, March 24.—After a long discussion both houses of the general assembly passed a resolution to adjourn April 6.

Doesn't Suit Saloon Men.

DUBUQUE, Ia., March 24.—The 226 saloonkeepers of this city are feeling blue over the new anti-option law, but consolo themselves with the expectation that it cannot be enforced. If it is, fully one half will be closed up.

The Sugar Trust Legal.

PHILADELPHIA, March 26.—Judge Dallas, in the United States circuit court of appeals, has affirmed the decree of the circuit court of the Eastern district of Pennsylvania in the case of the United States government against the Sugar Trust, to the effect that absorption of the Philadelphia refineries by the Sugar Trust was legal. This is a victory for the trust.

NEW LEASE OF LIFE.

PRENDERGAST, THE ASSASSIN, GETS TWO WEEKS RESPITE,

Finding an Investigation of His Present Mental Condition Federal C urts and Executive Refused to Interfere in the Matter of His Execution.

CHICAGO, March 23.—Prendergast, the murderer of Carter H. Harrison, has another lease of life. By an almost unprecedented plan of procedure his attorneys managed, late last night, to secure him a fortnight's respite, during which a jury will pass upon his sanity.

When the state supreme court refused a supersedeas Wednesday Prendergast's attorneys took the case before the federal judges in this city on constitutional grounds, they alleging that Prendergast's rights as a free man had been violated by the reansal of the trial court to allow him to talk when he pleased and to act as his own attorney if he so chose. The federal judges, after hearing the arguments, declined to grant the stay asked. Then the attorneys announced that they were proceeding on the basis of Prendergast's insanity having developed since his imprisonment. They telegranped Governor Altgeld, who is at Biloxi, Miss., for a reprieve until a hearing could be had. The governor declined to act, he having left the lieutenant governor in the executive chair. Mr. Gill was summoned to Springfield and two of the attorneys went there and spent several hours in a futile endeavor to secure a reprieve. Meanwhile, other of Prendergast's lawyers had begun work before Judge Chetlain, in whose court their efforts were finally rewarded with a stay of two weeks.

When the federal judges announced that they would not grant a writ of habeas corpus the assassin's attorneys renewed their efforts by raising the question of their client's sanity. The point now raised is that Prendergast has become insane since the trial. So they applied to Judge Chetlain, and he consented to bear arguments to show that he could properly take the matter up. Having heard the arguments Judge Chetlain announced his decision extending the time of the execution of the sentence two weeks to April 6 and setting the commencement of the trial of the question as to his sanity on Saturday morning at 10 o'clock.

The Prendergast Hearing.

CHICAGO, March 24.—The Prendergast insanity case has been postponed until Tuesday.

Higgs to Hanged.

CHICAGO, March 23.—Higgins, the murderer with whom Prendergast was to have been hanged, was executed at 12:08 p. m.

FIVE PEOPLE DEAD.

Dynamite Works at Black Run, Pa., Blown Up.

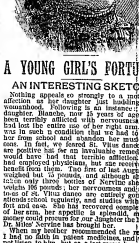
PITTSBURG, March 24.—The dynamite works of the Acme Powder company at Black Run, a mile and a half from Hulton, on the Allegheny Valley railroad, were destroyed by an explosion at 7 a. m. Five persons were killed and one badly injured. The works were blown to pieces and buildings in the vicinity of the works were wrecked.

Panic in a School.

CHICAGO, March 21.—Fire entirely destroyed the South Evanston public school building during the day. A number of children were injured in the rush for exits and by jumping from the windows. Many were unable to escape until the arrival of the firemen, as the exits were cut off by the flames.

Plead Guilty to Murder.

KENOSHA, Wis., March 24.—George Clowes plead guilty to the murder of John Callaghan, an aged farmer, and was sentenced to prison for life. Clowes made a written confession. He entered Callaghan's house and demanded money and being refused, shot Callaghan down by the side of his wife. Clowes was pursued and captured. He claims that his revolver went off accidentally.



A YOUNG GIRL'S FORTUNE.

AN INTERESTING SKETCH.

Nothing appeals so strongly to a mother's affection as for daughter just budding into womanhood. Following is an instance: "Our daughter Blanche, now 15 years of age, had been terribly afflicted with nervousness, and for a long time was under the care of a physician in this city, but as I could see no change for the better I concluded to take her home from school and attended her myself as soon as I got her home. We have tried, and are positive has for an invaluable remedy she would have her that terrible affliction. We had employed physicians, but are convinced no human can do more than Dr. Miles' Nervine has done for our child. Yours truly, Mrs. H. C. Bullock, Brighton, N. Y.

THE CANDIDATES.

The republicans, the democrats and the populists have each put a ticket in the field, to be voted for at the coming election, and a glance at the make-up of the tickets will show that they are all good clean tickets, with the republicans in the lead when it comes to qualifications of the candidates for the offices for which they are nominated. Take a look at the men who ask your suffrage on the republican ticket:

MAYOR.

John Crombi is one of our best known citizens, and besides his business qualifications he has the advantage of a legal education, having practiced law most of his life. Conscientious, honorable and upright, he has the confidence of everyone who has ever come in contact with him in a business way. As alderman of the fourth ward, and president of the council, for several years, he has shown himself to be a capable and efficient public servant—always on hand—always informed on questions affecting the interests of the city, never shirking his duties, and never catering to any clique or any class, he has made a record that will bear inspection.

ALDERMAN AT LARGE.

J. W. Wheeler is one of our shrewdest business men, and as a financier he has probably no superior in the city. He has a public record, never having held office here, but his personal character and business record are above reproach. Everyone who knows him knows that he would be just as careful in voting away the people's money as he would be with his own. It is just such men as Mr. Wheeler that we want in the council —active, careful, successful business men.

CITY CLERK.

A more popular candidate could not have been named for this office than W. A. Lanctot—nor one more capable. Most of his life has been spent in clerical work, and he is particularly fitted for the office of city clerk.

CITY TREASURER.

O. O. Christinson the candidate for this office, is not much of a politician, but as a business man he is all right. He and his brother, C. O. have conducted the abstract office here for several years, and it goes without saying, that no one could handle the city treasurer's office better than he.

ASSESSOR.

Owing to the amount of kicking which has been done by citizens about the assessments which have heretofore been made in the city, it is likely the voters will use considerable care in selecting a man to fill the office of assessor. The republican candidate, Mr. August F. George, is peculiarly fitted for the office, not only by reason of his acquaintance with property values here on account of his real estate business, but because he is not tangled up with any faction, and can be relied on to give an equitable assessment. Mr. George was one of the old-timers of this county before Norman county was detached. He was then elected auditor of Norman county, which position he held for several years, until he removed to Crookston.

CONSTABLES.

Wm. Bloom and A. A. Glenn, the candidates for constables, are straightforward honorable young men, and both capable and deserving.

ALDERMEN.

In the first ward Mr. G. O. Buhn has been selected. Mr. Buhn is one of the old-timers, and by honesty and industry has accumulated considerable property here. He has served a couple of terms in the council at different times, and has always made an efficient alderman.

In the second ward M. Rounsbergher has been the choice of the republicans and they have made no mistake.

In the third ward, John Alderman was nominated but failed to qualify.

In the fourth ward N. S. Gervais—who was appointed to fill the place made vacant by the resignation of Alderman Jerome—was nominated to succeed himself. Mr. Gervais has made a good record as alderman during the time he has been in the council and the fourth ward acted wisely in nominating him.

In the fifth ward E. D. Childs—one of the best aldermen the city ever had—is named to succeed himself.

Take it all in all, it is a good business ticket, it is the best ticket, and must therefore win.

THE WATERWORKS QUESTION.

Much has been said and written lately about our waterworks system, and the advisability of the city owning and operating a waterworks and electric light plant, and the question will be submitted to the voters at the coming city election. The voters will be asked to vote yes or no on this proposition, but if a majority of the voters favor the city owning and operating the waterworks and electric light plant, their action does not bind the council to carry out the wishes of the people. It is only done for the purpose of ascertaining the sentiment of the people on this question. But the voters should consider this question before voting on it, because the result of the ballots will have much to do with determining the future actions of the council on this matter.

To the JOURNAL it seems that the question of ownership of the plant is the least important one in controversy. The main point to be decided is to procure a sufficient supply of good, pure water, and if the present waterworks company will not furnish it, then the city should, and eventually will take hold of the matter. Nature has supplied this portion of the country with a supply of artesian water, and small flows can be obtained in the city at a depth of from one to three hundred feet and it is confidently expected by experts in this matter that a sufficient flow can be obtained to supply a city of 5,000 people by drilling to a sufficient depth. If necessary, several wells could be put down.

This is what the city should demand of the waterworks company to do, and if that company will not undertake the task, then the city will have to tackle the job.

It has been said that if the intake pipe was moved to a point above the city we would get purer water. This may be true to a certain extent, but the river water will probably get worse instead of better, as time rolls on, and villages and towns along its banks grow in size and more garbage, sawdust and contaminating matter is thrown into the stream. Farmers living along the river also dump manure, carcases of dead animals, etc., into the river. And so it is safe to say that the water in the river even above the city will get worse year after year.

Besides, it isn't necessary to expend thousands of dollars to move the intake pipe to a point above the city when the water can be gotten to the power house as pure as it is above the city. The enforcement of an ordinance against the dumping of garbage and refuse into the river within the city limits, would obviate the necessity of changing the location of the power house.

A system of filtration has been spoken of as a means of purifying the water, but if disease germs can only be eliminated by boiling the water—as has been stated repeatedly by medical men during the past winter—then filtration will do no good, and we can only fall back on the only safe, sure and proper remedy—artesian wells.

THE REPUBLICAN PLATFORM.

The republican platform embodies reforms in the city government that our citizens have ever been clamoring for, and should the republican city ticket be elected the republican party will stand pledged to the city to see that those reforms are carried out. Not only is the platform a good one but the men nominated are among the best business men of our city and, should they be elected, their work is blocked out for them so that they know what will be expected of them and the city knows what to expect. Not a single interest has been neglected in that platform and all men who believe in an economical, business administration of city affairs can honestly support that ticket.

THREE PROPOSITIONS.

Next Tuesday the voters will be asked to vote "yes" or "no" on the propositions, viz:

1. Shall the city own and operate a waterworks and electric light plant?

2. Shall the intake pipe be changed to a point above the city?

3. Shall the city own and operate a city hospital?

The first question we have discussed in another article. As stated therein, the main point is not the ownership of the plant, but the securing of better water. The city council should demand of the waterworks company that better water be supplied. If the company refuses to do this, then the city should take some action, and the question of the ownership of the plant will have to come up.

The second proposition we have also explained in another column.

As to the third proposition, we would refer the voters to the report of Aldermau Jennings to the city council on this question, which we publish in this issue of the JOURNAL. The report also was that the total cost of keeping city patients at the county hospital for the past year was $1,-161.12, and the city has been, or will be, reimbursed by patients for a portion of this, and it is expected that the actual cost to the city will be between $600 and $700, which would not go very far towards maintaining a hospital.

Although these questions are only submitted to get the sentiment of the people, and the approval or approval of all of them does not require the council to take any action, yet it is probably safer to vote them all down.

In the Duluth Commonwealth, A. S. Thompson sums up the effectiveness of the idea that St. Paul and Minneapolis can be made the head of navigation for Lake Superior, simply by cutting a canal between the twins and Duluth. He does not, however oppose the proposed appropriation to provide for a survey if said survey will include within its scope a route to connect the Red River Valley with Duluth by canal. Such a canal would be of great practical benefit to the whole state and has already been pronounced feasible by a partial survey by practical engineers. It is probable that this generation will never see this improvement, but the day will come when it will be an accomplished fact and the people of that day will wonder greatly why we of this day did not awake to the importance of the work and put it through.

AND now comes the report from Duluth that gold has been discovered in the Mesaba range, in far greater abundance than was ever thought of at Rainy Lake, and Duluth sits supremely upon her everlasting hills, complacently viewing the prospects o'er as who should say: "Well what are we here for anyway? We lead the world as a wheat market; our iron mining interests are second to none and if you think we are going to let a few Rainy Lake boomers outdo us you just watch our gold mine smoke."

THE Democrats inform us that they believe in protection to the workingmen, but they forget to inform us that it is the foreign workingmen that their policy protects instead of the workingmen of America. It is easy to see that the more of foreign manufactured goods we consume the less of these goods we can manufacture in America.

THE Times gravely informs its readers that the present hard times is the effect of Republican misrule. In 1892 it assured the people that if the Democrats were placed in power they would at once knock out the tariff laws and thus ensure great prosperity to the country. Well, they have been in power for over a year; they have not fulfilled their promises; hard times commenced with their rule and have continued to grow worse. Where is that wave of prosperity and when do they intend to trot it out?

IT has been charged that the Republican party intends to commit the city to the purchase of the water works. This is not wholly true. The Republican party insists that the citizens be supplied with pure artesian water and with electric lighting just as cheaply as that can be done, and intends to secure such service, even if in doing so the city is obliged to purchase the present plant or purchase another.

GROVER has been so persistently lesslged by the silver men to veto the seigniorage coinage bill that it is thought he will comply. On the other hand it is as confidently asserted that he will allow it to become a law without his signature.

THE HOUSEKEEPER.

Clothes carefully folded and sprinkled are half ironed.

A clean apron worn while hanging the clothes helps keep them clean.

The clothesline, as soon as its duty is ended, should be reeled up and placed in a bag until next time.

Dish towels and common towels can be ironed just as well in half the time if folded together once as if ironed singly.

Clothes when brought in should be separated and folded at once. If left in a heap, or tied together, many wrinkles accumulate.

Pillowslips should be ironed lengthwise instead of crosswise if one wishes to save wrinkles out instead of in.—Good Housekeeping.

A pair of white gloves or mittens are a comfort to hands taken from hot suds to hang clothes in zero weather; also a close fitting jacket and hood to keep one from catching cold.

Sheets folded across, bringing the wide and narrow hems together, then folded again, then ironed across both sides, are finished quickly and look as well as if more time were spent on them.

THE PEDAGOGUE.

Valsar college was founded by Matthew Vassar in 1865.

Chicago has 800 private schools, 350 seminaries and 4 universities.

Leland Stanford university, though only in its third year, has already nearly 900 students, of whom about 300 are girls.

Massachusetts, with 354 towns and cities, has 883,000 pupils in her public schools and 60,000 more in private schools and academies.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON POOR.

Crookston, Minn., Mar. 13, 1894.

TO THE HONORABLE COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF CROOKSTON, MINN.:

GENTLEMEN: Your committee on relief of the city poor, respectfully submit to you their report in full of their transactions commencing April 17th, A. D. 1893, to date of this report. Your committee have made this report as concise as possible, having due regard to the completeness thereof; and would state that that report fully covers every item of relief afforded through your committee and ignores only some applications for relief or assistance that were found to be undeserving by your committee upon the investigation always carried out by your committee.

It is the opinion of your committee that the demands made upon the city for relief and assistance are not excessive when the extremely hard times, great scarcity of employment for labor and the unusual preponderance of sickness are duly considered and borne in mind.

Your committee have, as far as possible, procured notes or due bills from recipients of relief through them, that are attached hereto at present, and particulars of which follows the recapitulation of the financial report.

Your committee would draw your attention to the fact that Frank DeLude has worked on the streets in the city, towards payment for assistance rendered him by your committee and would respectfully request that proper credit be given the poor fund for the amount of nine dollars and seventy-five cents ($9.75); and, further would suggest that proper credit be also given the poor fund for amounts paid to the County Hospital by patients admitted as city charges, as per report following.

Your committee have endeavored to the best of their ability to fully protect this city from any and every chance of wrongful relief being given, or undue expenditure entailed on the city, and we have done this regardless of the time necessarily occupied by visits and investigations, and also of the trouble and frequent discomfort accompanying of necessity their relations between the poor and dependent sick citizens and the city.

Regarding the cases that have been treated at the County Hospital as charges on the city and admitted through your committee, we must state that each and every case was fully investigated before necessarily and on the advice of a reputable physician of this city.

Your committee now follows our report of bills presented to your committee remaining unpaid, showing the amounts as presented and the amounts your committee respectfully recommends be allowed under the heading we have marked "Reduced to:"

A Little Daughter

Of a Church of England minister cured of a distressing rash, by Ayer's Sarsaparilla. MR. RICHARD BIMBA, the well-known Druggist, 307 McGill st., Montreal, P. Q., says

I have sold Ayer's Family Medicines for 40 years, and have heard nothing but good said of them. I know of many performed by Ayer's Sarsaparilla, one in particular being that of a little daughter of a Church of England minister. The child was literally covered from head to foot with a red and exceedingly troublesome rash, from which she had suffered for two or three years, in spite of the best medical treatment available. Her father was in great distress about the case, and, at my recommendation, at last began to administer Ayer's Sarsaparilla, two bottles of which effected a complete cure, much to her relief and her father's delight. I am sure, were he here to-day, he would testify in the strongest terms as to the merits of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

THE REIGN OF MUD.

IT COMES JUST AFTER THE MELTING OF THE WINTER'S DRIFTS.

It Is No Joke to Travel Over Roads Covered With Disintegrating Snow—The Delights of Being Stuck in a Miry Highway. Von Dusenbinkin and His Pumpkin Seed.

It is in the springtime that the curse of mud comes to make the life of him who dwells in the country an abomination, a nightmare and a drawn out succession of longings—that is, since the modern movement for better roads has taken possession of the region and caused highways of solid foundation and smooth, hard surface to be substituted for the fenced in wagon tracks of leaping mud that still form thousands of miles of the roads of the United States.

The trouble opens when the snow begins to disappear. Perhaps the drifts while melting are quite as trying as the mud itself in localities far enough north to be within the belt of considerable snowfalls. By a perversity of natural laws the drifts pile themselves up between the fences of the roads and also persist in spots along the way for days and sometimes weeks after most of the snow has disappeared from the fields. The track of a sleigh is much narrower than that of a wagon. Consequently when so much of the snow has gone that sleighing is no longer possible and wheeled traveling is done must be by wagon the wheels, when they come to the lingering drifts, have to make new tracks for themselves outside those that have been beaten hard by the tread of horses' feet and the runners of the sleighs. The result is often "spreading," which may be due either to dishing of wheels or springing of axletrees. The latter may even sometimes break.

The sketch that accompanies this article was drawn from memory, but it correctly shows forth the conditions to which I have referred, likewise the frame of mind into which the lucolic driver is generally thrown when he realizes that he has got into a "spread." It would not be decorous to repeat in type the language that sometimes flows from the bucolic mouth on such occasions.

It will be pretty clear to the reflective mind why the rumbler, who, to travel, must pass over drifted roads in the spring of the year, aims to go about as little as possible until the roads get settled, and that when he does drive he does not use a light wagon. The drifts will not have more than begun to melt before the frozen ground begins to soften. The farther north it is the later the general breaking up period, and the colder the previous winter the longer this time of mingled snow and mud will last. It is not over until all the frost is out of the ground and all the mud is dried up. When that has taken place, the roads are settled.

The time of greatest horror is when there are alternate stretches of snow and mud along the highways. It is then that the mud has no bottom that can be found, and it is then that he who has to drive 10 or 15 miles has need of all his persistence and fortitude. This is doubly true if his route lies over a road that traverses first hill and then valley. The hill roads will be deep, in disintegrating drifts, the roads of the vales fathomless with a slimy, unwieldy mixture of mud and water. On the uplands the wagon may "spread," and in the lowlands the stiff mud may wrench off a wheel. Then, in order to traverse the steps of the highway, he has to take a rail from the roadside fence and make a "drag." By this means he escapes the slough into which he has fallen only to be stuck in the next one. Then his horses, tired beyond equine endurance, balk.

After half an hour of alternate coaxing and whipping they are induced to pull together again, but with such frantic energy perchance as to break a whif-fletree—which the driver, by the way, calls a whippletrie. This sort of disaster is apt to take place on some lonely stretch of road where there are no farmhouses, and where, if the damage he sustains is great, help must be had, it cannot be got without a half mile tramp to the nearest dwelling.

The alternation of hill and drifts and vale and mud does not occur, of course, on the roads of the prairie states or any other flat region, but the hilly roads, after all, have certain advantages, for where there are hills there is gravel, and that help must be had, it cannot be got without a half mile tramp to the nearest dwelling.

But the level reaches of western

New York and of Illinois and Iowa and Kansas and Nebraska are stoueless, and the soil is deep, and when soaked with the combined moisture of melting snows and copious spring rains is of about the same consistency as dough—that is, too wet.

The roads that traverse the strip of western New York country that lies between the Ridge—a natural road that was in geological eons the shore of a vast inland sea—and Lake Ontario are quite as fathomless at breaking up time as are any that exist in the flat states of the west. Those more fortunate individuals who live on and south of the Ridge have much enjoyment of the verual plight of their friends who dwell in what they all call the Black North. There are many stories told of the floundering about of the Black North men at this season of the year, and here is one. It is possibly an exaggeration, but it has amused many generations of Ridge folks, and in the language of the present day "it goes."

Living in that section of the Black North that is bisected by an imaginary line drawn from Brockport, on the New York Central railroad, to the pole star, there was many years ago a farmer named Von Dusenbinkin. He was somewhat close in his ideas as to money—what our Connecticut friends would call "near." He would drive 20 miles and back—a day's journey—with 10 pounds of butter to get an advance of 2 cents a pound on the products of his small dairy, and he would spend half a day in buying time beating down the price of a pitchfork from $1 to 90 cents. He used to keep his daughters busy in the fall gathering pumpkin seeds. These he would take to market late in the winter.

Well, one year the drifts in the Black North were so deep that the roads were well nigh impassable, and Von Dusenbinkie did not market his pumpkin seeds until the spring breakup was well under way. The mud was deeper along a strip of territory about a mile wide just north of the Ridge. That natural road was itself quite dry, and sure he could get there with his pumpkin seeds before he would be all right.

His progress was slow, and the first indication the Ridge folks had that any one was attempting to reach terra firma from the puddingy regions to the north was the sight of a commotion in the mire about a mile down the road. It was like a feeble, slow moving wave of mud pretnuch as anything. On the sluggish crest of the wave a small black object was observed. Ridge folks gathered with spyglasses to watch the phenomenon. After about an hour it became apparent that the commotion was caused by a horse and a wagon and a man journeying southward. First it was seen that the small black object on the slow moving wave crest was a hat. Then the man's head appeared, then a pair of horse's ears. Then gradually the entire "rig" hove into view, dripping with the mixture of earth and water of which the road was composed.

When the Ridge was reached, it was plain to all that the driver was Von Dusenbinkie. His teeth were chattering, for the air and water were ice cold, but his face wore the expression that comes only to the countenances of men who have achieved. He bore the gryting of the Ridge folks with philosophic ill some one asked him jeeringly what he had brought with him. They had looked for his bag of pumpkin seeds, but its owner they had been washed away and their formed component parts of the mud of the Black North.

The story goes on to the effect that it was then that the movement began to gravel the roads that lead from the Ridge toward the lake. At all events, most of the main highways are now redeemed from their old time spring fathomlessness, and if Farmer von Dusenbinkie still lives and has some pumpkin seeds to take to market this spring he will be able to do so without running the risk of being smothered in the mire.

All joking aside, the period in every spring during which farmers in certain country districts are most unpleasant is a most depressing one, and one which cannot but tend to be the source of much special. It should be done away with, and right speedily. But it does not become those who dwell in' cities—and at least in some cities—to rail too much about country mud unless they are willing to admit that they are equally at fault. Some of our large city located not more than a thousand miles from New York that has miles and miles of streets that for depth and foulness of mud each spring would put to blush the most remote country road. And I know of another city almost as large, situated in an inland state, where some of the streets are just as bad. Perhaps some of the readers of this newspaper can guess the name of that city. I. CHAPTER VII.

CROHOOR-DE — SAMUEL WATKINS TO HENRY VIGORS.

You will no doubt have already read the official report in which I have informed the authorities of the disappearance of Rev. Mr. Freeman's second son under circumstances somewhat similar to those which attended the disappearance of the eldest, Mr. John Freeman. This extraordinary event has caused a degree of consternation and alarm over the whole countryside which it would be impossible to describe. On the morning of Friday last about 10 o'clock Edward Freeman, whose existence the discovery of his brother's piece of concealment, voluntary or enforced, have been so indefatigable, was seen walking in the direction of Dhu-Corrig and no doubt on his way to that fatal and ill omened rock. Two children coming along the main road saw him turn aside and step lightly down the little lane or boreen leading to Dhu-Corrig. He had a fishing rod on his shoulder and a box of bait in his hand. He has not been seen since. The mystery is infinitely more than doubled by this second disappearance, for with it our hypothesis regarding the first—viz, that Melody murdered him—vanishes too. I declare I begin to feel myself in something supernatural and uncanny in the whole of this Freeman affair. All other theories having failed, I am among you, though I may earn nothing but your contempt by the avowal, that I feel my thoughts straying perversely in the direction of supernaturalism as that which may supply us with the key to this astounding mystery. A singular superstition of old standing, but which was believed to have died out, has been revived among the people to account for the disappearance of the brothers. It is said that the coast is haunted by what the English speaking fishermen call "a worm," and the Irish speaking a piast. Even before the disappearance of Edward Freeman I overheard talk of this piast in connection with John Freeman's disappearance, but when I haughtily desired more definite information on the subject I was refused. At 500 are worse, when I was first stationed in this district I determined, for professional reasons, to learn the language in which the people express their most intimate thoughts—that is to say, the old Gaelic tongue. It has been very useful to me. I have always found that the people are much more communicative and confiding in a person who can speak to them in this ancient language. Concerning the piast, however, on the occasion referred to I found the men whom I had overheard speaking sullenly and obstinately uncommunicative. I am certain, however,

Anton Erickson, democratic candidate for alderman in the First ward, says he is by no means a democrat and moreover, he intends to move out of the ward about May 1st.

E. D. Childs was in St. Paul last week to attend a meeting of the drgiuage commission. The commissioners will soon make another tour of inspection in the district to decide where the next work shall be done.

"Sidney George" was in the city on Monday evening. Said he had just bought 2,500 pounds of snake root at Thief River Falls and St. Hilaire. He says: "Snake root is better ash wheat, by shimiay christmas, and ven everybody vot can dead dig him I don'd can see how dot is, don'd it?"

Chaffis says money is some object to him, and to the wholesale house where he gets his material, therefore he reduced his price for cabinet photographs to $2.00 per dozen, with the hope of getting more money. The work is just the same as you paid $3.00 per dozen for before, and guaranteed to be as good as you can get any where at any price.

The Times opens up its mud batteries upon both tickets in the field, calling the members of one "silk-stockings" and representatives of monied aristocracy, and the other "riff-raff and hobtails," and the Times knows that it has only chance of electing its ticket is by the use of the "riff-raff and bobtails!" The Times crowd did all in its power to get the populists to take the field and hopes by such means to keep the populists stirred up to draw just as many votes as possible, knowing that every populist vote is a half vote for the Times ticket. The populists ought to have sense enough to fool the Times man once by voting squarely against the Times ticket.

The fourth ward republican caucus was the biggest in the city the house being crowded to suffocation and many could not get in, in fact it was so big as to be unwieldy and tips in minds us of a subject that we have been contemplating for sometime i. e. the formation of a new ward—the sixth. On Jerome's addition there are nearly eighty votes and if that is not considered sufficiently large Ash street, from the Baptist church to the Episcopal church might be included. If increasing the size of the council should be deemed objectionable one aldermen might be dropped from the fifth ward and give the sixth one. As the fourth ward is to-day it contains by far the largest number of votes of any in the city and has only the same representation in the council as the fifth, which is the smallest.

The republican city convention that was held in the hall on Saturday March 24th was one of the pleasantest and most harmonious ever held in this city and was a truly representative body of men. No one knew beforehand what the ticket would be, and the fixed determination of every delegate seemed to be to make a ticket that would commend itself to the judgment of the voters for its business ability, and this determination was rigidly adhered to with a view solely to the best interests of the city. Not only was a good able ticket nominated but a good inspiring platform was adopted. This platform was drawn up with a view to subserving the best interests of the city and embodies reforms long called for. The ticket deserves to win.

It is not my object to do the cheapest work in the market, but the very best at the least price. Good work and good material deserves its reward. CHAPIN.

The trains from the west on the Great Northern road have been way off time many days since the storm. The train for the south left for about noon on Monday about 14 hours late.

If the "riff-raff and bobtails" have an atom of self-respect they will repel the insult of the Times at the polls. The Times has carried the campaign out of politics and made a personal matter of it by its base insinuations.

Staff Capt. Blanche Cox, assisted by Lieut. Bowers and Owens, will hold three days special meetings commencing Friday evening at 8 o'clock in the Baptist church. Those who have heard the captain, speak in very high terms of her eloquence. Every body cordially invited.

The Republican platform is the only one that promises anything tangible, in the field in this city. Read it over and then you can see which party is deserving of your support. The democratic platform pledges itself to the cause of democracy—the republican platform to the cause of better government in city affairs.

E. M. Walsh: There is no city or town in the northern part of Minnesota or Dakota that is favored as the city of Crookston in procuring in any quantity a supply of pure artesian water. And it is in matter of necessity and not a question of finance, that the present water works company furnish to this city artesian water, or the City of Crookston put in its own water works and supply at as low a rate as possible the best water on earth, when water can be procured with as little difficulty as it can be here. This city is in a good financial condition and for the amount of the cost of putting pure water into every building in the city, the citizens should not hesitate for a moment to push the matter along as fast as prudence and business tact will allow.

Ward Committees.

At the republican caucuses on Thursday evening the following ward aldermen were nominated:

That "Digest."

The Times, on Tuesday evening favored its readers with an "editorial" (probably) which it doubtless intended as a digest of the Republican platform. It thinks (of course) that the attitude of the democratic party on the tariff has had anything to do with the unparalleled hard times that have prevailed ever since the democrats were entrusted with the government, but the strongest minds, the most intelligent among democrats even, recognize this as the cause of the hard times. The Times now admits that the most of the platform is all right but attempts to charge plagiarism, forgetting that the democratic platform was not made public until after the republican platform was read in public. If there was any plagiarism it was in the democratic side of the house. The Times then indulges in a lot of back-number, non-progressive arguments trying to prove that Crookston does not want any more railroads, does not want any more road shops, does not want any more improvements because all these might cost our citizens five or ten cents each per year extra, to pay for improvements that would ensure steady employment and good pay for our laborers, and thousands of dollars of added business to our city. The Times says the republican party favors every improvement that shall redound to the city's progress, and urges its followers to vote against progress "because progress will cost the taxpayers something, possibly." Because for every five cents a taxpayer may pay out he will reap a reward of five dollars. The Times would have the country go back to Red River carts because a railroad might cost taxpayers something. But the Times overlooks one important fact in its calculations—the fact that people are not a set of ignorant fools to be caught by such chaff. The people of this city are in telligent enough to understand such platforms and to decide which is to their best interest, and as to the causes of the hard times, they do not need to have the Times man explain that as he seems to know less about that than anybody.

A Lively Blow.

About 5:30 on Friday afternoon a fierce snow storm set in, one of the fiercest we ever saw in Minnesota lasting about 30 minutes, when it ceased as a bit and later on the wind began to blow, increasing until it reached the fury of a hurricane, continuing nearly all night, doing considerable damage in the city to the roofs, awnings, plate glass windows and such things. The fall suffered the loss of a portion of the tin roof, the Northwestern hotel was considerably damaged, Fontaine & Anglin lost a portion of their tin roof, S. W. Vance's block, (known as the Milette block) lost three large plate glass windows, (fully insured) and others suffered more or less.

P. M. Ringdal started for Goodhue county on Tuesday evening, to attend the trial of O. A. Tweetmoe, who has been arrested for forgery. Tweetmoe forged the name of what is said to have paid Ringdal a forged note for $200 as part payment.

"Riff-raff and Bobtails."

Speaking of the populist city ticket the Times says:

"The populist ticket, as was to be expected, is made up of the riff-raff and bobtail of society."

Our populist friends must feel a wonderful wave of self-respect rush over them as they read the above opinion of themselves and reflect upon the fact that the only offer this ticket being in the field can have is to elect the ticket championed by the Times. Only for the "Riff-raff and Bobtail" the Times crowd would be downed so effectually that they would not know they were in it, and the Times knows it and hopes to stir them up to get out a big vote, as a vote for the populist ticket is a half-vote for the Times. We cannot see how any self-respecting man can consent to gratify the Times by giving it the help it desires. The Times has always looked down upon the middle class, "the riff-raff and bobtails that compose the populist party" and we should think they would have at least manhood enough left to vote against the Times' ticket. But will they do it? Or will they vote as the Times desires to have them and then be spit upon and trampled down by their votes shall give the Times' ticket a victory? Talk about American freedom! But it is serfdom, the most servile SLAVERY to politic engines that ever existed. Is there a self-respecting man who will submit to resent such insults is to vote against the Times' ticket.

Euclid Items.

Miss Annie Hancock came up from Crookston and spent a few days with her parents.

Rev. Joseph Astwood is assisting Rev. Mr. Frazer in conducting a series of meetings at Stephen this week.

Miss Mary Theordorf, of Warren, came down Tuesday to visit a few days with her sister, Mrs. John Hanson, and Euclid friends.

Misses Annie Walker and Hattie Davidson came up from Crookston to take in the Toal wedding supper.

Mrs. G. H. Fargo returned home Tuesday after a visit with her daughter and little son.

The McCrackens have moved out on the Hillsboro road of town. Geo is general manager and Tracey is chief cook. Their home will be headquarters for geese hunters.

Mrs. Isabella Sandberg is visiting relation at St. Hilaire. Mr. G. has entered a rest and we hope his trip will do him good.

Miss Maggie Keeley returned home Wednesday after a long sojourn at the St. Cloud Normal school.

Seed wheat is commencing to move.

Mr. Charles Teal, Jr., and Miss Alice Rose drove to Crookston Tuesday and were married at the Methodist church. They then came back to Father Teal's where an elegant supper and a few invited friends awaited them. Supper over, a right jolly good time was indulged in until about 9 o'clock, when the older members of the company started for home and the younger lads and lasses commenced to arrive and the merry dancers had full sway until almost daybreak, and when they departed it was with the earnest wish that Charles and bride would have a long and peaceful voyage through life together.

GRAND REPUBLICAN VICTORY

The City Election Last Tuesday Gave the Republicans All the City Offices But One.

The Republicans Elect the Mayor, Alderman-at-Large, Clerk, Treasurer and Two Constables.

The Democrats Elect the Assessor, and Try to be Thankful for What They Have Got.

The Republicans Elect three Aldermen, the Democrats two, and the Dems. and Pops. One.

The republican party has again come to the front in the city.

We met the enemy and they are ours.

Tuesday was election day, and despite the fact that the weather was decidedly democratic, the republicans carried the city and elected every candidate on the ticket except the assessor and two aldermen.

It was a grand victory, as the democrats have heretofore had a plurality of from 50 to 60 votes, and the head of the republican ticket this year received a plurality of 37, which makes a gain for the republican party of about 90 votes.

This change of heart among the democrats is due largely to their dissatisfaction with the actions of the administration at Washington, and they take this means of showing their dissatisfaction. While this election has no bearing on national affairs, it has a political significance that shows which way the wind is blowing.

Party lines were drawn and the republicans, the democrats and the populists each put a good, clean ticket in the field. It was decided that there should be no personalities and no mud-slinging, and with the exception of the falsehoods circulated by the Times, we believe this was pretty generally adhered to.

Nine hundred and sixty-two votes were cast, which is the largest vote ever polled in the city. Had the weather been good, at least 1,000 votes would have been cast.

The candidates elected on the republican ticket with their pluralities, are as follows:

Mayor—John Crumb.....37
Ald.-at-large—J. W. Wheeler.....131
Clerk—W. A. Lanctot.....129
Treasurer—O. C. Christianson.....22
Constable—Wm. Bloom.....245
" —A. A. Glenn.....223

Aldermen—
First ward—G. O. Bulin.....19
Fourth ward—N. S. Gorvais.....73

The democrats elected the following:

Assessor—C. H. Mix.....16

Aldermen—
Second ward—Jos. Morrisey.....9
Third " —M. E. Kirsch.....2
Fifth " —A. McGregor.....2

The vote in the city is as follows:

NOTES.

The election was one of the most orderly ever held in the city—no quarreling or bickering either in the polling places or on the streets.

On the night preceding the election, about two inches of soft snow fell, making the streets and sidewalks terribly sloppy.

Little or no bad blood or ill feeling has been left by the election—which is something to be thankful for.

M. E. Kirsch was elected alderman in the Third ward "by the skin of his teeth," having only two votes majority.

J. B. Morrisey, who was returned to the council from the Second ward, had a close call, having only nine votes to spare. Mark Rauenbuehler gave him a hard chase, and was sidetracked during the whole campaign.

The democrats and populists in the Fifth ward combined on A. McGregor for alderman, and he defeated E. D. Childs by two votes. A much larger vote was polled than ever before, and it is said there were two illegal votes cast.

The French stood by the republican ticket in good shape.

The democrats say it was democratic votes that defeated them. We are rather of the opinion that it was the lack of democratic votes that defeated them.

Ole Christinson for treasurer had a strong competitor in Joe Mathews and only defeated him by 22 votes.

Despite the fact that the populists issued a daily paper, hired the opera house, had a brass band and a torch-light procession on the night previous to election, they didn't seem to be in it when the ballots were gathered in. All their money and their votes were squandered.

The democrats feel just a little chagrined over the result—because they felt so confident before election.

The Times must have been in desperate need of Kirsch's services in the council when it had to send to Grand Forks for a voter for Mike. It is also said that one of its employes, who resides in the 1st ward voted for Mike in the third ward.

The Tribune man made a great blow and blunder, claiming the earth before election; but that was all in the game—and for effect. As a democratic ally he is not as great a success as he fancied he was.

It was extremely comical to hear Sheriff Grandyson "use up" McKinley at the rally on Monday evening. The sheriff had better be content with his record of having been a very good sheriff and leave McKinley to more experienced orators.

It is said that a resident of the 1st ward and a resident of Grand Forks, constitutes M. E. Kirsch's majority in the third ward both Times employes.

The "silk-stockings" are feeling pretty fairly well, thank you.

For the first time in the history of our city the fight was made purely on party issues and the republicans came up smiling with a good healthy majority over the combine.

Spite of all the tricks employed, the Times crowd was downed in good shape.

The republicans make a clean sweep except for assessor. Mr. George is a man peculiarly fitted for the position from his long experience in the office of county auditor and his experience as a real estate man makes him an extra good judge of real estate values. It would seem that many republicans did not vote for him claiming that he was a stranger to them but they should have been willing to have learned something to the wisdom and discretion of the convention, as that body made extraordinary efforts to secure the very best material for that important office, and they had made a most excellent choice. If any of our candidates were worthy and competent there were none more so than August F. George.

The Times promised to snow the republican ticket under in good shape—but who ever knew the Times to keep its word?

Upon the basis of the vote for governor in 1892, if the relative party strength could have been preserved in this fight, the democrats would have had 12 majority. Acting upon this theory the democrats encouraged the populists in every possible way, hoping to hold their own strength intact and cut in on republican strength—but somehow the plan miscarried and the whole business went in the soup.

While listening to neighbor Holston's "speech" at the opera house on Monday evening we were forcibly reminded of what Artimus Ward said of the monkey: "He is an amoosin' little cuss."

The republican rally at the opera house on Saturday evening was an enthusiastic affair with a big crowd in attendance notwithstanding the democrats tried a diversion by a little rally of the "faithful" at the Cleveland house. R. J. Moutague gave an eloquent address filled with brilliant points which was listened to with marked attention. E. D. Childs was called upon for a speech and announced that he had been away from the city all day, had not been notified and hence was not fully prepared, however he gave a rattling good address that was received with hearty applause. Judge C. O. Christianson also made a few timely remarks and the meeting broke up everybody pronouncing it a great success in every particular.

Everybody says it was the cleanest prettiest fight we ever had in Crookston.

Marlette Heard From.

The Times man made a wholly gratuitous assertion that Alderman Childs last week, after he supposed it would be too late to reply before election, stating that Mr. Childs had "carried Mr. Marlette's resignation around in his pocket for weeks" On Saturday the JOURNAL received a telegram from Mr. Marlette denying the story and on Monday morning Mr. Childs received the following letter from him which bears the Times' statement as a lie out of whole cloth:

ARGYLE, Minn., March, 31, 1894.
E. D. Childs, Crookston, Minn.

DEAR SIR: I see in the Times of to-day that you are charged with receiving and holding my resignation from the city council I cannot understand how such a statement so far from the truth could have been given to the Times for publication, who ever the author is manufactured it out of whole cloth. The facts are as follows: I went to Crookston on the night of the last council meeting intending to hand in my resignation myself, but the train was two hours late and I was liable to be at the meeting next day I made inquiry for you intending to give same to you, but learned you were in the east, hence I was not able to communicate with you and I then requested one of my friends to notify you immediately before your arrival, so you would have ample time to elect a man to fill my unexpired term. I took the liberty to wire a message to the JOURNAL requesting them to publish same.

Respectfully Yours,
R. G. MARLETTE.

The Sun's Fire.

How was heat originally imparted to our great luminary? Was he "born in fire" and has he been in an active state of combustion since the day of his birth, or was he once "a darksome body, flitting hither and thither and yet going nowhere in particular?"

If once a mighty planet of somber hue, why is he now the torchlight as well as the beating apparatus of a great system of worlds, and, being both, who is equal to the task of calculating even the cycle of time wherein the great change took place? It may have been that there were no worlds in what is now the solar system prior to that time, or, if there were, probably only two!

These two black giants of this darkened portion of the great universes may have collided and coalesced into a vast nebula, from whence the whole of our system has been evolved. If light and heat were thus mechanically produced and still retained to a certain degree in our sun, the largest fragment of the two colliding worlds, is it not altogether likely that the great solar fires will finally burn out and that as a result man and all living creatures will become extinct on all of the inhabited planets?—St. Louis Republic.

COMMISSIONERS' PROCEEDINGS.

The report shows a falling off of $6,069,880.04 from 1892, which, while it is large, is less than that of many other states. The earnings for 1893 were $33,-417,281.07, upon which taxes were paid amounting to $923,884.40. In 1892 the earnings were $37,405,103.41, upon which taxes were paid amounting to $1,038,403.00.

MINNESOTA PINE.

The State Committee Will Keep on Bringing Suits.

ST. PAUL, April 3.—The pine land investigating committee was in session all day, receiving the reports of a subcommittee appointed to collect evidence and institute suits against the lumbermen who have possessed themselves wrongfully of the state's pine. The committee, as a body, as usual declined to give out any information for publication, and refused to make statements about sensations in prospect in the near future, but some members of the committee were not so non-committal.

"From the suits already instituted," said one, "the state expects to recover in the aggregate about $100,000 from the defendants. In every suit brought there has been an offer made by the lumber firms interested to compromise the matter, but in each case the committee has declined to compromise and preferred to leave the matter to the arbitrament of the courts."

WAR IN EARNEST.

Several Persons Killed in the Whisky Riots at Darlington, S. C.

CHARLESTON, S. C., March 31.—The war in Darlington is not over. The citizens are still hunting the constables. The fugitives have been located and a posse has started in pursuit of them. The adjutant general of the state is here trying to get soldiers to proceed to the scene, but without success. The mayor of Darlington has telegraphed for bloodhounds with which to track the murderers. The riot therefore reported took place at the depot. The correspondent of The News and Courier telegraphed this account:

A few citizens were seated around the depot, and a number of guns were collected in a group a short distance off at the time of the shooting. F. E. Norment expostulated at the dangerous being used by the dispensary agents.

then Constable McLando drew a pistol, and reaching over the shoulder of Rogers, shot Frank Norment dead. In an instant

The Firing Became General.

The constables used their Winchesters and the citizens returned the fire with their pistols. There were very few pistols among the citizens, however, and they had not a fair show against their well armed assailants. In the fight, Frank Norment was killed instantly, being pierced by half a dozen balls. Pepper was shot down in his tracks, a pistol ball going through his heart. Redmond fell a second later, shot in three places. After the shooting of Norment and Redmond, McLendon was shot through the abdomen. Chief of Police A. E. Darlegan was dangerously wounded in the body; Louis Norment was shot in the breast and arm, and K. D. Lucas was shot in five places. The constables kept up firing until they had cleared the platform. Chief of Police Darlegan, badly wounded as he was, rode back to the town, fearing what would happen when the news of the bloody work reached the citizens.

Spies Were Wounded.

The spies fled in all directions. As they were running through the town it was seen that four of them were wounded, one in the leg, another in the back and a third in the chest. A fourth had his nose shot off.

As soon as the citizens received the news of the shooting, they armed themselves and started in pursuit of the flying constables. They chased them into the swamp, firing at them as they ran. The militia companies of Charleston, Sumter, Manning and Winnsboro have all refused to respond to the governor's call for troops.

The absence of advices from Darlington gives color to the suspicion that the people of that section are preventing the use of the telegraph. A body of armed citizens left this city to aid the people of Darlington in their war upon the constables. In view of reported threats of lynching the governor and destroying the dispensaries, penitentiary guards have been detailed to guard the governor's mansion and dispensaries. Passengers from the scene of conflict report large gatherings of frenzied men and boys along the line of the railroad, and at the depots armed with guns. At each stopping place, the cars were entered and search made for constabulary. It is reported that the Florence dispensary was raided and looted during the night.

Refused to Obey.

CHARLESTON, S. C., March 31.—The fourth brigade of state troops ordered out to protect the whisky constables in Darlington has refused to obey. The adjutant general of the state is here trying without success to raise an army to go to Darlington.

Two More Dead Constables.

DARLINGTON, S. C., April 3.—A corner has just arrived from Timmonsville, near Timmonsville, and announces that two spies were found dead in the woods near that place at a late hour.

EXCITED AT DARLINGTON.

Twelve Companies of Militia Reach the Scene of the Trouble.

DARLINGTON, S. C., April 4.—Governor Tillman's military train, bringing 12 companies and 280 men, arrived at 9:30 p. m. They were met by the local military company and escorted to their quarters. Great excitement prevailed at the time the train arrived, but it has since died away. Governor Tillman has wired the citizens here that the presence of the troops is required to arrest those who participated in the riot three days ago. If the governor decides to make the arrest of those he will inform the citizens that at least half, if not all, the soldiers will lay down their arms and assist the citizens should trouble occur. Telegrams have been sent ahead of the train on which it is said the militia spies are traveling to Charleston, in order to have them captured and held until a posse from this place can be sent for them.

Stewart Is Now a Populist.

WASHINGTON, April 1. — Senator Stewart of Nevada has severed a card to the effect that he left the Republican party more than two years ago because that party was in favor of the single gold standard, and is now a Populist.

TWELVE BILLION DOLLARS LOST.

The Cost of Democracy to All Who Are Engaged in Business.

Another month has passed, and the record of the country's loss grows larger and larger. We are now able to present the results of 11 months' business under the policy of prostration of the trade party since April 1, 1893, in comparison with the corresponding 11 months beginning April 1, 1892, as shown by the volume of bank clearings reported to Bradstreet's. The result is a loss exceeding $12,000,000,000 in the aggregate trade throughout the country as follows:

	1893.	1892.
April	$4,838,819,812	$5,066,239,400
May	5,264,582,329	5,934,020,107
June	4,874,040,779	4,910,038,208
July	4,337,660,664	4,877,501,779
August	4,346,319,188	4,913,103,012
September	5,211,655,657	4,770,784,710
October	5,383,000,352	5,370,907,742
November	4,953,057,595	5,442,255,988
December	4,921,160,857	4,900,000,000
	1894.	1893.
January	4,225,549,268	5,098,110,251
February	4,188,490,451	5,066,070,932
Totals	$54,702,837,676	$58,776,790,570

Under the present administration the country has sustained a loss exceeding $3,000,000,000 during each and every month, and the greater is the monthly loss the more we have of the free trade lies. During February it amounted to almost $3,000,000,000, whereas 10 months ago the loss of trade was represented only by an insignificant, comparatively, $100,000,000. This total loss of $12,000,000,000 in 11 months represents a loss of $170 for every one of 70,000,000 persons.

It covers the shrinkage in the buying and selling of goods, the shrinkage in quantity, the shrinkage in values. It represents the great loss to labor through the absence of the manufacture and handling of goods. It represents the great loss to transportation companies and their employees. It represents the loss to farmers for the products they have sold.

But this loss of $12,000,000,000 does not by any means represent the aggregate of loss. It does not represent the shrinkage in the value of real estate, nor the shrinkage in the value of stocks and other investments, nor the shrinkage in the value of corn, wheat, wool, cattle and other crops that farmers have on hand and unsold and which have not yet passed through the ordinary channels of trade. It does not represent the decrease in the value of manufactures and other mines. It does not represent last year's loss of $212,360,495 in the value of the live stock on farms. It does not represent the nonpayment of interest on mortgages, the foreclosures, the anxiety, worry and vexation of spirit to the poor strugglers who have been ruined. It does not represent the agony of those who have been unemployed nor the hardships of their families, and it does not represent the terrible mortification that has been experienced by many who have been brought face to face with starvation.

These things are incidents to the $12,000,000,000 loss of trade. The mental suffering cannot be estimated by a money value, although it is a direct consequence thereof and a direct result of the unconscionable folly of the present free trade administration and its policy of prostration. Surely the United States senate will not permit such conditions to be prolonged.—American Economist.

Congress and the Country.

Each succeeding week of the present session of congress demonstrates more and more forcibly the utter incompetence of the majority to regulate itself. Unseemly squabbling, ignorance of management, inability to compel a quorum, even when it has so large a majority, lack of leadership, failure to formulate any policy of action, are all so glaringly apparent that it has become an "object lesson" to the people that is equally instructive as the murderous and destructive free trade Wilson bill.

Men are asking everywhere throughout the country if this can be the party that is in charge of the national administration—a party that with so large a majority is unable to govern itself. What then can be expected of its national administration? Setting aside all questions of free trade or protection, there are thousands of men who voted in 1892 for the select those who are now in power who are now positively afraid for their country.

They reason, and they reason rightly, that if the leaders of this party, which has so large a majority, are unable to afford protection for trade into what a deplorable condition must the country fall when left in such hands. These good people forget, however, that the majority does not represent a party of protection, but that it is against protection and in favor of a policy of prostration. Hence its maladministration in congress is but a natural part of such policy.—American Economist.

OFFICE IN McKINNON BLOCK.

McKINLEY'S SPEECH.

ENORMOUS CROWD IN MINNEAPOLIS TO GREET OHIO'S GOVERNOR.

The Great Republican Leader Reviews the Tariff and Conditions Under the Different Tariff Eras, From the Time of Washington.

Every seat and every foot of standing room in the Assembly Room of the big Exposition Building in Minneapolis was occupied Wednesday evening, March 28, by an audience of fully 10,000 people, who had gathered from all the Northwestern States, when Governor

GOVERNOR M'KINLEY.

McKinley, of Ohio, addressed the Minnesota League of Republican Clubs. The Governor said:

MR. PRESIDENT, GENTLEMEN OF THE REPUBLICAN LEAGUE OF MINNESOTA AND FELLOW CITIZENS:

Much has happened since the great Republican national convention of 1892 assembled in this hall. The platform and candidates of that great convention, admirable as they were, were rejected by the people at the election following; but the people had no sooner spoken than they realized their great mistake—a mistake which they now feel most sensibly and regret most deeply. The principles enunciated at that convention were true then; they are true now. They are as dear to Republicans now as then; they are better understood and more ardently supported by the great body of the people in the year 1894 than they were in the year 1892. While the Republican party failed to carry the election, the cause for which it contended did not fail. It survived the awful disaster and shines more brightly and gloriously than ever before.

Everything Suffered But Republicanism.

The past year has been a long one—the longest since the war. It has been full of changes and experiences which have been impressive and instructive, but expensive. All kinds of business have been seriously disturbed. Investments have been scarcely fixed; capital has been despoiled of its earnings, and labor, more than all and dearer to us than all, has encumbered in the wasting blasts of the great change by individuality has been cheated of its just rewards. Everything has suffered but the Republican cause. Everything has been blighted but Republican principles. They have escaped the mildew which has settled upon everything else. Even the Democratic party has suffered—a calamity we could bear with resignation if it had not also carried in its train the vast and sacred interests of the people.

The Principles Unassailed.

What were the great principles and policies thus enunciated in this hall? Let me enumerate them: A protective tariff, which shall serve the highest interests of American labor and American development; reciprocity, which, while seeking the world's markets for our surplus products, will not destroy American wages, nor surrender American markets for products which can be made at home; the use of both gold and silver with which to measure the exchanges of the people and chant nobody; honest elections, which are the true sources of public authority; the extension of our foreign commerce; the restoration of our merchant marine by home built ships; the creation of a navy for the protection of our national interests and the honor of our flag; the maintenance of the most friendly relations with all foreign powers and entangling alliances with none, the reaffirmation of the Monroe doctrine, and of our faith in the achievement of the manifest destiny of the republic as the best government of earth in the broadest and truest sense.

Who would modify these principles? who would reverse this declared policy; who would strike from the Republican banner a single star or stripe? Like all Republican doctrines they are unchangeable. Upon them the Republican party bases its claim to future supremacy, and impatiently awaits the constitutional opportunity to make its appeal to the people.

How the Democracy Won.

The Democratic party won in 1892, as in every contest since the war in which it has succeeded, by a campaign of pretense and glittering promises. It now stands demoralized on the field of performance, and has, so far, signally failed to redeem a single pledge it made to the people. It has been for many years denouncing the tariff, because some men became rich under its operations and others poor. The first year of Democratic power has cured all that, and the prescription has proved quite as effective on the one class as the other for it has involved them all in a common loss. What devastation and distress have been wrought in a single year!

The review of different departments of trade given today exhibits a collapse of industry and business which is almost without precedent.

To add to the perplexities of the situation under the menace of free trade, the Wilson bill, which has recently passed the house of representatives at Washington and is now in the hands of the senate, proposes ostensibly to reduce the revenues $70,000,000. This reduction is made on the theory of the Democratic free traders that it will relieve the people of burdensome taxation. Whether it does or not depends. But of one thing we are certain: It has relieved the people of employment, of work, of wages, of prosperity and of happiness, and of them of their homes. The blessings of good wages, good prices and good times are more to be desired than the promised relief from so-called "burdensome taxation." Such a relief is no relief.

HISTORY OF THE TARIFF.

Mr. McKinley then reviewed the history of tariff legislation. The founders of the Republic favored a protective tariff measure. The first protective tariff was formulated by James Madison of Virginia, and was favored and promulgated by President Washington. Southern members of house and senate voted for the first and later protective tariff laws. Calhoun, Washington and Jefferson were protectionists.

Washington, in his message of 1796, urged upon congress the "necessity of accelerating the establishment of certain useful manufactures by the intervention of legislative aid and protection." Jefferson in December, 1801, in his first message, congratulated congress upon the revenue derived from tariff duties.

The Kings of the Revenue Tariff of 1816.

In 1816 the first revenue or free trade tariff was enacted. Henry Clay in 1832, seven years after the adoption of this tariff, thus described the condition of the country: "The general distress which pervades the whole country is forced upon us by numerous facts of the most incontestible character. It is indicated by the diminished exports of native products; by the depressed and reduced state of our foreign navigation; by our diminished commerce; by excessive unfinished crops of grain perishing in our barns for want of a market; by the alarming diminution of the circulating medium; by the universal complaint of the want of employment and the consequent reduction of the wages of labor, and above all, by the low and depressed state of the value of almost every description of property in the nation.

No relief came until the protection act of 1824. Among those who voted for that law were Democrats, who afterward became president of the United States—Jackson, Van Buren and Buchanan.

Tariff of 1857.

Mr. McKinley then went on to give the history of the repeal of this tariff in 1846 and the appeal to the country in 1848, when it was repudiated by the people in the election of General Taylor to the presidency.

Then came the tariff enactment of 1857, placing duties lower than since the war of 1812, and resulted in a panic that swept the country.

Is history worth nothing? Are experiences and its lessons to be forgotten? Are the teachings of the past to count for naught? Is the national distress, business depression and the universal poverty of the people, which have relentlessly followed the enactment of every revenue tariff measure in all our history, to be lost upon us in the calm consideration of this economic subject? Are all these to be discarded in the making up of our verdict? I implore you to consider, without bias, for they will steady your judgment in reaching a righteous conclusion.

THE WILSON BILL.

McKinley Calls It a Narrow Sectional Measure.

The Wilson bill is not like any of the early tariff measures, but is one in which the changed condition of the country and its marvelous growth and development are entirely ignored and forgotten. Its promoters forget that slavery no longer exists. They do not recognize nor appreciate the independence and dignity of labor and cannot understand that the protective policy under which we have had such splendid prosperity is not to be determined by geographical lines. The bill is a narrow, sectional and provincial measure, unworthy the great party which proposes it and wholly unsuited to the needs of the country.

Finance Committee's Action.

An examination of the bill by the Democratic members of the finance committee of the senate evidently convinces them that Mr. Wilson's bill and his argument in support of the same are likely to result in false principles. So coal goes back to the tariff list, iron-ore to the tariff list and lead to the tariff list, leaving free wool alone, the only product of agriculture, to support the false theory of the house bill.

I have looked with some degree of care through the bill. I find nothing but irritation and aggravation to the great industries of the country. No interest suffers by it more severely than agriculture, and labor of all kinds seems to have been especially marked for execution.

But, doubtless, in compensation for this added burden of upward of $50,000,000, and because of it, the lowest tariff on tobacco and have extended the bonded period for the warehousing of whisky and giving to the distillers eight years in which to pay the tax.

Administration Position on Internal Taxes.

The present position and action of the Democratic leaders on internal taxes is peculiarly an anomalous one. They are so determined to break down the protective system that they are willing to resort to internal taxes, which have been opposed not only by every Democratic national administration preceding the present one from Jackson's to Buchanan's, but also, as a matter of principle by every other administration, Federal, Anti-federal, Whig or Republican in our history. The only excuse for the resort to such taxation has been the financial exigencies of actual war. Laws imposing internal taxes have always been repealed as rapidly as such exigencies disappeared and the first opportunity to make its appeal to the people.

As to Reciprocity.

To my mind another hurtful provision of the Wilson bill, entirely unwarranted by experience and unjustifiable as a matter of wise international policy, is that which repeals section 3 of the act of 1890, commonly known as the "reciprocity clause." This, it will be remembered, was enacted to secure reciprocal trade between the United States and countries largely producing sugar, molasses, coffee, tea and hides, and under which this country has been able to secure very profitable to the people and of the most promising proportions.

Not Dicating Any Tariff Rates.

I am not here to discuss tariff rates or schedules. These are subject to change up or down, as new conditions require it; but my insistence is that these changes must ever be governed by the protective principle, and within that principle raise may be, should be and will be amended as time, new processes of manufacture and changed commercial conditions require; but they must not fall below a rate which will adequately measure the difference between the American scale of wages and that of competing countries, and must always be in favor of the labor of our own country and the home market for our people. The principles upon which they were made are not subject to amendment. The tariff policy of this country must be protective. That is what we contend for—that is what the American people want to have.

Mr. McKinley then referred to the Harrison administration and showed that he left the presidency with a surplus of $134,000,000 in the treasury, including the reserve fund, which, under Republican policy, had never been entrenched upon.

A Difference of Tariff Schools.

The advocates of tariff taxation are divided into two schools. Both schools believe in raising public money by a tariff, and only differ as to the kind of tariff to accomplish this purpose. One school, the Democratic school, advocates a tariff for revenue only; the other, the Republican school, advocates a tariff for revenue and also protection. A revenue tariff has no other aim or purpose and disclaims every other save revenue. A protective tariff, while raising all needed revenue, is ever mindful that the taxes imposed shall be upon those foreign products which will most encourage domestic production and rest most lightly upon the consumer.

An Enemy to American Prosperity.

A revenue tariff is an enemy to the American shop, the American workingman, to American prosperity, and American industrial independence. It has not a single element of patriotism. It has no national spirit or instinct. To supply the needs of the treasury is its chief and exclusive concern. It has no other. It is a mere precursor to national poverty, national bankruptcy and, individual distress. It is the forerunner of hard times. It is without a single worthy triumph.

Gets People Thinking.

The prevailing widespread distress emphasizes the necessity for enlightened public policy and wise statesmanship. The indifference which has been so prevalent for many years, has given place to a deep and pervading interest in public affairs. The masses of the people are considering economic questions more earnestly than ever before, and are aroused to their importance as they have not been to individual happiness and prosperity. To wisely guide them calls for the exercise of the highest wisdom, coolest judgment, and purest patriotism. No party can safely approach with the sacred fut-rests of the people or the events of the government without the possession of a fixed, honest and guiding trend purpose. Slightness of purpose is fatal to any party or reform, indispensable to wise administration and public confidence. The want of this quality is the infirmity of the present administration and the present congress. That which was due to discontent of every kind. It was not the result of unity of purpose, nor of fixed and united public sentiment. It was the outcome of Misguided Judgment, Pique, Passion and Prejudice.

The majority of those who voted for Mr. Cleveland and the present Democratic congress did not agree upon any principle or policy. They had their several different reasons for opposition to the Republican party and their temporary union was not inspired by devotion to Democratic principles, purposes or policies. Free silver sentiment was the banner on the ticket; opponents to free silver or to any silver in our circulating medium voted for the evident indications as we know it was largely opposed to a carry-on of the failure of our currency, voted for the Democratic ticket; it because he did not believe the Democratic leaders was a fit party to be trusted to disturb the tariff, the free trader voted it in the belief that the Democratic party would demolish all customs houses and had always been opposed to customs duties in the world; the single tax man, the disciples of Henry George voted it, while thousands who hate all such vagaries voted it, the silver standard, the gold standard, the mugwump, the dark, the paper money advocates and the advocates of sound money voted for it, the workingman voted it, and those who were certain that the Democratic success would be accompanied by the enactment of any legislation for the good of the country were of course found to be not only impossible.

Failure and Disappointment were bound to follow so astounding and incongruous thing as this, and the whole country suffers as a result. The administration and congress are without compass or rudder. Before they have secured any definite policy, they are yet wrangling about what they will or should be. Democratic senators are declared as to hurt with impatience for an opportunity to repudiate them. A general election was never before so much dreaded as the present or so much needed. Even Democratic opinion has there is in fact little difference between the two great commercial parties and that the country will prosper equally well whichever party is in power. We have completely exploded by one year's trial of the Democratic party. That difference has been shown to be so vast as to fill the country with disappointment. It is the opposition than who shall hold the offices. In fact it has been demonstrated that the success of one party or the other means all the difference between want and happiness, of prosperity and national discomfort and distress.

Upon some great issues are to be built up in the valley of the Mississippi. I know. You will no less or bear hereafter, if the 'old Dominion' state, dominion passed away from Virginia long ago. from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific ocean, and the center of the arch has moved northward. A new key stone is to be built in the state of Iowa, will rest on the Minnesota state, and a new Empire state will grow up in a northern latitude where the lands are richest and where the people who cultivate them are free and equal. That state which will be entrust to the great fundamental principles of the government, that state which will be the most faithful and most vigorous in devotion to the principles of union and liberty will be at once the Dominion state, the new Keystone state, the new Empire state.

The question for which the great new York statesman spoke so eloquently has been decided, righteously settled, as he plead so prayed it might be settled in favor of freedom. The decree of the great campaign in which he spoke, settled for the great Northwest for whom he spoke, the immortal liberty.

The liberty for which Seward spoke has been secured and the Dale's saved strong and happy forever. The virtue which is to advance the nation now free to its highest destiny and glory, must reside in the people not of the Northwest alone, but in the people of every part of our common country. THE CITY ELECTION.

The splendid republican victory in the city last Tuesday is but a repetition of the result of almost every election which has been held in the northern states this year. The great republican wave which was started in Pennsylvania has been rolling westward, and wherever the people have had an opportunity they have expressed their disapproval of democracy. They realize when too late, the sad mistake they made in putting the democrats in sole control of the government, and they are anxiously awaiting an opportunity to vote them out of office again. The people are learning by bitter experience what the result of democratic doctrine, put into practice, will result in. The every dread of it has depressed and stagnated the business of the whole nation until the cry of "hard times" has been heard from one end of the country to the other. The masses of the people may not be able to figure out just how these hard times were brought about, but they all know that they are with us, and that the democrats are in power; and they also know that for thirty years this country enjoyed unbiterrupted prosperity under republican administration.

There is no one but will comprehend the significance of these facts. Even the democratic press of the country is condemning the action of the democratic party in congress. Only last week the St. Paul Globe criticised and condemned the administration in terms as strong and forcible as the most partisan republican could use.

By the time another presidential election comes around the people will have such an experience as will make them reach out their hands to the republican party to lead them out of darkness into light, out of poverty into prosperity. When the republican principle of protection is again inaugurated and the confidence of the people restored, the shops, the factories, the mills and the mines will again be in operation as heretofore, and business will resume its wonted activity, and the people will enjoy the prosperity and happiness they did previous to this era of democratic misrule.

COUNTY DIVISION.

Another county division proposition is talked of by the people of Fosston. They want to cut off the Thirteen Towns from Polk county, and with a portion of Beltrami form another county. They are getting signers to a petition which will be filed with the secretary of the state, the same as other propositions already on file, and it will be voted on at the election next fall.

The petition which is to be filed with the secretary will be circulated in the city shortly for the purpose of obtaining signatures and getting the sentiment of the people of Crookston on the matter.

The advocates of the scheme say that if the Thirteen Towns are cut off it will make the county division agitation here for all time to come. At any rate it can do no harm to have another proposition in the field, and the people will have plenty of time before election to discuss the matter and decide which is best for the interests of the majority of the people of the county.

With a majority in both houses and a democratic administration to back it the democratic party don't seem to know enough to administer affairs in the interest of the people. In their platform they solemnly promise the country to do away with that horrid "robber tariff," and yet they do not dare to do that. If they ever intended to do so why have they not completed it? If they didn't intend to do so why did they promise.

The governor of Georgia appointed Speaker Crisp to succeed Senator Colquit, but the democrats were afraid that if Crisp left the House a speaker would be selected who would have sense enough to count a quorum when it was present in the House and so they persuaded Crisp to decline the honor. Patrick Walsh, editor of the Agusta Chronicle has been appointed.

On Monday the Senate was to commence its wrestle with the tariff bill, and the strong probability is that no change will be made in the McKinley law this session, from the fact that there appears to be enough democratic Senators who are opposed to a change to help the republicans hold the bill back and defeat it. This would be the best thing that could happen the country, for a little period of uncertainty is better for the country than the passage of the Wilson bill.

The democrats should secure a speaker of this House who is not afflicted with blindness. They could offer to secure a quorum without having to arrest democratic congressmen. Speaker Crisp will not recognize a quorum present unless such member responds to his name when called. Often when a quorum is present the speaker announces "no quorum." He seems to be blind.

The lessons a democratic administration has taught the country have been so effective that the democrats will be permanently retired in '96. They made their boasts during the Cleveland campaign that they were running an "educational" campaign, but it has not been quite all they supposed. The "education" the people received was a bitter dose—but they know when they have had enough and they have had quite enough this time.

GROVER did veto the seigniorage bill after all. The pressure brought to bear upon him was too great and Grover had to come down at last.

The trial was held at the office of E. E. Abbott on March 29th. The jury found them guilty of petty larceny and they were fined $10 and costs, not being able to furnish the wherewithal, they were taken to Crookston to be taken charge of by the sheriff at the expense of the county. They are two fine specimens of genuine heavy weights.

THE REVIEW TABLE.

The singular good fortune has fallen to the lot of The Cosmopolitan Magazine of presenting one of the most remarkable pieces of fiction ever written—remarkable alike for its author and remarkable because it has remained unsuspected and undiscovered for more than a hundred years, only to be given to the world at last in an American magazine. It is a comic story written by Napoleon Bonaparte when he was a young man. It has been in the possession of Lord Ashburnham until recently, when it was discovered by the Paris correspondent of the Cosmopolitan Magazine and appears in the April number.

The North American Review for April contains, among other excellent articles, Personal Reminiscences of the Vatican Council, by Cardinal Gibbons; "The Republican Outlook," by Thos. H. Carter, Chairman of the Republican National Committee; Private History of the Jumping Frog Story, by Mark Twain; "The Suppression of Lawlessness in the South," by Governor Stone, of Mississippi.

"The Progress of the World" of the April Review of Reviews contains a timely discussion of the question why the English pause of politics is more exciting than the American game. Other topics covered in "Progress of the World" are, the Selzinhorage bill, filibustering in Congress, the outlook for bimetallism, the Wilson bill in the Senate, Louisiana and free sugar, the Senate report on Hawaii, the triumph of the Brazilian republic, the Bluefields incident, the prosecution of election crimes, the present positions of the democratic and republican parties, the fight against the House of Lords, the Russo-German commercial treaty, the services of the late Dr. Poole, of Chicago, the death of Louis Kossuth, and many matters of international interest.

SCRIPTURE STUDIES.

HOW THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS ARE SELECTED.

A Committee of Fifteen Met In Philadelphia Recently to Choose the Course For 1896—Points In Sunday School History. Work of the Woodruffs Abroad.

If Robert Raikes, the humble English printer whose Sunday schools started in Gloucester 100 and more years ago, were the first to attract general attention, could have been privileged to be in Philadelphia the other day when the committee to select the international lessons for 1896 was in session there, his amazement doubtless would have passed his powers of expression.

The committee numbered 15, all men of the highest standing among the world's Sunday school workers, and their deliberations had to do with the direction of the study of the Bible by fully 20,000,000 persons. Not less surprising to Mr. Raikes perhaps than the magnitude of the work and the character of the men engaged upon it would have been the fact that none came nearer to being an Englishman than the two Canadian members—Rev. Dr. John Potts of the Victoria university, at Toronto, and Hon. S. H. Blake, a Dominion lawyer—and that all the others, a baker's dozen in number, were citizens of the republic founded by the "American rebels," whose fight for independence began four years before 1780, the date of the first Raikes schools, came to be known, four years later, when it was successfully concluded, as the world's greatest revolution. But though the committee is so strongly American in its work before it can be finally adopted and given to the world must be revised by a committee of Englishmen, which will meet in London a few months hence. It is not likely, however, that this London committee will recommend any serious changes.

An even dozen members of the committee were present, there being only three absentees. These were Mr. Blake, one of the Canadian members already mentioned; Rev. Dr. M. D. Hoge, a Richmond Presbyterian, and Dr. W. G. Cunningham, a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal church, located at Nashville. Those in attendance were Bishop J. H. Vincent of the M. E. church, founder of the Chautauqua summer schools, chairman; Rev. A. E. Warren Randolph, Baptist, of Newport, R. I., secretary; Dr. John Hall of New York; Dr. Potts of Canada, B. F. Jacobs, the Chicago business man in whose practical brain the idea of uniformity in Sunday school lessons first took definite form; Dr. A. E. Dunning of Boston; Professor J. J. D. Hinde of Lebanon, Tenn.; Rev. Dr. J. Blair of Independence, Pa.; President John A. Broadus of the Baptist Theological seminary at Louisville, Rev. Dr. B. B. Tyler of New York, Rev. H. Lewis Baugher of Gettysburg, Pa., and Dr. D. Berger of Dayton, O.

A number of persons not members of the committee were present. These included Professor F. K. Sanders of Yale, representing the Institute of Sacred Literature, who was in favor of the addition of lines of study which would "prove worthy of the efforts of the most advanced theological students," the representatives of two or three associations that publish lesson leaves and several ladies who desired the enlistment or lessons of a more elementary nature in the primary classes. It will be seen that widely differing views were presented by different persons, and it may be said that no two of the visitors agreed, so that the committee must have had a rather embarrassing task if any attempt was made to please everybody. It was stated at the close of the meeting by Mr. Jacobs that it had been decided that the lessons for the first half of the year should be taken from the gospel of St. Luke and those for the last half from the Old Testament. The English committee that will revise the work of the American committee is made up of Rev. Dr. J. M. Gibson, Mr. W. M. Grosser, Rev. Dr. C. H. Kelly, Professor Carr, Rev. Dr. S. Green, Mr. Edward Towers and Mr. Charles Waters.

It is not generally known probably even among active Sunday school workers that of the 22,782,224 teachers and scholars in the Sunday schools of the world 11,118,637 or almost half are in the United States, and that more than half of the remainder are found among other English speaking peoples, yet such is the fact. In truth, the Sunday school is practically an institution of the Anglo-Saxon race, though there are Sunday schools in France, Belgium, Switzerland, Italy, Spain, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, Germany and are in the missionary countries of Asia and Africa and the isles of the sea. But Bulgaria, Roumania, Greece, Macedonia, Montenegro, Turkey and Russia are almost without Sunday schools.

There seems to be little doubt in the minds of any that the unification of the lessons has been of immense benefit to the movement for extending the methods of the Sunday school. The international lesson series was adopted in 1872 at the Indianapolis convention for the United States, the Canadian Sunday schools came in three years later, and in 1889 the British conference followed suit. Though Dr. (now Bishop) Vincent is the man to whom the idea first seemed feasible and Dr. Eggleston showed its practicability, it was Mr. Jacobs who pushed it to adoption, and he is, therefore, and quite naturally, very popular among men who are at the top among Sunday school workers. This was shown by his election at the world's Sunday school convention held in St. Louis last year to the high office of president, an honor which Mr. Jacobs, who is as modest as he is efficient, accepted with manifest reluctance. It seems a little singular that America, a wilderness peopled only by wild beasts and pagan savages for centuries after all Europe had been Christianized, should lead so tremendously, so far as the Sunday school, unquestionably the strongest auxiliary to the church, is concerned. In fact, although there were Sunday schools on the continent before that year, it was not till 1833 that any definite move to extend and systematize them was entered upon, and it was Albert Woodruff, an American and a native of Massachusetts, who inaugurated the movement. It was in Paris that he began. He was taking a holiday trip through Europe and was much cast down by the desecration of the Lord's day in the gay French capital. The beginning was made before he became convinced that the first day of the week could best be redeemed to Christian uses in Europe by the establishment of Sunday schools.

Mr. Woodruff's first move was to secure a supply of American Sunday school music. Then he enlisted the sympathy of a number of pastors and laymen, and in half a dozen Sunday schools had been successfully organized in the American plan. A committee for the formation of similar schools throughout France was got together, and Rev. H. Pannier was made its chairman. Rev. J. T. Cook was the first Sunday school missionary in Europe, the field of his labors taking in Switzerland and southern France.

Mr. Woodruff became so greatly impressed by the success of the movement in France that in 1860 he determined to give up his business and devote his fortune and the remainder of his life to the work. By 1866 he was again on the other side of the Atlantic, where his abounded enthusiasm soon made itself felt. His wife, who shared his views, shared his labors with him. They began their labors at Naples. It was there, even more than now, in Europe a most unusual thing for a woman to engage in such public religious exercises as the conduct of a Sunday school. Mrs. Woodruff soon overcame the objections and was taking part in the exercises in Naples, but at Munich it was not so easy to do away with old world prejudices.

At Heidelberg, however, a banker named Brockelmann joined his fortune and his efforts to those of the Woodruffs, and for a quarter of a century expended largely of his time and his money in the work of Sunday school missionary labor throughout Germany. For two or three years Mr. Brockelmann was the only assistant of an independent character Mr. and Mrs. Woodruff. At Berlin Pastor Prochnow, the court preacher; Dr. Hoffmann; Hanpt, the organist, and Baron Kottwitz, the deposed the movement, and of course their co-operation had great strength thereto. American Sunday school music had never been heard in Germany until introduced by the Woodruffs, and it met with great opposition, more than once being characterized by Tentonic Christians, who seemed to think religion should be made as ingubrious as possible, as only fit to be heard in beer halls.

In 1877 the work that had been started by Mr. and Mrs. Woodruff bore fruit in the establishment of the Foreign Sunday School association. Under its auspices many thousands of publications have been issued in about a score of languages and dialects. These publications include periodicals for children printed in Spanish, French, Portuguese, Italian and Japanese.

A most important part of the work of the association has been the formation of schools among soldiers and sailors of Italy. These schools are scattered over a large part of Europe and are to be found even in such remote parts of the globe as India and Madagascar, so far has the work of the Woodruffs been carried. It is claimed, of course, that this society is the sole agency that has been instrumental in the rooting and procedure of the Sunday school idea in the old world. Its members recognize and work in perfect harmony with the enlightened ministers of the London Sunday School union and other missionary societies, but that the association is among the most potent of factors in foreign Sunday school work there can be no doubt.

DUNN'S BUDGET.

Interesting News and Gossip from the National Capital.

WASHINGTON, April 3rd, '94.

"Cleveland does not want a democratic successor," said a prominent democrat to me the night the president sent in his veto message of the Bland seigniorage bill. It has given the democrats a great shock, especially those from the south where the fiat money craze has taken such a firm hold of the people. They are afraid that about 30 or more seats in the house will be filled with Populists next congress.

I believe Cleveland was right. If a private individual or corporation proposed to do what the Bland bill did they would have been subject to a term in the penitentiary. Practically under the terms of the law by which the bullion in the treasury was purchased there is no seigniorage. Besides this did not offer anything to those who are in favor of, or are friendly to silver as money. It was as nothing. It could have been like issuing a forced loan, issuing legal tender notes.

* * *

More than eight weeks have been wasted in the democratic House of Representatives because the speaker will not take a common sense method and count those who are present as a quorum which prevents congress from legislating.

It is believed that the Wushburn anti-option bill will pass both House and Senate if there is time to consider it. The great trouble is going to be that as soon as the tariff is out of the way members will scatter in an effort to secure a re-election.

* * *

So far as that is concerned, if congress would attend to business when it is here there would be no need of any such lengthy session. Every man has a right to try and get back here, and in most cases it has been shown that he is doing his state good service in so doing. It is the re-elected men who have learned something and secured an established position who serve their states best.

* * *

A good man should not be obliged to make a hard fight for his election every two years. I am in favor of elections every two years and making changes when necessary. The change from one party to another is another matter. It is where the political sentiment of the district is the same that Isay good men should be returned to congress.

That sort of thing has worked well in those districts in the Minnesota legislature which have followed it.

Why don't the populists put up a big brainy man—if they have such—when they are making congressional nominations?

* * *

Both Senators Davis and Washburn will make speeches on the tariff and present the matter from a Minnesota standpoint. Both will be worth listening to and the speeches will be worth reading. Washburn has never made any pretensions to oratory, but he makes a good square talk and presents ideas. Being one of the republican advisory committee he is recognized as a leader in the Senate. Davis always talks well.

"When I was a Boy,"

Writes Postmaster J. C. Woodson, Forest Hill, W. Va., "I had a bronchial trouble of such a persistent and stubborn character, that the doctor pronounced it incurable with ordinary medicines, and advised me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I did so, and one bottle cured me. For the last fifteen years, I have used this preparation with good effect whenever I take and I know of numbers of people who keep it in the house all the time, not considering it safe to be without it."

"I have been using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for 20 years, with the most satisfactory results, and can cheerfully recommend it as being especially adapted to all pulmonary complaints. I have, for many years, made pulmonary and other medicines a special study, and I have come to the conclusion that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral occupies a position pre-eminent over other medicines of the class."—Chas. QUEENS OF HAWAII.

PLAYED PROMINENT PARTS IN THE ISLAND KINGDOM.

How Queen Kaahumanu Established "Woman's Rights"—Royal Processions, In One of Which a Dowager Wore Seventy-two Yards of Calico.

When the missionaries arrived at Hawaii, March 30, 1820, the condition of woman was that of a slave. She could not eat cocoanuts, bananas, oranges or fish, and one of the carious tabus, or interdictions, forbade her eating any kind of food with men.

Queen Kaahumanu sent for the new king, Liholiho, who was engaged in a drunken orgie out on the ocean in a canoe, and urged him to throw down the idols in the heiaus, or temples, and to clinch the matter by eating in public with a group of women who were feasting by themselves at a little distance from the royal abode. Staggering over to them, Liholiho, who was a very different character from his famous father, sat down and publicly ate some of their food. The cry went up, "The tabu is broken."

The torch was applied to the idols, and woman's emancipation began. Queen Kaahumanu was a huge, heavy mortal, and like all the chiefs she was proud and cruel. At first she treated the missionaries with disdain, offering only the tip of her little finger in salutation, but she became a zealous convert and remained to the time of her death, in 1823, at the age of 56, a firm and conscientious Christian, beloved by those who intimately knew her and universally respected for her abilities. She had ruled as consort of the great conqueror, as joint sovereign with his son, Liholiho, and as regent during the minority of Kauikeouli.

Kamamalu, the queen of pleasure loving Liholiho, was fond of display. On a state occasion in 1823 she was carried in procession, seated in a wheelboat on a frame of wickerwork borne on the shoulders of 70 men.

The boat and platform, 50 feet long by 12 feet wide, were covered with costly broadcloth edged by beautiful colored tapas (native bark cloth). The queen's dress was a scarlet silk mantle and a feather cloak. An immense Chinese umbrella, richly gilded and decorated with tassels and fringes of the same gaudy color, supported by a chief wearing a helmet, screened her from the sun.

Chiefs held aloft kahilis, or royal staffs, 30 feet high, the handles surrounded by alternate ivory and tortoise shell rings, beautifully wrought and highly polished, the upper part being arranged so as to form a column or plume of scarlet feathers of 1 feet in diameter and from 12 to 14 feet long. A more magnificent insignia of rank, conveying at once the ideas of grandeur, state and beauty, as they towered and gracefully nodded above the multitude, was never devised by barbarians.

Another royal lady, Kinau, who afterward shared authority with Kamehameha III (Kauikeouli), her title being Kaahumanu II, appeared in a scarlet pan, a long piece of silk wound round the body and limbs, with two long streamers. The pau is a very graceful costume, especially when worn by a female (or woman) on horseback, with the gayly colored streamers afloat in the wind. The two dowager queens appeared in this procession. One of them wore 72 yards of cashmere of double cloth, one-half being orange and the other half scarlet. This was wrapped about her figure till her arms were covered by the mass in a horizontal position, while the remainder, forming an extensive train, was supported by a retinue selected for that purpose.

The richness and variety of the dresses and colors, and the exhibition of the wealth and power of the chiefs, their hereditary symbols of rank, the stately kahilis, gold clocks and helmets, and the necklaces of feathers, intermingled with the brilliant hues and deep green of the flowers and wreaths from their native forests, rendered the spectacle at once unique and attractive. Groups of singers and dancers, to the number of many hundred, ever and anon met the procession, enthusiastically shouting their admiration in the willing ears of the chiefs.

Queen Kamamalu and Liholiho made a voyage to London in 1824. Before the ship weighed anchor at Honolulu the queen chanted a farewell:

"O heaven! O earth! O mountains! O sea! O my counselors and my subjects, farewell!"

The royal travelers created a sensation in London. Queen Kamamalu exhibited herself in loose trousers and a long bell gown of colored velveteen, but Parisian modistes soon clothed the ladies in all the gear of fashion. Corsets for the first time encircled their ample waists, and the London ladies, in their rage for the new dress, sought patterns of the turban that graced the brow of the queen.

But, alas, the royal pair caught the measles and died in London, poor children of nature that they were, far from the palm groves and bosky dells of their native isles! The bodies, in lead coffins framed in wood and covered with crimson velvet, were sent to Honolulu in the frigate Blonde in charge of Lord Byron, a cousin of the poet.—Godey's Magazine.

A SPY'S CLOSE CALL.

He Was Rescued From Impending Death by a Clever Newspaper Nose.

On the battlefield of Antietam Mr. McClure met General William J. Palmer, then a captain, and strongly urged him not to continue his movements as a spy after Lee had crossed into Virginia, but the gallant young soldier gave no promise as to what he would do. He did do, and the very first night after Lee crossed the Potomac he was again in Lee's camp and brought back important information to General McClellan.

Again he returned and entered the Confederate lines, and when he did not report after a week it was assumed that he had been captured and would probably be executed as a spy. He had been captured, was tried and condemned as a spy and sentenced to be executed, but he was saved by a clever newspaper device determined upon after a conference in this city between President J. Edgar Thomson of the Pennsylvania railroad, Colonel Scott and Mr. McClure. Thomson took special interest in Palmer, as he had been his secretary, and was much attached to him.

It was decided that Washington dispatches should be prepared for all of the Philadelphia morning papers announcing the arrival at the capital of Captain William J. Palmer, stating in what particular lines of the enemy he had operated, and adding that he had brought much important information that could not be given to the public at the time. These dispatches appeared next morning in all the Philadelphia papers, prominently displayed, and of course reached the southern lines within 48 hours.

The result was that Captain Palmer's identity was never established in Richmond, and his execution was thus escaped. After a little while, when some prisoners had been exchanged, there was a vacancy made in the list of the exchanged men by death. Palmer's friends had him take the place and name of the dead soldier, and he thus escaped and returned to the service.—Philadelphia Times.

Calling Smith.

Miss Kate Field relates an experience which she had in trying to sleep in a hotel in a Utah mining town where the partitions between the rooms were of boards merely and quite innocent of lath and plaster. The immense noise and coming of the early part of the night were bad enough, but toward morning, when at last she had fallen asleep, a loud voice shouted from her keyhole:

"Smith! Smith!"

As her name was not Smith, she made no response.

"Smith!" came the shout again. "It's time to skip!"

"My name is not Smith," she then answered.

From across the hall came the call of the day clerk, who occupied the room next:

"No. That ain't Smith. Smith's at the end of the hall."

"Well, this is the end of the hall," came from the weighborhood of the keyhole again. It was the voice of the porter.

"Aren't there two ends to the hall? Is this one end, you blockhead, or one?"

"Who wants Smith?" came a sharp voice from the distance. "I'm Smith."

"What's the matter with I'm Smith," came still another voice.

"Well, whichever Smith wants to get up at 4 o'clock, please," called the porter.

At these Smiths slammed their doors with a vehement protestation that they didn't want to get up.

"It's Smith in No. 11" screamed the day clerk.

The right Smith had not been waked at all, so the porter found No. 1 and pounded on the door so hard that every body in the house who had not already been waked was aroused, and several people rushed out into the hall, thinking there was a fire.

The porter went down complacently to the office on the floor below.

"Well," said he to the night clerk, "I waked him up anyhow."

A Curious Parasite.

It is an old saying that every dog has his day. According to an English authority, that day is rather more prolonged specially comfortable in Fiji. It is impossible to keep foreign dogs alive for much more than a couple of years. Those born there may live four years. The cause of this mortality is a species of worm that lives in the skin, causing dire diseases and heart. Adult specimens of this parasite sometimes measure as much as two inches, and to their ravages on animals is actually swarming with them. Puppies are often troubled with them, although it seems to take a couple months to develop them to a troublesome stage. When a dog is afflicted, it begins with a sharp barking, which is at once recognized as the beginning of your Fido's last chapter. Thus far no remedy has been found or even suggested. The parasite is found in dogs in eastern Asia, and identical symptoms are noted. The animal may live six months to two years after the first indications are observed.—New York Ledger.

His Wish.

A wicked litory is told about two partners who respected each other's business ability, but who hated one another. To one of them came a fairy saying that he could have any boon he desired, and whatever he had his partner should have in double portion. Naturally his first wish was for a barrel of money. "All right," said the fairy, "your partner will get two barrels on that wish." "Stop a little," said the first. "Perhaps you'd better not give me a barrel of money. I'd rather you would make me totally blind in one eye."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

A Watch on the Wall.

For many years a silver watch might be seen fastened to the wall of one of the pews of the inner quadrangle of Somerset Hoiise. Loudoners used to point it out as having saved the life of a man who fell from a scaffold, and he placed it there as a testimony.—New York Advertiser.

M'KINLEY'S SPEECH.

OHIO'S GOVERNOR SPEAKS TO A GREAT CROWD AT MINNEAPOLIS.

Brief Review of Tariff Legislation Since Washington's Time—The Wilson Bill. Difference Between the Republican and Democratic Parties—General Election Much Desired.

MINNEAPOLIS, March 28.—Governor William McKinley of Ohio and party reached this city at 8:30 a. m. by a special train on the Milwaukee road.

Upon arriving at the Milwaukee depot Major McKinley and party were met by the various committees appointed to look after arrangements and escorted to the West hotel by the university cadets in uniform, under command of Lieutenant Morgan, U. S. A. The governor was given an enthusiastic welcome along the line of march and on reaching the West delivered a brief impromptu speech in the rotunda of the hotel. The governor then retired to his apartments and secured a short rest. Shortly after 11 a. m. Major McKinley appeared at the State League convention and made a few remarks to the delegates assembled.

A GREAT RALLY.

Governor McKinley Addresses the Republicans of the Northwest.

The evening session of the convention had been set apart for a great Republican rally. The exposition building was packed to the utmost limit.

Governor McKinley began his address by saying that much had happened since the national convention held in the exposition building in 1892. Nearly everything had suffered but Republican principles, and they were stronger than ever. He then gave a brief history of tariff legislation since the inception of the government, and then took up the Wilson bill, pointing out some of what he called its vicious points. The finance committee of the senate, he said, had restored the duty on sugar, but they had compensated by reducing it on the raw and extending the bonded period on whisky. Both taxed coal, but they had taken the tax off diemonds.

The proposed repeal of reciprocity legislation was also denounced in very severe, "A general election," said Governor McKinley in closing, "was never so much desired as now and never so much needed. The too common idea that there is in fact little difference between the two parties has been completely exploded by one year's trial of the Democratic party. That difference has been shown to be so vast as to fill the country with astonishment. It is a greater question than who shall hold the offices in fact, it has been demonstrated that the success of one party or the other means all the difference between national happiness and prosperity and national discontent and distress."

RECEIVED M'KINLEY.

St. Paul People Pay Their Respects to the Ohio Governor.

ST. PAUL, March 29.—The event of the day in St. Paul was the reception tendered to Governor McKinley at the state capitol. The reception took place in the hall of the house of representatives between the hours of 1:30 and 3 p. m., and during that time thousands of people availed themselves to pay their respects to the distinguished Ohioan.

In the morning Major McKinley, left Minneapolis by a special train, accompanied by Governor Nelson, who, after the address, entertained him at lunch at the Merchants club. Mr. McKinley and party left in the evening for the East.

Republican League Meeting.

MINNEAPOLIS, March 28.—Harmonia hall was crowded to suffocation at the opening session of the State League of Republican clubs. A feature of today's proceedings was a brief speech by Governor McKinley of Ohio, who was enthusiastically received. John Goodnow of Minneapolis was re-elected president and F. C. Stevens of St. Paul secretary. Resolutions were adopted denouncing the policy of the Democratic party.

Republican Editors Organize.

MINNEAPOLIS, March 30.—The Republican editors of the state, about 150 strong, in Century hall, and formed a state organization. The election of officers resulted as follows: C. C. Whitney, Marshall News-Messenger, president; Dr. F. E. Barrett, Tower, vice president; J. S. Vandling, St. Paul, secretary; A. N. Dare, Elk River Star-News, treasurer.

TOM REED COMING.

The "Ex-Czar" of the House Will Make a Speech at Minneapolis.

MINNEAPOLIS, April 4.—The Tribune says: McKinley is not the only "big gun" of the Republican party who is looking after the great Northwest. Tom Reed will deliver an address in Minneapolis during the coming summer. It will be made soon after the Fourth of July congressional convention at which Mr. Reed has already given his promise to make the visit. It is presumed that the date selected is in order that the ex-speaker's dress may have an effect favorable to Mr. Reed's candidacy for speaker in case the next house of representatives is Republican.

Northern Pacific Dinners.

MILWAUKEE, April 4.—The Northern Pacific Railway company has filed a demurrer in the United States court to the complaint in the foreclosure begun by the Farmers' Loan and Trust company of New York.

The English Bill.

LONDON, April 4.—The Behring sea award bill, as remodeled by the attorney general, Sir Charles Russell, has been printed. It provides for the seizure of any English or American naval officers of sealers found infringing the provisions of the award.

SENATOR MILLS AS A DODGER.

He Avoided the Workingmen When They Visited Washington.

Many workingmen are hurrying on to Washington. They represent hundreds of thousands of their fellow citizens. Some of them are paying their own way. Others are having their expenses met by the workmen who send them. These men from first to last are independent. They are Republicans and Democrats. They ask no favors. They are honest, industrious and patriotic Americans. While they seek no favors, they do demand justice and their rights as citizens of the republic.

They have been told that the Democrats are their friends. Democratic orators have groaned for them. Democratic editors have shrieked fraud and robbery. A Democratic candidate for the presidency has rumbled most dismally. Workingmen have therefore believed that they would be welcome in Washington. Consequently they have gone.

What have they found? An atmosphere too cold to measure. They are not welcome. On the contrary, they have been pat off, put out, avoided and almost evicted. Mills has dodged them. Yet Mills has swayed their friends! He has almost swayed their votes—votes to redress wrongs by which they have had regular employment and living wages. They have had homes over their heads and bread and meat on their tables. Their children have had clothing and schooling. Their wives have had peasants and silk dresses. But Mills wept.

At this day, however, when these very workmen have neither employment nor pay, Mills hides himself when they approach. He doesn't want to hear them. Moreover, they are mistaken. They don't know what is good for them. Things will come down, down, flour will be almost as cheap as dirt, and salt will be as plenty as snow in the winter time. Prognostications, no matter how beautiful and inspiring, don't satisfy a hungry man's appetite, nor can they warm a little child that is cold.

Thus and therefore Mills keeps well out of the way. He does not want to hear the plea of labor. He does not want to be turned backward to his former happy estate. He is determined to stand by the Wilson bill. However, he was caught the other day. A committee followed him to the senate chamber. They were men of labor. They had traveled many miles. Under their arms they carried specimens of their skill and industry. They had pieces of American carpet and of American flannels, skeins of American yarn and an assortment of American tablecloths.

Likewise they had some facts as to wages. For instance: When they worked before the McKinley law was threatened, their wages were two and a half times greater than were the wages paid for the same kind of work in England. They wanted to show that their carpets and yarns and to tell him their facts. But he would neither see nor listen. He hadn't time. Further than that, he was fixed and unchangeable. He believed in free trade, absolute free trade. These workmen could not be heard. He did not think they ought to be heard. Moreover, he had given his decision that they should be heard.—Cleveland Leader.

Sol Prophecy Fulfilled.

James G. Blaine once used these memorable words: "I love my country and my countrymen. I am an optimist and I rejoice every day of my life that I am. I enjoy the general prosperity of my country and know that the enormous part of this land are the best paid, the best fed and the best clothed of any laborers on the face of the earth. Many of these have homes of their own. They are surrounded by all the comforts and many of the luxuries of life.

"I shudder, however, at the thought that these conditions of society are to be changed, when the general prosperity of the country will be destroyed, when the great body of workingmen in this land who are now so prosperous will hear their wives and children cry for bread; that the day must come when the great factories and manufactories of this land will shut down, and where there is now life and activity there will be the silence of the tomb. And the reason why this is to be is that the great southern wing of the Democratic party are determined to establish the doctrine of free trade in this land. They will be assisted by their northern allies. The fight is now on. There is a great body of visionary but ultimate men who are employed day by day in writing free trade essays and arguments in favor of that doctrine, which in their way into every newspaper in this land.

"The great body of our people have never experienced or seen the suffer ings which always result when the protective principles are laid aside. Poisoned and excited by the misrepresentations of these writers and the demagogic appeals of Democratic speakers, the result will be that in the very near future the people advocating the doctrine of protection. It must inevitably follow that uncertainty and doubt will ensue. The business men of the country, fearing the destruction of the principle of protection, will cease to engage in business and consequently mills will shut down, and the workingmen will be thrown out of employment.

"The people will then see, as they have never seen before, that they cannot be prosperous and have work while this principle is threatened. In the midst of their suffering they will learn that the only way they can be prosperous and happy is to vote for the party that has built up the industries by which they have gained a livelihood, because they will then see clearly that when the manufactory is shut down there is no demand for the only thing which they have to sell, and that is their labor."

WORK OF CONGRESS.

Tuesday, March 27.

Services were held in the senate chamber over the remains of the late Senator Colquitt. The senate immediately adjourned for the day.

In the house the Republicans filibustered against consideration of the O'Neill-Foy election case.

Wednesday, March 28.

The house secured a quorum on the contested election cases: O'Neill (Dem.) was declared entitled to a seat.

The senate was occupied with the McGarraban bill.

Thursday, March 29.

The senate passed the McGarraban bill without division.

The house was in an uproar most of the day on the contested election cases. The motion to reconsider the O'Neill-Joy case was finally withdrawn.

Friday, March 30.

The house spent another fruitless day on the contested election cases.

Saturday, March 31.

The house was again without a quorum in the morning. The afternoon was devoted to eulogies upon the late Representative O'Neill of Pennsylvania.

The senate was not in session.

Monday, April 2.

The tariff bill was made the unfinished business in the senate and Senator Voorhees opened the debate by a speech of considerable length.

The house spent another day on the contested election cases. Democrats were not able to get a quorum.

LILI AFTER LUCRE.

The Ex-Queen Would Favor Annexation For a Consideration.

HONOLULU, March 12, Via San Francisco.—Within the past week there has been a material change in the political condition of the islands. Briefly, it may be summed up by saying the united forces are coming out for annexation. Had the sentiment been left to their own devices there never would have been any serious opposition to the annexation of Hawaii to the United States.

The advocates of royalty have come to the conclusion that all hopes of restoration are past and that it is politic for them to acquiesce with good grace, as Lydia Liliuokalani has been advised of the fact that her restoration is impossible, and she will advocate annexation if she can get a big price for the islands in order to receive some form of bounty.

Lili Would Like the Cash.

It will be remembered that under the treaty presented by the commissioners from President Harrison, Liliuokalani was to receive $20,000 a year in return for the resignation of all right to the throne. The treaty provides that the indemnity that the ex-queen is said to favor annexation. A petition will soon be prepared and sent to President Cleveland advocating the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States, providing a sum to be mutually agreed upon shall be settled upon Lilliuokalani during her lifetime. This petition will be signed by leading natives, members of the cabinet and members of the native societies. It has even been stated that Liliuokalani will send a formal request to Washington to lay the matter before the United States senate. Should she be successful in this, there could then be no serious opposition to President Cleveland entertaining a treaty of annexation, and as the right of the provisional government to make such a treaty has been recognized by no less authority than Senator Morgan, it is more than likely the president would be glad to avail himself of the proposition.

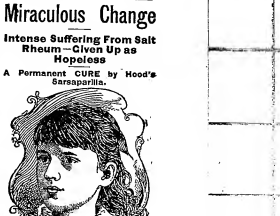
Miraculous Change

Intense Suffering From Salt Rheum—Given Up as Hopeless

A Permanent Cure by Hood's Sarsaparilla.



Miss Blanche Clark
Duluth, Minn.

"Seven years ago our daughter Blanche, then four years of age, had a tumor break out on her hands and face, which our physician pronounced eczema. She seemed to derive no benefit at all and it the cold or caused her face or hands, they would swell up at once and look almost purple, and branded blisters would form and break, discharging a watery substance and that attended it would drive the child nearly wild. Unless we smeared her little hands she would tear patches of skin from her face and hands. The itching was intense. We tried many doctors and many remedies and at last gave up the case as hopeless. But in the summer of '93 our daughter Clara tried Hood's Sarsaparilla, to cure a scrofulous lump near the left breast, which caused her much pain and ultimately an illness. After taking four bottles it entirely disappeared. Blanche, who is now eleven, had spent seven years of suffering, so I concluded to give her Hood's Sarsaparilla. She commenced the middle of June to take the medicine and as this writing has started on her fifth bottle. Her face is smooth and not a baby's.

Her hands are soft and white, where four months ago they were blue and red and inflamed nearly to the elbow. I cannot express in language my joy at this cure. It seems a miracle and our friends are surprised at the change." Mrs. Lizzie Clark, 831 East 6th St., Duluth, Minn.

Hood's Pills cure all liver ills, constipation, biliousness, jaundice, sick headache, indigestion.

SMITH WAS A BAD MAN.

And He Had Learned One Game of Which He Could Boast.

"But speaking of train robberies," put in the colonel, "reminds me of a man I met when I was in command of Fort D. A. Russell at Cheyenne. He was an express messenger named Smith, and his run was on what they called out there the 'high line' of the S. and M. railroad. Smith ran much of a man to look at, but he was great in action, as you'll agree.

"It heard of Smith before I met him. He'd killed two men down in western Kansas, and they were saying around Cheyenne that he was 'bad.' So I was curious to get him to tell me the story, and after awhile he did.

"He used to have a run on the Santa Fe down there it crossed into Colorado. All the messengers, you know, carried guns in those days—they do yet, for that matter—but Smith understood the use of a six shooter better than some of his mates. Things had been so smooth on his run for so long that he got a bit careless at last and used to leave the door of his car unlocked so that the brakemen could come in and talk with him whenever they liked without his having to go to the end of the car to unlock the door.

"Smith had one game, though, which was all his own. He told me that he had practiced it a good deal so that he could shoot within a fraction of a second after hearing any one say, 'Put up your hands.' All the train men on his run knew that. You know those fellows are great in skylarking, and Smith had warned them never to try to play that joke on him, because, he said, the first man who came into his car and took him unawares with that remark would be likely to die.

"One day he was sitting behind his little square iron safe checking off his money packages. He had the safe in a corner of the car facing one end. He always sat with his back against the front end of the car. The front door was always barred. When he raised the lid of the little tramlike safe the messengers used then, he always put his two big six shooters on the corners of the safe in front of the lid. Any one approaching him from the rear end of the car couldn't see the guns, but they were ready for instant use.

"Well, on this day I'm telling you about, as he was checking off the packages, he heard the car door open and some one come in. He took it for granted that the visitor was the brakeman whom he was expecting, and without looking up went on with his work. He checked two or three more packages and was almost finished when he heard the sharp command, 'Put up your hands!'

"He looked up on the instant and saw two men, each in the least disguised, covering him with six shooters. His own hands were behind the lid of his safe. 'All right, boys,' he said. 'Don't shoot. They're up.'

"They went up, that was true, but as they came over the lid of the safe there was a six shooter in each one. Both six shooters cracked the instant their muzzles came above the safe lid, and both bullets killed. The robbers fired, but they didn't pull until after they had been hit, and their bullets went wild.

"It was all done so quickly that there was no outcry or noise, and when the brakeman went into the car a few minutes afterward he found Smith washing up the blood from the floor. The dead men were on a blanket in a corner. That was how Smith got his reputation for being 'bad.'"—New York Sun

Painstaking Forgers.

"Men try in every way possible," said a prominent bank president, "to obtain the signatures of New York bankers.

"Their object is evidently to use them in committing forgeries. At least we suspect so, and for that reason try to be as careful as possible in signing letters.

"In this bank we have many letters from the west of such a trivial nature that we suspect an ulterior motive upon the part of the writers, and if we answer them at all do so by typewriter, even to the signature.

"One forger or counterfeiter in Indiana is exceedingly systematic and persistent in his efforts to obtain the signatures of our officers. As regularly as the year comes around he writes, inclosing a $10 bill, and requests us to send him one of our new $10 bank notes in exchange.

"He always gives the same reason for the request—that he wants it for 'biscellection.' Of course that is nonsense. We believe that he wants a new bill so that he may discover if we have changed our officers and get their signatures.

"He never does get them though. We always return his bill with a typewritten letter on paper containing no names, excusing ourselves on the ground that we have no circulation outstanding."—New York Herald.

LOOKS LIKE A GRECIAN.

But Miss Bond Is an American and Is Described From George Washington.

The effectiveness of the old Greek costume was never better illustrated than when it was adopted by Miss Mary Carolina Bond, a New Jersey belle of surpassing beauty, who is creating a sensation in New York society circles, as well as in those of Elizabeth, where she resides. It is hard to decide whether the Greek gown, which is a favorite with its fair wearer, really enhances her beauty or is rendered more attractive thereby, but certainly beauty and gown complement each other in a manner that is simply bewitching. Some good sculptor ought to embody them in a statue.

Miss Bond is tall, with a finely molded figure and remarkably graceful in her movements. Her hair is reddish golden in color, and with it are set clear blue eyes belonging to that type of beauty and a complexion of exquisite coloring. She is bright and witty, a brilliant conversationalist, an accomplished musician and charming and lovable in disposition.

Miss Bond has other than mere personal claims to consideration, however. She is a great-great-grandniece of George Washington and a great-granddniece of the famous Dolly Madison, with some of whose historic beauty she seems to have been dowered.

ALLEN G. THURMAN'S OLD AGE.

He Spends Much Time In His Library and Reads French Novels All Night.

Allen G. Thurman, "the noble old Roman," as Ohio Democrats affectionately call him, takes life easily at 80 years of age, living in Columbus with his children and grandchildren in a splendid stone mansion of the modern sort. The modest old homestead, which became so famous during the campaign of 1888, will soon be a thing of the past. A hotel named after the judge is to be erected on the site. In his new home he spends most of his time in the library, for he is still as always what has been, a voracious reader and student, though he does not devote so much time as formerly to ponderous tomes of legal lore. His reading now consists for the most part of poetry and French fiction, which he reads in the original. He takes a daily glance at the pages of The Congressional Record, however, thus keeping in touch with the doings of our national legislators.

Judge Thurman has always led as secluded a life as is possible for a man so greatly interested in public affairs, and since the death of his wife two years ago he has been more secluded than ever. He is not by any means unapproachable, though he never receives visitors during his day. His habit is to receive callers and chat with the family after dinner every evening, and then after 10 o'clock he begins his readings. If his book is interesting, he reads all night, and very often the morning sun is shining through the window when he lays down the volume in which he has been absorbed. During the day he sleeps. He has no regular hour for going to bed and none for getting up, but follows the bent of his inclinations as a matter of rest.

The judge is a very wealthy man. His wife was rich when they were married, and her estate has been well managed and greatly increased. His household now consists of the family of his son, Allen W. Thurman, who married a Baltimore belle of famous beauty. The young folks, who are extremely devoted to the grandfather, are prominent in the social circles of Columbus, and the family ranks high in the genuine aristocracy of the state.

A Swiss Colony.

There is a Swiss colony in Grundy county, Tenn., which seems like a part of a foreign country. So perfectly have they kept up their native habits and customs and even style of architecture in the building of their little cottages. Their eaves are curves there whose quaint work finds a parallel in Switzerland, although a number of them have grown quite weather worthy and could go if they wished.

To Reduce Salt Water's Friction.

Edison is now at work with a plan to grease the sides of ships, so that they will slip through the water more readily. He says the friction of salt water on the constituents are much more than is generally believed, and if he can only do what he is trying to do the Campania can make the voyage between New York and Liverpool in four days.

I WONDER WHY.

I wonder why hearts change so carelessly,
Forgetful of the fires they have set
Aglow in other hearts.
Forgetful of the trembling lips once wet
With dews of kisses.

I wonder why it comes—forgetfulness—
To steal away the loyalty and truth
That once were glorified.
Leaving silence in loneliness shadow—ruth
For those forgotten.

I wonder why we cannot earnestly
Command our love as we command our lives
And prove it sweetly true
That love remains to him who truly strives
To prove its constancy.

I wonder why we never know ourselves—
Can never look into ourselves and see
The hidden springs that wait
A magic touch to send forth jubilee
And "whelm our startled souls."

I wonder why ones earnest vows enshrined
Within the inner sanctum of our love
Grow faint with lasting time,
Like echoes from some whispering voice above
The fanoff floating clouds—
I wonder why.

Gold Separation.

What is claimed to be the most advantageous process for the separation of fine gold in placers comes from Montana. It is a dry process, designed especially for localities distant from sufficient water for other methods, the ore or gravel being run through a number of steam drier, after which it is dumped into the hopper of the separator. Dropping from this, it strikes a powerful blast of air, which carries it between two sets of slowly revolving copper cylinders coated with one-sixteenth of an inch of mercury.

These cylinders are placed in two lines of three each, one above the other, so that the dust, driven by the air blast, passes between them in a wavelike line. The ore first strikes a cylinder similar to the others, but revolving in an opposite direction, which catches the coarser gold and the nuggets. Then, passing between the other cylinders, all the gold is caught, however fine, and the waste is carried by the air blast to a conveyor, which bears it away. The mercury on the cylinders is constantly renewed, so that a fresh surface is always presented, and it is asserted that the process has been subjected to such various tests and so successfully, as to demonstrate its peculiar adaptability to the class of work in question.—New York Sun.

All Snakes Do Not Hiss.

The popular idea that all snakes hiss is incorrect when anaconda are in question, if we may believe the close observer of the serpent family. The sound they make is more like a growl than a hiss and has been well described by a traveler as a "low, roaring noise." Their powers of deglutition are sufficiently wonderful to make exaggeration unnecessary, credible witnesses testifying to the fact that one has been known to swallow a horse, while bullocks are not infrequently attacked also. Few nonscientific readers, by the way, are aware that not only do the jaw hinges of the boa tribe become dislocated in the act of swallowing a large animal, subsequently resuming their proper position by means of the elastic connecting tendons, but that the skull bones separate completely, so the whole constitutes a sort of quadrangular orifice with apparently indefinite powers of expansion.—Detroit Free Press.

A Luxury of the Rich.

A modern treatment of nervous prostration requires that the patient be put to bed in a quiet room and fed for weeks on enormous quantities of milk. He must take exercise, however, and this exercise does by proxy through the device of massage. He must do absolutely nothing for himself, and if his nose itches the nurse must scratch it. Patients under such treatment sometimes gain four or five pounds of flesh per week. It is of course a luxury of the rich.—Philadelphia Ledger.

English Women Agitating.

Mrs. Millicent Garret Fawcett lately addressed an audience of women at Bloomsbury, England, on the extension of the parliamentary franchise to women. The meeting closed with the carrying of a unanimous resolution in favor of woman suffrage, proposed by Mrs. Fawcett and seconded by Mrs. Ormiston Chant.

CHAPTER X.

CONTINUATION OF MR. WATKINS' NARRATIVE.

So you will see that we enffered a very sore disappointment. We seemed on the verge of solution of this mystery, and now we were as far away from it as ever. This I may observe was the sixty-fourth pigeon shot. For two days the boys had shot none. The pigeons were either exterminated or learned, and I had deprived the brothers Freemen of what was apparently their sole means of communicating with the world out of their mysterious prison, and that was not a pleasant reflection to me—that is to say, I and my employers, for in the meantime Joseph had come in, empty handed, as usual of late, and sat there dumb and stupid for a long time. At last Harry said: "It is no use, uncle, going after these pigeons for a good while now. We must give them time to come back. Load us your rifle. I'd like to have a shot at a seal. There are three or four of them always moving about between your cove and Dhu-Corrig. I used to see an old one there last summer, but there seems to be quite a colony of them there now."

"All right, lads," I said, "Take the rifle. You will find the boat in the cove. She's small, remember, and easily capsized, so take care of yourselves."

I was anxious now to be by myself in order to meditate and recover from the state of excitement into which I had been thrown by the events of the day. The fact was that my mind, now for so many months cloorbed by and concentrated upon this extraordinary, increasing and expanding mystery, was beginning to be somewhat unhinged. I thought of the lost lads oil day and dreamed of them perhaps all night, for certainly I never awoke without being conscious that I had been dreaming about them. I am haunted, too, by poor Mrs. Freeman's wan, sorrowstricken face. Mr. Freeman, when last I saw him, was bowed in the shoulders, he who used to be so straight as a drilled soldier, and his look was that of an aged man. I, as head of the police of this district, have of course been blamed for not doing more, though I confess no word of censure has reached my ears. But, to resume, I now come to something that will startle and amaze even your philosophical soul.

The boys returned that evening in the dusk. They had seen several seals and had got a shot at one, but without doing my execution. I was rather surprised at the number of seals seen by the boys, for, though seals are not uncommon on this coast, such a number as my nephews had seen in the same place was something quite unusual. As we sat at the tea table, while the boys were talking in an animated manner about the events of the afternoon, and while I could hardly for a single instant keep my thoughts off the lost brothers, I heard Harry say to my wife, "And there was one seal, Aunt Mary, and every time he came to the surface was a hall lobbing in the water behind him, and when he went down it disappeared." Instantaneously the thought sprung into my mind, "Could it be that John Freeman, or John and Edward, were signalling to me by means of the lead seal?" The supposition was of course absurd and farfetched. How could they catch a seal in the first instance? Nevertheless the appearance of a seal swimming about with something attached to it was in itself startling enough.

"I will go out with you in the morning," I said. "That seal we must shoot."

Early next day, though the wind had risen and the sea was rough, my nephews and I took the boat together at the shady cove and rowed out. Between the cove and Dhu-Corrig we counted half a dozen seals. Several times I had a good opportunity of shooting one of them, but did not shoot. The real reason was that was not visible. We came home for early dinner and went out again immediately after. The boys, who now knew what I wanted and who were not shortsighted like myself, kept a sharp lookout for the seal of which I was in quest. As we rowed slowly along Joseph said:

"There is a seal lying on the Corrigan-kame rock. Just step to it, for I remember it was a small one. Do you see anything behind him, Harry?"

"No," said Harry, "but it is hard to see anything in the place where he is lying. When he begins to move, we can see the ball better, for it will bop and jump somewhere behind him."

"Row on very slowly, then," said I. We were coming from the east, and the seal was lying on the rock with his head to the west. The wind, too, was blowing from that direction. Corrig-a-skame was a long black rock covered, literally all over, with little mussels growing as thick as grass. It was invisible at high water, but at low tide stood out pretty well and resembled the back of a small whale. The name means the Rock of the Leap. Some active wight in old times had sprung from the corrig to the cliff or from the cliff to the corrig. It is common name for such rocks on the west coast. Almost every league of the coast exhibits somewhere a corrig-a-skame or a rock called after somebody's leap—Lam-con or Lem-cathi, etc.

I had the boys wrap their handkerchiefs round the leather of the oars to deaden the sound of the rowing and went to the bow with my rifle." The boys, sitting sternward of their oars so as to keep their eyes on the seal, rowed quietly forward.

"I am sure it is the same," whispered Harry, who was just behind me, "and I think I see the ball too. Yes, it is," he added, "and I see the ball. Fire at him now, uncle."

While I was trying to get a steady aim, which was difficult, owing to the rocking of the boat, the creature suddenly turned its head, saw us and commenced bounding and flopping forward along the length of the rock, while behind it as it moved swiftly along a round ball jumped too. I fired and missed. The creature sent forth a loud bowing sort of cry and splashed into the water on the farther side.

"It has left the ball behind," cried the two boys both together, in great excitement.

This was true, the ball having been caught in some cleft so that the string which connected it with the animal had broken. None of us saw exactly how it happened, but the creature was gone and the ball remained behind. I could not see it now myself, as it was no longer in motion, but the boys did. We rowed up to the rock, but the surf all around it was so great that we could not land. The wind was steadily rising and the sea beginning to run unpleasantly. In a short time I knew that some wave would sweep the ball off the rock. We kept the boat's head to the wind for about three-quarters of an hour, and at last had the pleasure of seeing one large wave carry the ball clear into the rock. A little later the ball had disengaged itself from the surf. You can imagine with what a thrill of delight I took up what was in my hands. Though there was little rational ground for such a belief, I felt an assurance amounting to conviction that I had in my hands the explanation of the mysterious tragedy. The ball was a small bladder, apparently a sheep's bladder, and was very tightly fastened at the mouth with whipcord or strong fishing line. When the boys looked to see me open it, I did nothing of the kind. I had the boys row me and myself to the tiller and turned the boat's head home. I had staid in the vicinity of Corrig-a-skame too long, and I knew it. I knew that good steering and good luck, too, were now required in order to enable me to reach my cove. I did not open the bladder, partly because I did not desire to remain in the dangerous element longer than was necessary, and partly because I wished, in the event of an accident befalling me, that the unopened bladder with its contents should still be left swimming. The situation indeed was momentarily becoming more critical. The wind increased to a gale, and the huge waves lifted the little boat and propelled her forward like a chip. I feered to bring her broadside to the wind and waves, for that would be necessary in order to get into the shady cove. So I steered past it and let her drive forward to Sean Poulin Farthor-on, the entrance to which was wide and did not offer such a sharp angle to he turned as did my own little cove. However, not to be tedious when I have so many infinitely more important things to relate, we made the cove in safety and drew up our boat on the coast guards' slip. Bidding the boys say nothing to any one about our walk, we three started for home. The bladder was in my top coat pocket, and I kept my hand upon it during the walk. I was in a fever of excitement and expectation.

CHAPTER XI.

MR. WATKINS' NARRATIVE CONTINUED.

When I got home, I went straight into my office by myself, locked the door, ran open the cord which fastened the mouth of the bladder, ripped the skin up carefully, or as carefully as I could with my penknife, and from the interior took out half a sheet of note paper. On each side was writing in ink. It was the conclusion of a letter of importance; indeed it was a tradesman's letter and signed Jacob Costello, a musical instrument merchant in our country town. On the other side were characters in red, written with some blunt instrument like the pointed end of a match or bit of timber, and at the foot of the writing, in larger letters, were two names—viz, "John Freeman, Edward Freemen"—each name in different handwriting and representing the signatures of the lads, which I know. The body of the red writing was Edward Freeman's. It was to the following effect:

We are here, at the bottom of the "Devil's Parlor." The sea is very right down to us. Some of Charley's loaves have come down to us. We came in by the square hole high in the sea cliff. Both well. JOHN FREEMAN.
EDWARD FREEMAN.

By the "square hole!" The plant's hole! Who could have thought it? The lads had spied far away up in the face of the sea cliff.

The murder was out; all was known. Thrusting the letter into my pocket, I rushed at the door like a madman, and forgetting that I had locked it myself blundered upon it with my first turning; "Saddle Gray Francy!"—it was the name of my fastest horse—"Saddle Gray Francy!" I kept shrieking.

The boys, who were all the time in the passage outside my door, clamored in reply. Two of them seemed to rub off into the yard shrieking out my message. My wife and the servants ran to the door of the office. In short, it seemed as if the whole household had gone suddenly mad.

Of course what I describe here took only a few seconds to pass. I opened the door and rushed along the passage, not caring whom I threw down through the kitchen, out into the yard and straight to the stable I ran. There already my orderly and Joseph, working for life and death, were saddling and bridling Gray Francy. In another moment I was on his back, without my hat, and tearing down the avenue and then along the road which led to the rectory. I was aware of people standing here and there with scared faces, but little I cared for that. Since I was born I was never so mad as that day, nor if I live for a thousand years could I be so again. I took Francy at a long over the avenue gate of the rectory and galloped up to the house, shouting as I did so:

"They are found!"

The avenue is a short one. My voice could have been heard from the gate in every room of the house, and was. Mr. Commander in the better sense of the bottle ever roared to his men as I did that day as I galloped up to Mr. Freeman's hall door. Every one there knew the significance of my wild shoutings. "They are found!" could refer only to the two lostones. Mrs. Freeman rushed from the hall door before I reached it. She raised her hands to the sky as in a prayer; then sunk on her knees and fell forward. The boy Chorley came after and then the servants. After all came Mr. Freeman, his face as white as paper, but his manner calm and collected. Through the wood and shrubbery several men come rushing and tumbling and behind me up the avenue others who had followed me along the road. In a few words I told Mr. Freeman all.

"Have you the letter?" he said.

When I showed It to him, he looked down first at the signatures, then read the letter and handed it back to me without a word, but the look that was in his face, What pen could Interpret? Certainly not mine. I did not wait an instant longer, but galloped back straight to my own house. I had received my self possession although not my redoubtanch of the reason. On the way I met the boys and the orderly and after that three of my men went with me. I cancel cast free expression and striding quietly in the direction taken by their master officer. Indeed I am sure I was excitable to command a force whose gravity would put the Spaniard to shame. As it was never before or since in dusk and various preparations and arrangements had to be made, I postponed the descent till next morning. I procured ropes that night from the village. I sent for a man now a farm laborer in his neighborhood, but who in his day had formerly worked in mines in Cornwall, and consulted him about the best means of descent. He went from me to the forge of our village blacksmith, who, under his direction, made that night a couple of iron stirrup to be attached to the rope's end. I set the boys to make stirrups of splintwood hopwood, which, however, who was ingenious, provided besides seals of tarr soaked in paraffin oil. These, stuck on the ends of stirrups, be assured me, would make a grand blaze. We tried one and found it excellent. The news flew like wildfire over the country, and those who held by the plant theory were put to shame. Crowds of people came about the house that night the nuisance reached such dimensions that I ordered my men to clear them away, which they did with difficulty. The public houses in Dun-Beacon were full that night, and the publicans did a roaring trade. I nominated the men who were to proceed with me in the morning to the "Devil's Parlor" and ordered them to be in readiness an hour before dawn and strictly commanded them to tell no one.

I did not go to bed at all that night, though I may have dozed a little by the office fire. At 5 I woke up to find it 6 by my party, and none but my party, being assembled, we started, well provided with strong ropes, candles, torches, parraffin steeped turnee, lucifer matches, etc. I had with me, too, a flask of brandy and sandwiches. I did not partake in what exhausted condition I might find the lost. They said indeed "we are well," but nevertheless—for all the men in my party had formerly accompanied Edward Freeman when he made that abortive descent and had found nothing but Charley's loaves. It was quite plain now from the appearance there were two ways leading down: one a blind alley ending in the small cavern, the other, a passage leading to some great subterranean caverni to which there were two openings; one on the hillside, the other in the square opening in the sea cliff—viz, the hole out of which Crohoor-beg's aimsgiving plant had grown itself by that very remarkable and terrible manner when he devoured the Lost-beg of it. Arrived at the spot, we made our preparations and waited for the light, for it was still dark. It was not raining, but the weather was very gloomy, a strong gale blew from the west. I had the man who had been with Edward Freeman show me the place where he had made the descent. Avoiding this, I put my foot in the stirrup and bade them lower away. I had myself so pad fastened by a strap a bag containing half a dozen of Joseph's peculiar torches, and in my hands, which clasped both it and the rope, a skewer to serve as a handle for those torches. For a short time I had to keep myself away from the rock with my second foot, that which was not in the stirrup, frequently I felt myself swinging in midair in black darkness and certainly in some vast hollow. In a few minutes more I would be clasping the hands of the poor lost lads. Then I shouted. Vast hollow echoes and reverberations passed through what seemed interminable spaces and endless galleries responded to my shout—echoes and reverberations and nothing else. That surprised me—but did not much surprise me. That cavern was plainly enormous, and there were faraway winding corridors into which my voice might not travel. Moreover, the boys might be not probably were asleep. "We will soon find them and wake them up," I said. I continued at intervals to shout, "Jack!" "Neil!" and as loudly as I could roar. Still there came no response but the huge echoes which now sounded in my ears like the laughter and mockery of subterranean giants. Whether I was descending or not I could not tell. Above me it was as dark as below, and of course I had long since ceased to hear the voices of those at the cave's mouth and the running of the rope over the block of timber which my miner had laid on the edge of the precipice. No doubt I was descending, but for all I could feel and perceive I might be fixed and stationary in the darkness or even descending. The minutes now began to seem like hours. Would I ever reach the bottom of this awful abyss, and to think that those pleasant young friends of mine, so gay, bright and good natured, so full of life, figure and activity, should be immured here, one of them for many months. Again and again I shouted, "Jack!" "Neil!" "Neil!" "Jack!" "Are you there?" "Halloa!" "Hollon!" and still no sound reached my ears but mocking laughter and supernatural echoes which seemed to grow grander as I descended and rolled like thunder round the cavern.

At last I heard a sharp click under my feet and experienced a soft shock. I was on the bottom. The click was the noise of my iron stirrup striking on a rock or stone. Still keeping my foot in the stirrup, I throw off my bag of torches, opened it, stuck one on the point of my skewer, struck a match and ignited the torch. It sent out a good blaze, but revealed where I stood nothing but great boulders and on one side the walls of the cavern rising sheer and black. I gave the preconcerted signal, two strong yells at the rope, which was at once drawn up. The rope and stirrup landed my companions dangling from above my head as they disappeared into the thick and black darkness. I continued to shout at intervals, but eventually desisted until the coming of my assistants. Either the Freemans were sound asleep or they were in such a flurry of the cavern beyond the reech of my voice, or they were now—terrible thought!—beyond the reach of human help, and we were too late, perhaps only a few hours too late.

The next to descend was my head constable; then in succession the two boys, Harry and Joseph, then my orderly and last a subconstable named Mulvmey. These and no more I had permitted to descend. I had the ordering of events with the rope and they lit torch horning there. All together now we raised our voices and shouted as loud as we could bawl and did so again and again. Save the echoes, now grown more vast and appalling, there was no response. I was becoming more and more alarmed. If the boys were alive, they must have been at that end of the part of the cavern in which we found ourselves seemed to be a long and not very wide gallery. We explored this to the end, and as we had plenty of torches the whole floor of the gallery was brilliantly illuminated. Not a thing out of the common could escape our notice here. We came to the end of it, turned back, passed the orderly where he stood beside the rope with his torch burning in his hand, and after about a hundred yards more we made our first discovery. It was my nephew, Harry, who made it—viz, traces of a fire. On a low rock or ledge there were still the signs of a hearth, but in particular there was a small heap of ash. It was plain that this fire had been burning many months. The orderly and constable added this discovery and the consultation which succeeded it we moved forward. In short, we explored the cave up to the entrance in the sea cliff by which they had come in without finding a single one. We discovered many traces of them—bones of the sheep from which the bladder had been extracted, crumbs of bread near that hearth place and other signs and tokens; but, alive or dead, Mr. Freeman were not there. We learned, too, how they had been trapped, how having got in they were not able to get out again, and also indications of their pathetic efforts to climb out of their trap. Many signs and tokens of the recent presence of the brothers and especially of the long continued residence there of poor John Freeman was found, but not what we wanted to find—not themselves. Again and again we searched the vast cavern through and through, expecting now to find them in some nook and some cleft of the great bowlidere with which the cavern seemed filled, but our search was vain. As our investigations became closer and more minute we discovered various other relics and signs of the presence of the brothers, but neither their bodies nor any opening into which they might have fallen. True, they might have died on the edge of that pool which evidently communicated with the sea by some passage, for the water there ebbed and flowed; they might have died in its verge and their bodies afterward floated away on the rising tide and been born through that passage. Again they might have committed suicide by throwing themselves into that boiling chasm in which the second of those galleries to which I have turned, so full of life, figure and activity, should be immured here, one of them for many months. Again and again I shouted, "Jack!" "Neil!" "Neil!" "Jack!" "Are you there?" "Halloa!" "Hollon!" and still no sound reached my ears but mocking laughter and supernatural echoes which seemed to grow grander as I descended and rolled like thunder round the cavern.

Chas. Ford was up from Edna on Monday. Mr. Ford has recently sold his store to H. B. Budd, has accepted a situation in a wholesale house in Minneapolis, and leaves this week to enter upon his new duties. There are many young men of our county we would sooner see go than Mr. Ford.

Jim Creighton: "Speaking of free farms in the Saskatchewan Valley reminds me that I have been all through that country and know what it is pretty well. I must say that I never saw a lovelier country to look at but one fact settles it for me; and that is the fact that you cannot obtain good water. The land is no better than ones here and I should suppose the market facilities are not as good."

Who says "hard times?" The sale at M. R. Brown's stable on Monday was well attended, and although stock and stuff offered at the chattel mortgage sale did not bring awful high prices it went—and for cash too. Jim Creighton bought the fine bay trotting colt, and pretty quick he will take no man's dust on the road—unless the aforesaid other man has the best horse. After the cash sales were over a number of horses were sold on time bringing reasonably fair prices, considering the times. There was a large crowd present and the bidding was very spirited.

Hon. Judge Ives, Reporter Strawbridge, Attorneys Wilkinson, Steenerson and Watts went up to Hallock, Kittson county, last week to hold court. By considerable hustling on the part of the court and attorneys the calendar of over twenty cases was disposed of, the last case going to the jury Saturday afternoon just before they all left on the train for Crookston.

E. D. Chubbs, who, while in the twin cities last week, looked over some samples of seed flax sounds a note of warning to farmers who contemplate sowing flax this spring to be very careful in the matter of procuring seed. Mr. Chubbs informs us that in some of the samples he found Russian thistle seed enough to stock this whole upper country in one that pest. Flax-seed without the thistle is expensive enough without the introduction of an expensive nuisance.

"Do you know when I can get flax-seed?" writes Jus. Novotny, Jr., from Angus. This is one of the dozens of inquiries that the JOURNAL is receiving every week, and as we will answer them all right here. There seems to be no seed for sale this side of the twin cities and that is very expensive and liable to contain Russian thistle seed. The JOURNAL has heard of one party in Becker county and has written him and Hills flax was grown in that county we think it would be safe to try it—so far as Russian thistle is concerned at least.

The JOURNAL spoke about George Kronschnabel being up to look over the stables of Peterson Bros. & Warninger with a view to making a purchase. It now transpires that he succeeded in indueing them to part with Rose Valley Chief, one of the finest in their stables. Rose Valley Chief is a handsome coal black horse, kind and docile and was one of the best animals in N. W. Kittson's stables. He is from a noted line of trotters and is an animal that Mr. Kronschnabel may well feel proud to be the owner of as there are very few horses in this northwest that can excel Rose Valley Chief in any point. We are glad to note that this horse is still owned in Polk County.

S. C. Bagley came down from Fosston last week to get Dr. Lequee to go and attend to three very sick horses. Mike fixed them all right and then did some dentistery on 27 others and when he left on Saturday afternoon the sick ones were doing nicely. While there Mr. Bagley took Mike over his farm which consists of a section and one-half, lying about 2 miles from the village of Fosston, very much of it undercultivation and thoroughly drained. Mr. Bagley has made a regular system on every quarter section of it with a grader and ditcher thus affording ample drainage for these lands. He has good buildings, good water, plenty of wood, one of the finest farms for stock in that neighborhood. As he intends to quit lumbering he is on the lookout for a buyer for his farm and lumbering outfit which may be had at a bargain.

H. Steenerson returned yesterday from St. Paul, where he had been arguing cases before the Supreme Court.

Grand Forks elected a republican mayor. The battle was not fought, however, on a basis of party lines so the victory is not as significant as is ours.

The present city council will meet next Saturday evening to canvass the election returns and swear in the newly elected officers. The new council will meet next Tuesday.

John Bistow was in on Wednesday. Says it does not feel so much like as it did a month ago.

Mrs. S. L. Collins returned on Wednesday from a visit to her father out in the country.

S. L. Collins has purchased of the Audover Stock Co., their Clydesdale stallion "King Tom" and will keep him at his stables in this city. This valuable animal is too well known to need further description here. Farmers and breeders are invited to call and see him.

Here is a sample of the report of the election sent to the Twin City papers from the Times office:

Crookston, Minn.—It was the first party line election ever held in the city. John Gilbert, republican, was elected mayor by 80 votes. Wheeler, republican, was elected aldermen at large. The democrats gain control of the council and elect the assessor.

The Times is terribly afraid that Mr. Childs will get into the Council, after all. After doing all the dirty work possible to defeat him, the Times now says: "Mr. Childs intends to play the baby act by contesting the election, after being fairly and squarely beaten." The Times calls the casting of illegal ballots "fair and square." So did McKane—and he went to stute's prison for his opinion. The Times may rest assured that if Mr. Childs was beaten fairly and squarely he will submit to the result, but he is not a man who can be imposed upon, and he will not allow himself to be beaten by illegal votes, and he will no doubt take steps to ascertain why non-residents were allowed to vote. Your little game of bluff won't work in this case, Mac.

W. B. Dawley, who stepped out of the postoffice on April 1st, has been a resident of Crookston for 13 years this spring. He commenced business in this city as a clerk for Fontaine & Anglim, and was one of the best clerks that firm ever had. After a few years he engaged in business for himself, under the firm name of Hartshorn, Hurlbut & Dawley, which firm did a large and flourishing business for a time and was while running one of the leading institutions in the city. The removal of W. E. Hurlbutt to Minneapolis to engage in business in a larger sphere and the withdrawal of W. D. Hurlbut caused the dissolution of the firm, and Mr. Dawley engaged with the American Rubber Co., as traveling salesman. Four years ago he was appointed postmaster in our city and the JOURNAL may safely say that Crookston never had a better. Always attentive, strictly to business, obliging and accommodating he has built up the business in good shape and has made many warm personal friends who will unite with the JOURNAL in wishing him abundant success in life. He has accepted the same position that he resigned to take up the postoffice work, and he will probably hold it until we get a chance to put in a republican president and seed him again as postmaster of this city—in 1896.

Musical Entertainment.

There will be a musical entertainment at the Baptist church Thursday evening, April 12th, given by some of the best talent the city affords, in the interest of the Public Reading Room, an institution in which we should all take the deepest interest. Some of our public-spirited ladies are striving to keep open a library for the benefit of the public, and we should all turn out and help them in this instance, where we shall receive the worth of our money in the excellence of the program, besides contributing to a most worthy cause. Admission 15 and 25 cents.

M. R. Brown sold four horses on Monday, three on Wednesday and in fact he is selling 'em right along every day more or less. Now is the time to buy while they are to be had so low.

Wm. Anglim is wearing a pair of boots that M. Lefebvre made for him the first year he came to this city. Mr. A. says he always wears those boots in muddy times as they keep his feet perfectly dry no matter how wet the going is.

Thos. Gibbon, a stockman, writes from Rockport, Texas, under date of May 12, 1893. "Gents: I have used your Haller's Barb wire Liniment, and am so well pleased with it that I have no hesitancy in declaring it the best I ever used for curing wire cuts, sores and wounds. It is truly a wonderful healer, and I would not think of raising stock without it." F. L. Durand sells and guarantees it.

Horses for Sale.

Selling them every day at some price or other. If you need a horse come and see me. I am coming pretty near to giving horses away and now is your chance if you want good honest work horses. Never before have I seen prices so low and never expect to again after this spring. Always something on hand. Call and see me.

M. R. BROWN.

Haller's Little German Pills are the superior of many and excelled by none. They are easy-acting, and do not nauseate. Their use stimulates the liver and corrects the bilious conditions of the stomach. They are sugar coated, small in size, and are the mildest and most effective cathartic that can be used. Try a wonderful one and you will never use any other. For sale by F. L. Durand.

In the springtime nature calls for a renovation of the system, which has become clogged and congested with impurities which have settled into the blood. To thoroughly cleanse the blood with Haller's Sarsaparilla and Burdock, means that the impure and wasted matter will be cast out of the system, and strength and vigor will be fully and quickly restored. This excellent Sarsaparilla is sold and guaranteed by F. L. Durand.

CITY COUNCIL.

Official Proceedings of the Meetings Held April 7th, 9th and 10th.

Alderman Childs Creates a Stir in Regard to Illegal Voting.

The Old Council Step out, and the New Council Organizes.

Proceedings of an adjourned meeting of the city council of the City of Crookston held in the city hall on Saturday evening, April 7th, 1894.

Meeting called to order by President Cromb.

Roll call.

Aldermen present: Anderson, Childs, Jennings, Gervais, Morrisey, Norrie, Simmons, Walker, Watts, Cromb, Marlette.

Moved by Alderman Childs, seconded by Alderman Gervais, that a committee of three be instructed to canvass the vote and commence in numerical order from ward one. Chairman appointed Aldermen Gervais, Norrie and Jennings.

After canvassing the votes their report was read to the council.

Moved by Alderman Childs, seconded by Alderman Anderson, that the report as read by the committee on canvassing be amended by substituting the figures 22 where the figures 24 appear in the vote for Alderman McGregor of the Fifth ward.

After considerable discussion upon the matter W. P. Hitchcock and Geo. Wilde, who acted as judges of election, were sworn, and made statements to the council regarding the votes cast by a number of men in the Fifth ward.

Alderman Childs moved the previous question.

Aldermen voting in the affirmative: Anderson, Childs, Gervais, Marlette, Simmons.

Aldermen voting in the negative: Jennings, Morrisey, Norrie, Walker, Watts. Motion declared lost.

On motion council adjourned to meet on Monday evening April 9th, at 7 o'clock p. m.

E. C. CARRUTH, Clerk.

Proceedings of an adjourned meeting of the city council of the city of Crookston, held in the city hall on Monday evening, April 9th, 1894. Meeting called to order by President Cromb.

Roll call.

All aldermen present.

Minutes of the previous adjourned meeting read.

Moved by Alderman Childs, seconded by Alderman Gervais, that a stenographer be appointed for the evening. Carried.

Court Stenographer B. A. Strawbridge was employed and filed his report in clerk's office not transcribed.

Moved by Alderman Morrisey, seconded by Alderman Norrie, that the report of the canvassing committee as read to the council be accepted by the council, except that portion relating to the vote for aldermen of the Fifth ward, leaving that portion out and open for debate.

Alderman Childs raised the point of order, that there was a motion to amend the report already before the council from Saturday evening's meeting. Chair declared the point well taken.

Alderman Morrisey raised the point of order that as the board of canvassers', report was only read to the council and the reading of the minutes showed that no action had been taken on the report of the committee that there was no motion before the house as mentioned by Alderman Childs. Chair declared the point well taken.

After considerable debate upon the matter the vote was taken, as follows: Ayes, Anderson, Jennings, Childs, Gervais, Marlette, Walker, Cromb, Morrisey, Norrie, Watts, Simmons. Motion declared carried.

After expressions of opinions and remarks were heard from different attorneys and residents upon the matter, Alderman Morrisey made the following motion which was seconded by Alderman Norrie. Moved, that we declare A. McGregor elected as alderman of the Fifthward, be by the returns shown by the judges of election as having received the largest number of votes.

Alderman Childs moved to amend, seconded by Alderman Gervais, that in place of declaring Mr. McGregor elected as alderman of the fifth ward we declare that no legal election of alderman has been held in the fifth ward of Crookston.

Aldermen voting in the affirmative: Anderson, Childs, Jennings, Gervais, Simmons.

Aldermen voting in the negative: Morrisey, Marlette, Norrie, Watts, Walker, Cromb. Amendment declared lost.

The vote was then taken on the motion with the following result:

Aldermen voting in the affirmative: Cromb, Walker, Simmons, Norrie, Marlette, Morrisey, Gervais.

Aldermen voting in the negative: Watts, Jennings, Anderson.

Alderman Childs excused from voting. Motion declared carried by the chair.

The undersigned, members of the City Council of the City of Crookston, do hereby certify that an adjourned meeting of said city council, held in the City Hall on Monday evening, April 9th, 1894, we duly canvassed the vote cast at the annual charter election of said city, held on Tuesday, April 3rd, 1894, and find that the following number of legal votes were cast for the following named persons for the offices named, to-wit:

JOHN CROMB,
Board of Canvassers.

Aldermen Childs, Anderson and Jennings refused to sign the above.

The following number of votes were cast relating to the proposition voted upon relating to water works, electric light, city hospital, etc.:

First proposition—Yes, 397; No, 158.

Second proposition—Yes, 345; No, 187.

Third proposition—Yes, 443; No, 160.

The president of the council, John Cromb, arose and in a few brief words tendered his resignation as president of the council and aldermau of the fourth ward.

Moved by Alderman Childs, seconded by Aldermun Norrie, that the council extend to the retiring president of the council its thanks for the kindness and fairness in which he has presided over our body for the past term. Carried unanimously by a rising vote.

On motion the resignation of John Cromb was accepted.

Alderman Gervais arose and presented to the council the name of Fred Hall as alderman to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of John Cromb. On motion the chair was asked to cast the ballot in favor of Mr. Hall; same was done and Mr. Hall was declared duly elected to fill the vacancy as aldermun of the Fourth ward.

Moved by Alderman Norrie, seconded by Aldermun Watts, that the city attorney be instructed to make a settlement with Fontaine & Anglim in reference to their judgment against the city on a basis not to exceed $250 and that said client be instructed to draw an order for the amount.

Ayes: Childs, Jennings, Gervais, Norrie, Simmons, Walker, Watts, Morrisey. Aldermen Marlette and Anderson not voting. Declared carried.

On motion council adjourned.

E. C. CARRUTH, Clerk.

Proceedings of a regular meeting of the City Council of the City of Crookston held in the city hall on Tuesday evening April 10th, 1894.

Meeting called to order by Vice President Morrisey.

Roll Call."

Aldermen present, Anderson, Jennings, Gervais, Marlette, Norrie, Simmons, Watts, Morrisey.

Aldermen absent, Childs, Walker.

The minutes of the previous meetings were read and approved.

The newly elected aldermen being present a new organization was formed and roll call again ordered.

Aldermen present, Bahn, Jennings, Morrisey, Norrie, Watts, Kirsch, Gervais, Hall, Marlette, McGregor, Wheeler.

On motion it was decided to ballot for president of the council. The names of Aldermen Morrisey and Watts were placed in nomination. There were 10 ballots cast of which number Aldermun Morrisey received 6 and Watts 4, Alderman Morrisey was therefore declared president of the council for the ensuing year. Ald. Jennings name was presented for vice president of the council. The clerk was instructed to cast the ballot in favor of Alderman Jennings, which he did and Alderman Jennings was therefore declared vice president of the council for the ensuing yehr.

The finance committee reported favorably upon the following bills:

Bills allowed and ordered paid.

Aeries & Lancaster, back hire	$ 33 33

On motion the bills were allowed and ordered paid.

The bond of W. A. Lanctot as city clerk was presented and duly accepted by the council.

On motion further business was suspended and a committee was requested to wait upon the Mayor-elect and bring him before the council in case he wished to make any remarks.

The committee presented the mayor and also Mayor-elect Cromb, Mayor Stephens before stepping out made a brief but to the point speech which was kindly received by the council and citizens in the room.

Mayor Cromb then presented his message to the council with his appointments for the different offices of the city.

CROOKSTON, April 10, 1894.

TO THE HONORABLE, CITY COUNCIL:

GENTLEMEN:—Pursuant to the provisions of the city charter I submit the following appointments for your approval or objection viz:

For city comptroller, E. M. Walsh,

For city attorney, De Forest Buckley,

For city engineer, Geo. A. Ralph,

For chief of police Louis Gonyeu,

For first patrolman, John Kyle,

For second patrolman, T. H. Bang.

Respectfully

JOHN CROMB, Mayor.

The appointments were all duly confirmed and the persons named thereon declared elected to the offices named in the appointment.

Moved by Alderman Wheeler seconded by Alderman Hall, that the office of street commissioner and that of the city engineer be consolidated. Lost.

On motion it was decided to take an informal ballot for street commissioner.

An informal ballot was taken of which F. Jerome received 5 votes, R. B. Gates 1, Jas. Creighton 1, T. C. Stewart 1, T. A. Harris 3.

On motion a formal ballot was taken resulting in Jerome 4, Stewart 2, Creighton 2, Harris 3. No selection.

Second ballot resulted in Harris 1, Bunge 1, Jerome 3, Creighton 6. Jas. Creighton was thereupon declared elected as Street Commissioner for the ensuing term.

The council then proceeded to fix the salaries for the different officers of the city.

At a regular meeting of the city council of the City of Crookston, held in the City Hall on Tuesday evening, April 10th, 1894, Alderman Wheeler offered the following resolution, which was seconded by Alderman Norrie:

RESOLVED, That the salaries of the city officers, hereinafter named, be for the ensuing year:

For City Comptroller	$ 250 00
" " Attorney	250 00
" " Engineer	250 00
" " Clerk	250 00
" " Treasurer	250 00

And for the Chief of Police, he also to act as commissioner of poor, $75 per month. For patrolman No. 1, $55 per month. For patrolman No. 2, $35 per month. For street commissioner, $420 per year, for his entire time, except the months of December, January and February, during which months he shall give such time as the city council may require. City assessor, $300 per year.

Upon the call of ayes and nays the vote stood as follows:

Aldermen voting in the affirmative —All.

Aldermen voting in the negative —None.

Upon this vote the resolution was declared carried by the President of the Council.

Passed this 10th day of April, 1894.

JAS. E. MORRISEY,
Pres. of Council.

Approved this 11th day of April, 1894.

JOHN CROMB,
Mayor.

Attest:

W. A. LANCTOT, Clerk.

The City Clerk was instructed to advertise for bids for doing the printing and job work for the city for the ensuing year.

On motion Dr. F. X. Farley was unanimously elected as City Health Officer to serve for three years, or until his successor is elected and qualified.

The committee upon poor reported that they now had upon their hands Anna Erickson, John Safford and Johanna Erickson as dependent upon the city for assistance.

It was moved and carried that an adjournment meeting of the council be held on Tuesday evening, April 17th.

The justices' reports for the last quarter were handed in and referred to the City Attorney for inspection.

The official bonds of A. A. Glenn, W. Bloom and O. O. Christinson were referred back for correction.

On motion council adjourned.

W. A. LANCTOT,
Clerk.

The Propositions Carried.

The three propositions submitted to the voters at the city election, were carried by large majorities. The first one: "Shall the city own and operate a waterworks and electric light plant?" received 397 in favor and 158 against; the second "Shall the intake pipe be moved to a point above the city?" 345 in favor, and 187 against; the third "Shall the city own and operate a hospital?" 443 in favor of, and 150 against. While the majorities in favor of were large, the vote shows that the questions were little understood or else the voters took little interest, as not much over a half vote was polled on any proposition.

COUNTY DIVISION.

A Correspondent Throws New Light on the Subject.

EDITOR JOURNAL:—In your last issue I noticed an article on county division, in which you state that the people of Fosston are getting signers to a petition to put another county division proposition in the field to be voted for at the election next fall, and you say that it can do no harm to put this fourth proposition in the field.

Now, Mr. Editor, I'm afraid you haven't studied this question very much. Indeed I think you have been devoting more attention to city politics lately than to county division, and you will find later on that the latter question is of much more importance to the city of Crookston than the question of who shall be mayor, or who shall run the city council for the ensuing year.

To commence with, there are already three county division propositions in the field, and if the Fosston people should file theirs it would make four. Each one is to be voted for separately and every voter has the privilege of voting for or against each proposition. One may carry, and the rest be defeated. They do not necessarily stand or fall together. Of course the East Grand Forks people, the Red Lake Falls people and the McIntosh people have agreed to vote for each of the three propositions, and thus divide Polk county into four counties, so it is probable that the vote for each will be about the same.

Now the Fosston people want to come in with a fourth proposition, claiming that the farmers around that place will vote for the McIntosh proposition, providing they do not get one nearer home to vote for. Suppose the Fosston proposition should be placed in the field, what is to prevent the people around Fosston voting for the McIntosh proposition as well as their own, and in return the McIntosh people can vote for the Fosston proposition as well as their own. Indeed, I am told that this trading is already going on, and that with the exception of the business men of these two villages, the people will vote for both propositions, if not for all of them.

Now, sir, if you can show me how the city of Crookston would be benefited by having the fourth proposition in the field, I will be pleased to have you do so. This city should be unanimously opposed to division of any kind. We must consistently advocate division in one direction, and oppose it in another. And I tell you, sir, we can defeat the whole business if the citizens will only bestir themselves.

I am told that some of our democratic politicians are very anxious to have the Fosston proposition in the field, and they may have originated the idea. For a month or two they have been figuring over the vote of this county, and have come to the conclusion that if the Thirteen Towns were cut off from Polk county, and the balance of the county left intact, the democrats will then stand a good show of controlling the county. They base their calculations upon the vote cast for governor, in the last election. The populist candidate received the largest vote, the democrats second and the republicans last. As there are from 1,400 to 1,600 votes in the Thirteen Towns, and these are all populists, with the exception of a few republicans, the democrats have mighty good reason to believe that with this vote taken out of Polk county, they will then control the county. The Fosston people are acting in good faith, but I don't think they have figured the matter down to its final and proper conclusion.

I have watched this matter pretty closely, and I think if you will only take the trouble to investigate it a little, you will find that I am correct.

Yours truly,
A TAX-DIVISION.

Crookston, April 11, 1894.

Don't forget the temperance lectures by Rev. R. H. Battey next week. There is nothing that could be considered fanatical about them, but he handles the subject from a business stand-point. It will hurt no one to listen to them and might be of practical benefit to some to practice what Mr. Battey has to say. There should be a large turnout at each lecture.

WORK OF CONGRESS.

Tuesday, April 3.

After the settlement of O'Neill-Boy election case in the house English-Hillborn case was taken up, but the quorum had disappeared.

The senate passed the Behring sea bill. Senator Allison spoke for the Republicans on the tariff bill.

Wednesday, April 4.

The house seated Mr. Englisht of California, displacing Mr. Hilborn, Republican.

By a vote of 146 to 116 the house refused to pass the Bland bill over the president's veto.

After the morning hour in the senate the tariff bill was taken up and Senator Allison concluded his speech against the measure. He was followed by Mr. Mills of Texas, who confined himself chiefly to a defense of the ad valorem system.

Thursday, April 5.

The Behring sea bill passed the house. The urgent deficiency bill, carrying something over $7,000,000 passed the house. After the deficiency bill was disposed of the consideration of the postoffice appropriation bill was resumed.

The Hasabrough-Shiells bill was discussed in the senate during the morning hour. The senate then went into executive session and soon afterward adjourned.

Bills were passed by the house authorizing the construction of bridges across the St. Louis river between Wisconsin and Minnesota at Duluth and Grass Point.

Friday, April 6.

What was considered a test vote on the tariff bill was taken in the senate on a motion to adjourn over Sabbath day, and resulted in a majority of one against adjournment. The Populist members and Senators Hill, Irby and Murphy voted with the Republicans for adjournment.

In the senate Senator Peffer spoke for two hours on the tariff, claiming that the Populists took upon the tariff as a tax, but they do not believe in wholly abandoning it.

The house went ahead with appropriation bills again during the day. Some routine business was transacted, but little acted. A bill authorizing the city of Hastings, Minn., to construct a wagon bridge across the Mississippi river was passed on motion of Mr. Hall. The evening session was devoted to pension bills.

Saturday, April 7.

The house transacted no business on account of filibustering.

The senate discussed the Chinese treaty in executive session. The principal discussion was to whether the treaty should be considered in executive or open session.

Monday, April 9.

The house was disorganized. Three-fourths of the members were in the senate listening to Senator Hill's speech on the tariff. Those who remained were occupied with District of Columbia affairs, but little actual business was transacted.

The feature of the day in the senate was Senator Hill's speech on the tariff bill. He vigorously denounced the income tax feature and incidentally scored the administration's foreign policy.

Senator Walsh took the oath of office as successor to Senator Colquitt.

LOCKOUT ORDERED.

Chicago Employers Declare War on the Building Trades Unions.

CHICAGO, April 9.—The lockout has at last been ordered in the building trades for next Thursday morning. This decision was reached at a meeting of the Central Building league's executive committee. The committee's decision in the matter is authoritative and final. Though another meeting of the league and the building trades' building material men's associations affiliated with it will be held to-night, the executive committee's action, it is merely a formality. The painter's union has unanimously declared that if the bosses declared a lockout the men affected by it would refuse to pay rent during the continuance of the lockout. They claim they will drag the property owners into the fight. The lockout is expected to affect about 60,000 men.

MINISTER THURSTON'S DIPLOMACY.

He Has Been Courting an American Girl as Well as the American Government.

That the golden thread of a love story runs through all the complicated meshes of diplomacy is shown by the fact that Minister Thurston of Hawaii has been entangled for the past year or more is evident from the announcement that he is about to marry Miss Harriet W. Potter of St. Joseph, Mich., the young woman who was until recently the cashier of the Hawaiian volcano cyclorama at the California Midwinter fair and had previously filled the same position while the cyclorama was at the Columbian exposition. Mr. Thurston has been a warm friend of Miss Potter's family for a number of years and has been a frequent visitor at St. Joseph, where he has a large number of acquaintances, hnt none of them suspected what was going on until the public announcement of the engagement was made.

Miss Potter is a very attractive young woman of 23, slightly above the medium height and of the blond type, her hair being light brown and her eyes large and blue. She was born in St. Joseph and graduated from the public school there three years ago, after ward taking charge of the cyclorama. She served on the staff of the St. Joseph Daily Press for awhile. In manner Miss Potter is very unassuming, but she possesses a quiet dignity that always commands respect and admiration. She is said to be a clever and entertaining conversationist and is unusually accomplished.

Minister Thurston is about 38 years of age and has been a widower for five or six years. He has a son 9 years old, who is now in Washington under the care of his minister's mother. Mr. Thurston was born in Hawaii. His parents were among the first American missionaries who went to the islands in 1820. He is well known as a lawyer in Honolulu and has been prominent for a long time in the republican party there. He was the practical leader of the revolutionary cabinet of 1893 and was one of the commissioners sent to Washington by the provisional government to negotiate the treaty of annexation. That he is a thorough annexationist is proved by the treaty he has successfully negotiated with Miss Potter.

Wilson on Home.

In the Wilson tariff bill we find that section 273 reads as follows:

Collars and cuffs and shirts and all articles of wearing apparel of every description not especially provided for in this act, composed wholly or in part of linen, and linen hydraulic hose, 35 per cent ad valorem.

The great work of tariff reform appears to have transformed the "hydraulic hose" of the McKinley tariff into an article of wearing apparel for President Wilson. We must confess to a degree of ignorance as to the exact member of the body that constitutes hose should embrace. As it appears in close association with "collars and cuffs and shirts," it might be regarded as a species of Cleveland collar. But we also find that it is allied with "all articles of wearing apparel of every description," which involves a greater degree of mystery.

Wilson attired in hydraulic hose.

But why be worse than Solomon in all his glory.

It may be to lessen his cares and his woes,

To keep tepid his toes or the cold off his nose,

Does he carry it round wherever he goes

To ward off attacks from political foes?

Does he wear it by day or when it reposes?

And how he puts it to the Lord only knows.

—American Economist.

Mill to the Rescue.

In the senate on Tuesday, March 6, Senator Hill of New York moved up the tariff situation to a nicety by offering the following resolution:

Whereas, The secretary of the treasury has announced a deficit of $18,000,000 for the current fiscal year;

Whereas, House bill No. 4864, known as the tariff bill, proposes to increase $78,000,000 revenue from present tariff taxation and to meet the double deficiency by new internal and direct taxation; therefore

Resolved, That the senate finance committee frame amendments to the said bill, omitting the said internal and direct taxes newly proposed and instead thereof make provision for sufficient revenue by putting other foreign imports and otherwise revising the tariff without creating a deficiency.

it is easy to steal or ring watches from the pocket. The thief gets the watch in one hand, the chain in the other and gives a short, quick jerk—the ring slips off the watch stem, and away goes the watch, leaving the victim only the chain.

FIREMEN PERISHED.

AWFUL CATASTROPHE IN A MILWAUKEE THEATRE.

While Fighting Flames in the Davidson Building the Roof Fell in, Carrying a Dozen Firemen Down to Death—A Terrible Fireworks Explosion.

MILWAUKEE, April 9.—Nine firemen are dead and six seriously injured as the result of the fire in the Davidson theatre, which mysteriously started in the roof of the building at 4:20 a. m. The loss on the building, scenery and equipments of the Lilliputian company aggregates $600,000, on which there is an insurance of $88,000, of which $10,000 is carried by Rosenfeld Bros., owners of the Lilliputians. Their loss will be $75,000. Twenty firemen were on the roof of the building, working under the directions of chiefs, and it was thought that the blaze was under control, when the roof seemed to bulge under their feet, and in a moment every man was pitched into the auditorium of the theatre, some falling into the parquet and others upon the balconies. Deeds of heroism were numerous, as usual under such conditions. Michael Dunn, captain of one of the fire tugs, slid down a rope, made it fast to several of the men who were and then climbed the rope hand over hand to the roof of the Davidson hotel, which escaped destruction. The fire took a new start among the debris and amid the groans of the imprisoned firemen the work of rescue began and was kept up until 8 o'clock p. m., when the eighth body was taken out and the work abandoned until morning, with only one corpse to remove—that of Third Assistant Chief Jansen, a brother of Chief of Police Jansen.

The following is a revised and corrected list of the dead:

AUGUST JANSEN, third assistant chief.
FRANK MCGUIRE, lieutenant Truck No. 4 and acting captain No. 14.
FRED KRUSCHKE, engineer Chemical Company No. 2.
CAPTAIN ARCHIE CAMPBELL, of the firehouse Foley.
ALLIE RIES, Company No. 3, killed by falling ladder.
JAMES C. FREEMAN, lieutenant Company No. 4.
FRANK WINNE, Chemical No. 4; found in balcony of theatre.
THOMAS MCKENNA, Engine Company No. 1.
JOHN FARRELL, Chemical No. 2.

Were Roasted to Death.

The catastrophe which caused the terrible loss of life occurred shortly after 5 o'clock, when the fire was seemingly under control, the theatre roof, on which a score or more of the brave firemen stood as they fought the flames, went down, and the brave men were carried with it to the floor of the auditorium below. Some were extricated from the furnace of flames, in which the whole interior was now enveloped, by their more fortunate comrades, who risked their lives to drag out the forms of the dead and injured men. Six or eight men were soon brought out and those who were able to speak said there must be 10 more in the ruins, where living death awaited them. For these poor fellows there was no chance. The burning roof had fallen on them and they were roasted to death, if they had not been killed in that terrible plunge from the roof.

SEVEN MEN KILLED.

Logging Crew of a Michigan Camp Meet Death in a Railroad Wreck.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., April 9.—A special to The Democrat from New Era, Mich., says: On the floor of Staples & Covell's logging camp, three miles east of here, lies seven charred and scalded bodies, the result of the most terrible railroad accident that has ever happened in this section. The logging crew on Staples & Covell's road were returning from White River to camp shortly before noon and when within sight of camp the narrow gauge engine struck a fallen tree and was knocked over a 16-foot embankment, carrying nine men down with it. Seven of them are dead, one seriously injured and the others slightly.

PANIC IN A SCHOOL.

A Number of Pupils Killed and Injured at Chicago.

CHICAGO, April 9.—A panic occurred in the Humboldt public school, and in the mad rush of the children to escape from the building, one boy was killed and over a score were crushed and trampled. Fourteen children lie in the St. Elizabeth hospital, under the care of physicians, while many others were carried to their homes by the police. The panic was caused by the explosion of a steampipe.

THIRTEEN DEAD.

Terrible Explosion of Fireworks at Blandford, Va.

PETERSBURG, Va., April 9.—An explosion in the fireworks factory of C. N. Romaine & Bros. in Blandford resulted in the death of 13 persons and the injury of several others. Most of the bodies recovered are unrecognizable.

Bloodied Stock Burned.

BALTIMORE, April 9.—One of the most destructive fires of its kind that has ever occurred in this city, took place in the burning out of Bernard Mannion's livery stable. It was filled with valuable blooded stock and expensive equipages. The horses were stabled on the second floor and the fire cut off access to them. One hundred and thirty-seven fine animals were burned or suffocated. The loss on building and contents will exceed $300,000.

Crushed by an Elevator.

CHICAGO, April 9.—Frank Kennedy was crushed to death and Frederick Koenig perhaps fatally injured beneath an elevator in the Columbus Cloak company's store. The men were making some repairs to the elevator.

RIOT AND BLOODSHED.

Pennsylvania Coke Regions the Scene of Great Disorder.

UNIONTOWN, Pa., April 4.—It would take columns to tell in detail the exciting events of the day, the third of the big coke strike now on in the Connellsville region. At least nine lives have been taken during the past 12 hours. Unless the strong arm of the military interferes the deaths will be counted by scores instead of tens. So much excitement was never known in the region and people everywhere are excited and apprehensive of graver dangers. The rioting began early in the morning, but the climax was not reached until 8 p. m., when a body of strikers, numbering several hundred, marched on the Davidson works of the H. C. Frick Coke company at Connellsville, where men were working. The strikers had been there in the morning to get the men out, but no one was working. In the afternoon when they returned deputies had been placed to receive them. When the strikers approached

They Were Ordered to Stop.

They came on and tried to get at the men. The deputies fired. The strikers returned the fire and charged, driving the deputies and men from the works. Chief Engineer Paddock of the Frick company, ran up in the tipple of the works. The strikers followed and shot him in the back of the head. They beat him and crushed his head with stones and threw his body from the tipple window to the ovens, 80 feet below. They then tried to fire the tipple, but left when they saw the deputies returning with a large force from Connellsville. Hearing of Paddock's murder, hundreds volunteered to avenge his death. The pursuing party, in command of County Detective Frank Campbell, overtook the strikers a half mile from Davidson and opened fire on them. The strikers fired in return but ran on. Three strikers fell. One was killed instantly and two others

Were Fatally Wounded.

Another of the strikers who got the start of the main body was shot by a deputy at Broadford, a mile distant. He was also killed instantly, the ball penetrating his neck. Eleven strikers were captured where the first battle took place, and the pursuing party kept up the chase until Dawson, a point several miles distant, was reached, where 50 more strikers were captured. All the efforts of the deputies and more levelheaded citizens were needed to prevent the lynching of the 11 who were taken back to Connellsville. The law-abiding element had their way and a special train arrived here with 64 of those who were in the mob that killed Paddock. A great crowd greeted their arrival and amid cries of "lynch them" the prisoners were hurried up a back street to the jail. A large body of strikers were present and made a rush but were held back by the lag crowd and the deputies. Thirty more of the same band of strikers have since been arrested and jailed.

To Rescue the Prisoners,

At the Mayfield plant of the McClure company two men were fatally shot during the day. The strikers charged the men at work in the morning, but were driven off by the deputies after a striker was shot through the body. In the afternoon they returned and renewed the attack. There was much firing and a deputy was fatally wounded.

NEARING THE END.

Backbone of the Great Pennsylvania Coke Strike About Broken.

UNIONTOWN, Pa., April 5.—Unless there is a radical change in the situation in the Pennsylvania coke region, the strike of the miners and cokers is about broken. The authorities have taken a stand and are determined to put down the riot at any cost now. This policy has thrown the lawbreakers into a state of demoralization. After the sheriff's posse concluded the engagement with the mob which had murdered Engineer Paddock and landed the leaders and over 100 strikers in the county jail, everything quieted down immediately, and the reports from every point in the region at the close of the day show that the lawless act have been generally subjugated. Small outbreaks occurred at several places during the morning, but as the day advanced the strikers lost courage, and the mobs which camped out during the night, intending to make raids at every working plant at daybreak, commenced to diminish in size, and by the time half the route of each mob was covered the forces were almost completely disbanded.

TROUBLE AT AN END.

Strikers in the Coke Region Stop Rioting and Return Home.

UNIONTOWN, Pa., April 9. — The strike is over and unanimous defeat marks its collapse. Within the past six hours the rioters from both sections of the coke fields have laid down their arms and gone peacefully to their homes. The movement was a miserable failure and not a point was gained by the men.

They are in a worse condition now than before, as the companies are stocking their works with English speaking workmen to the exclusion of the foreign element.

Abolish Indian Inspectors.

WASHINGTON, April 9.—The Indian affairs subcommittee on appropriations expect to complete the annual appropriation bill in time to report to the full committee next week. A member of the sub-committee said that a recommendation would be made that the offices of three of the five Indian inspectors, two of the five traveling Indian agents and the superintendent of Indian schools be abolished.

Wellman in Norway.

BERGEN, Norway, April 11.—Walter Wellman and his party of Americans bound on an exploring expedition to the North Pole, have arrived here. All the party are in good health and confident of success.

OUR GALLANT TARS.

A CUSTOM THAT WILL ENDURE AS LONG AS THE NAVY ENDURES.

Drinking the Toast to "Sweethearts and Wives" Every Saturday Night—It Makes the Men in the Navy Better, Truer, Nobler and Braver.

The people of this country are very fond of their naval officers, so far as they know them. It would be a good deal better for the country if they were better known, for among them are to be found as large a percentage of fine, brainy, lovable and well bred men as in any of the familiar professions.

There is not much sentimentality in the navy, but there is a deal of sentiment, which is a vastly different thing. Certain cynical young women who have met officers and who have noticed how attentive they are sometimes think that this is merely a "dainty, sham devotion," bestowed upon young women while they meet at every port they touch. But this is not true. There is more genuine chivalry among the officers of the United States navy than is to be found among any class of men on shore.

It is one of the conventions of the navy to place women upon a pedestal, and there is no finer convention than is the world. It may be because that for so much of their time they are denied the delight of seeing women. But they never forget them.

Every Saturday night in every United States warship afloat there takes place a ceremony so beautiful, so exquisite, that it seems to have escaped from the land of chivalry and wandered into American life. There, flattered and amazed at its welcome, it has remained ever since and made the men in the navy better, truer, nobler and braver, for it must be confessed that the officers are, first of all, splendidly American.

When a ship is under way, there is no woman aboard her. She has no place there. Maybe each man carries an image of one in his thoughts during his watches on deck. Of these things he does not speak. But once each week he comes forth boldly with his fellows and reverently sends greeting from across the seas to her. From the China sea, from stormy Cape Horn, from the peaceful Mediterranean comes the message.

"Sweethearts and wives!" That was ever and always will be the sailor's toast. And when it is given aboard United States ships it is a tribute to the sweetness, the purity, the beauty of American womanhood. There are men who have drunk that toast every Saturday night for more than 40 years. It is never old to them. The officers would as soon think of passing unnoticed an important disciplinary regulation as passing Saturday night without this ceremony. It does not matter whether the ship is on the high seas, or anchored in a foreign port, or lying at the dock in the Brooklyn navy yard, so long as her men are aboard they drink the toast. It is a custom as old as the navy. It will endure as long as the navy endures.

When the supply of wine is running short during a long cruise, the officers deny themselves in order that the toast may have it for this toast on Saturday nights.

The servants are well trained. They have the champagne wisely chilled and open it almost without orders. After the dinner is finished the steward's officer arises. Very likely there is gray in his hair. His face is reddened by weather and seamed by years, for men who reach position cannot be young. But his heart is still young. They have dined well, and the content of well filled stomachs shines on their faces. But when the lieutenant commander rises they are still. He stands straight with his head upraised, the champagne bubbling deliciously.

"Gentlemen, are your glasses charged?" There is not one which is empty. The officers rise and bow their heads in answer.

"I give you" (the lieutenant commander speaks earnestly, and there is a soft glimmer in his eyes)—"I give you sweethearts and wives. God bless them!"

"Sweethearts and wives. God bless them!" comes in chorus from the officers. Then they drink, and if there runs down their spinal cords a little thrill, and if their eyes grow moist and their hands shake a bit it is a tribute to themselves and to American womanhood to those who toast is drunk. With something in their breasts throbbing like the great engines, and the swish and gurgle of the waters dashing their ears, there is conjured before them, like the misty vision of a dream, a home with a soft voiced woman and the prettie of a child, or a slender, girlish figure bending her head to hide the love light in her eyes. On Saturday night the officer at sea feels that he is very near home.

Every one knows that naval officers are famous for the attractions which they have for the fair. This may show that it isn't the uniform alone which is the magnet.—New York World.

The Forger.

Sir John Bowring says, in Longman's Magazine, "that not even the trained antiquary is proof against the forger and confesses that not only has he himself purchased forgeries, but has published accounts of them as if they had been genuine—accounts which any amount of subsequent withdrawals fails to annihilate. Counterfeits and forgeries abound in every department of science. Fictitious gems, manuscripts, inscriptions, gems, pottery, glass, enamels, ivories, coins, weapons, implements and armaments have each and all been foisted on collectors at different times and in various countries."

A Modern Hero.

Mme. M——, a very talented pianiste, when sitting next to Colonel Rassilier at the dinner table, asked him in a winning tone of voice:

"Are you fond of music, colonel?"

"Madame," replied the warrior, rolling a savage pair of eyes, "I am not afraid of it!"—Paris Rappel.

Those— Pimples

Are tell-tale symptoms that your blood is out of right—full of impurities, causing a sluggish and unsightly complexion. A few bottles of S. S. S. will remove all foreign and impure matter, cleanse the blood thoroughly, and give a clear and rosy complexion. It is most effectual, and entirely harmless.

Chas. Heaton, 73 Laurel Street, Phila., says: "I have had for years a humor in my blood which broke out about the face and neck in pimples. I was induced to try S. S. S., and my face is all clear and smooth as it should be—appetite splendid, sleep well and feel like running a foot race all for the use of S. S. S."

LAST night the JOURNAL received a communication in regard to county division, from one who claims to know what he is talking about, and although we had taken a different view of the matter, we are glad to have it discussed, and we publish the article in this issue. Lack of time prevents us making any criticism on it this week. The JOURNAL would like to hear expressions from other citizens on this question.

The Alexandria Post and News were last week cemented in the bonds of matrimony and appeared under the name of the Alexandria Post-News, with the name of Charles S. Mitchell at the mast-head. Mr. Mitchell is an experienced newspaper man and the new paper presents a very creditable appearance. The JOURNAL extends fraternal greeting and wishes the Post-News a long and prosperous life.

By glancing at the columns of the St. Paul Globe anybody would think that a state campaign was on. About two-thirds of the space in that sheet is devoted to the attempt to bluff the republicans into nominating some weak candidate for mayor of St. Paul, that the dems can beat. The Globe is in mortal terror lest the republicans should nominate Mayor Wright. Why don't that sheet give its readers in the state a little more state matter, thing besides St. Paul city politics?

Speaking of the coming election in St. Paul the Pioneer Press says:

"There is an idea current that almost any republican of good reputation for honesty and fair business ability can be elected at the coming city election; that he can be carried in on the wave of republican enthusiasm which is sweeping over the city as over the country at large. There are good grounds for this belief."

Why not? Did not Duluth show immense republican gains? Did not Crookston win a splendid republican victory in a three-cornered fight against the dems and the pops? Not to mention other Minnesota cities and towns. You can win with Mayor Wright, Dr. Wheaton, A. R. McGill, M. E. Clapp, or any other good republican. Try it and see if you can't.

The St. Paul Pioneer Press interviewed president J. J. Hill of the Great Northern railroad on his return from Europe and says editorially of the interview: "One of the most striking impressions he brought back with him is the tremendous impulse which has been given to bimetallism in Europe by the course of this government in putting a stop to the coinage of silver. England and the continent can no longer find a market at our treasury for all their surplus silver. The enormous decline of the silver rupee in India, aggravated by the repeal of the silver coinage laws of this country, has brought about a state of things where English statesmen as well as those of the continent are forced to look to bimetallism as a sole means of escape from the serious dilemma in which the monetary situation is involved. This is exactly the consequence that was predicted by the genuine bimetallists in this country as one of the main arguments for the repeal of the silver purchase act. It was the sure road and the only road to bimetallism—to the only bimetallism possible—that founded on international agreement. The other road, on whose steep decline the free silver men and still are urging the country, leads straight down to monometallism of the worst sort—a monometallism of depreciated silver."

A dispatch was sent out on Monday announcing the death of Charles Canning, at his home in Headman, Norman county. Another dispatch from Moorhead states that he committed suicide by drowning himself in the Red River while temporarily insane. Charles Canning was a well known character in this upper country. He represented this district in the legislature in '85 and later ran for congress against Hon. S. G. Comstock. For several years he has been engaged in the grain business at Duluth, was a member of the board of trade there, and, it is said that he had made a big fortune in wheat. He was a good hearted man though somewhat eccentric and nervous. He had developed into a red-hot populist and it is said that the late campaign in Duluth had unsettled his reason.

ADDITIONAL LOCAL.

Mr. Childs' Contest.

Mr. E. D. Childs, who was defeated for alderman in the Fifth ward by two votes, decided to lay before the city council certain facts which he had in his possession, going to show that there had been illegal votes cast at the election in the Fifth ward. Consequently on Saturday evening, when the city council had canvassed the returns and announced the result, Mr. Childs objected to the council declaring Mr. A. McGregor elected as alderman from the Fifth ward. He produced two affidavits to prove that there had been two illegal votes cast, and he also brought forward witnesses to prove that these votes had been cast for McGregor.

Mr. Childs wanted these two alleged illegal votes thrown out, but the opposition, led by Alderman Moreisey, made such a bitter fight, and talked so much about "snap judgment," etc., that the council decided to put the matter over until Monday night, when the other side could be heard provided they had anything to offer.

Mr. Childs held that by a clause in the city charter the council was authorized to act as "Judges of the election and qualification of its own members," while the opposition contended that by another clause in the charter the council could only act as a board of canvassers of the election returns.

The two clauses were apparently contradictory of each other, and the city attorney when called on for an opinion on the question, thought that both clauses were operative, and that while one made the council a board of canvassers, the other gave them power to exercise judgment in determining the result of the canvass. On Monday evening when the council assembled, Alderman Morrisey moved that A. McGregor be declared elected. Alderman Childs said that he had discovered other irregularities in the election in the fifth ward among which was the fact that a man whom Mr. Wilde—the democratic judge of election in that ward—had procured to act as clerk of election, was a resident of the town of Hummond, and chairman of the town board of supervisors, and Mr. Childs moved that the vote of the Fifth ward be thrown out as it was clearly illegal. Then followed arguments on the legal aspect of the question, by Alderman Watts, city attorney, Buckley, attorneys A. A. Miller and E. M. Stanton. Mr. Watts thought it was very hard to give a correct interpretation of the law, but was of the opinion that as the council had commenced to investigate the matter they should continue with it. Messrs Buckley and Miller were of the opinion that the council had the right to investigate any alleged irregularities in the election of its members, while Mr. Stanton held that the council had no powers in the matter except to certify to the election of its members as shown by the returns.

After more sparring by members of the council, Alderman Childs' motion to throw out the vote of the Fifth ward was defeated, and Alderman Morrisey's motion to declare Mr. McGregor elected was carried.

Mr. Childs made the fight simply to show that there had been illegal votes cast, and not for any desire to hold the office, and stated to the council that should the vote of his precinct be thrown out he would resign anyhow. But the council did not like to take the responsibility of throwing out the vote of the precinct—believing that this function properly belonged to the courts.

The New Council.

On Tuesday evening the new council organized by electing Aldermun Morrisey, president, and I. U. Jennings, vice-president.

Mayor Stephens, in introducing Mayor-elect Crumb and in taking leave of the council, made a few remarks regarding his administration, which he thought would go down in history as a memorable one. It would be pointed to as a year in which we had the typhoid fever epidemic, the year in which we had such hard times, and the year in which we had the low price of wheat.

Mayor-elect Crumb's address to the council was short and practical. He called the attention of the council particularly to three important questions which would confront them, viz: The financial condition of the city; the pumping of pure water; and the broken sewer. This latter question may not come up again, but the probabilities are that when the frost goes out of the ground this spring that the embankment will again settle, and the sewer be broken once more. Then the city will have to expend a large amount of money to fix it permanently or make a new outlet. The mayor's address was typical of the man—plain and practical.

The new council is composed as follows:

First ward—I. U. Jennings, Geo. O. Buhn.

Second ward—J. E. Morrisey, W. H. Norrie.

Third ward—Wm. Watts, M. E. Kirsch.

Fourth ward—N. S. Gervais, Fred W. Hall.

Fifth ward—A. McGregor, R. G. Mariette.

The new aldermen are Geo. O. Buhn, M. E. Kirsch, Fred W. Hall and A. McGregor. At the request of the people of Jerome's addition, Mr. Hall was appointed to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of John Cronk to accept the mayoralty.

The mayor's appointments, which were confirmed by the council, were as follows:

Comptroller—E. M. Walsh.

City Attorney—DeForest Buckley.

City Engineer—Geo. Ralph.

Chief of Police—Louis Gonyea.

Patrolmen—John Kyle and T. Bang.

The council elected Jas. Creighton as street commissioner.

Mr. Bang, the new patrolman, was for years employed on the streets under Dan McDonald.

Euclid Items.

EUCLID, April 11, 1894.

Henry Harm is visiting T. E. Biever today.

John McLennan was down from Angus Tuesday.

C. Stuhr drove to Red Lake Falls Saturday last.

Rev. S. Currie spent a few days at Mentor returning home Tuesday.

G. H. Fargo and son went to the city Saturday evening.

Andrew Anderson has moved into town.

Miss Mary Naplin has gone to her home at Black River.

E. D. Childs from Crookston, is up to-day talking over farming business with Robert Teal.

B. S. Chapin, of Warren came down Monday last to spend a few days with the Euclid people.

Rev. Astwood has just purchased a new buggy and set of light harness of H. C. Misner.

Robt. Teal has gone to his country home to look after his farming duties.

Rev. Fenzer was down from Warren to assist Rev. Astwood at a missionary meeting here Friday last.

Misses Anna Hancock and Hattie Davidson returned to Crookston Saturday evening after spending their weeks vacation with their parents.

Mrs. Ballou and children moved their household goods out to their farm, but on account of the late snow storm are now residing with Mr. B. in the depot.

The morning hour of service at the Presbyterian church has been closed it took a little slaughter, (to say the least) for him to exercise it? changed to 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mrs. J. S. Chapin entertained some of the Euclid folks Tuesday evening, a pleasant time was had by all.

The party which gathered for the purpose of surprising Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Harrington with a right royal good time, made a complete success. "They were surprised" and a general good time was indulged in.

If you don't believe in mesmerism just ask Robert Teal what he thinks about it.

Sampson and Protection.

Hon. B. Sampson is correspondling with a tanner with a view to having a tannery added to our industries. This would be a big thing for farmers, furnishing a good market for hides, that are now of very little value. As all of our oldest inhabitants well know, Mr. Sampson has always been an enthusiast in the matter of manufactures for Crookston and has himself spent a good deal of money in that cause, establishing one of the first flouring mills in the city, which flourished was, unfortunately, destroyed by fire a few years since. Mr. S. is also interested in having a woolen mill established here, believing that we can get a woolen mill here we can raise sheep, sell wool and thus make our own clothes, and if we can get a tannery we can get cheap leather for our boots and shoes and our harness and then we will not have use for quite so much money as we now need. I believe thoroughly in the doctrine of production to American industries as against foreign countries. Manufactures here in Crookston would not only supply work for laborers, but a better market for our farmers and thus all would receive a benefit! I don't see how an intelligent American citizen can believe in the doctrine of free trade."

Teachers Retained.

At a meeting of the school board held yesterday evening, the following teachers were engaged for the ensuing year:

Misses Margaret L. Brown, M. Willmus, I. Fairbanks, J. L. Johnson, Minnie Wadel, Martha Crookshanks, Minnie Crookshanks, J. Barker, Lizzie Sullivan, May Cameron, Evelyn Hall and Mrs. M. B. Hayes.

It was decided not to retain Superintendent Moore and Principal Corwin. The board will meet in two weeks to fill the vacancies.

The Sons of Veterans will give a ball at the G. A. R. hall on Wednesday evening, April 18th. The Scheidt orchestra will furnish the music, and a good time is expected. Tickets 75 cents.

S. L. Collins has purchased of the Andover Stock Co., their Clydesdale stallion "King David" and will keep him at his stables in this city. This valuable animal is too well known to need further description here. Farmers and breeders are invited to call and see him.

"Look at my hired man" said Tom Morris to our reporter on Monday and looking closely we observed an urchin about as long and as fat as a healthy slate pencil, who was busy wrestling with a shovel about twice as long as himself in an heroic endeavor to clear away the snow from the walk in front of Tom's store. "I believe in patronizing home industry," said Tom as he retreated into his store with a jolly laugh. "It looks to us," we responded "as though you had called out the infantry to put this insurrection down—in the gutter."

Louis Fontaine is becoming quite a farmer. Aside from his interest in stock he is taking great pains to develope the grain interests of the county. In the spring of '93 he sent away and procured a quantity of Early Lincoln oats which cost him $2.50 per bushel and the freight. These oats yielded enormously, and weigh 45 lbs to the measured bushel. They are free from rust and blight and are very early. Mr. F. cut his crop in two and one-half months from seeding. Last week Capt. H. W. Donaldson, one of the leading farmers of Kittson county procured 30 bushels from Louis for seed, paying cash one dollar f. o. b. Crookston. Mr. F. has also this year procured a quantity of two-rowed barley paying a long price for it and will try it this spring and if it does well will have some of that for seed. He has just had plans made for a new stock barn on his place and will commence operations upon it right away after seeding. If every merchant of means would take as much interest in the agricultural welfare of the county as does Mr. Fontaine the result would be of immense benefit to the county at large and make many costly experiments that the ordinary farmer is not able to.

If we suppose, (for the sake of argument) that E. C. Carruth had a legal right to a vote in this city does'nt it look a little slaughter, (to say the least) for him to exercise it? After having been in business in Crookston for some time, and after having removed his family there several months since what moral (or legal) right had he to attempt by his vote to dictate to this city what alderman we should have from the third ward? He is a man who has been highly respected heretofore in this city, and was as highly honored as was ever any citizen here and it looks like ingratitude for him to make this kind of a return for the many favors shown him by the honor of the deed. It was decidedly the wrong step for him to take.

Knute Austin had quite an experience with a long-jointed customer from the Thirteen Mile House, one day night, who went into Austin's saloon and called for the drinks for the crowd and afterward refused to pay the bill, amounting to one dollar. After a long wrangle with Knute he did finally produce the dollar and then asked Mr. A. to show him where the Scandinavian hotel was. Mr. A. went with him to the door to show him, when the fellow, pretending to be too drunk to find it, asked Knute to go with him and show him. Knute said he would when he put out the lights, and as he turned to go for that purpose the man, as quick as a flash, struck at him with a knife, cutting his nose so that it bled profusely, then turned and ran toward the Medical Hall, with Knute a close second. At the corner of the New York store the man dropped his knife, which Knute secured. A little further on Knute's prey was encountered, who joined in the pursuit, and the man was soon overtaken and locked up. Next morning Mr. A. declined to prosecute and the man was released.

STATE PRIDE HURT.

THE LOCAL INTERESTS OF PROTECTION SET FORTH.

A Manufacturer Talks to His Congressman. Dealing With Producer and Consumer. The State Value of Local Industries. Benefit to Farmers.

Hon. J. C. Tarsney, Washington:

MY DEAR SIR—It is said that the man that makes two blades of grass grow where one grew before is a public benefactor, and if this be true, as it undoubtedly is, a corporation that has converted a few hundred acres of virtually unproductive farming land into a thriving manufacturing village, giving support and employment to 3,000 people, is certainly a benefactor to the state and county in which such industry is located.

Now, the simple fact is that when Crystal City is located was formerly a sparsely settled farming community, with one country store, the annual sales of which represented an aggregate of not over $3,000 or $4,000, with no market for the farmer's produce other than was to be found in the exchange of that produce for such "store goods" as his family required for the year.

At this same place we now have substantial buildings covering 40 acres of ground and in these buildings furnaces and machinery which have produced a product the sale of which since 1877, when our works were first started, has brought into this state the enormous sum of $10,000,000; or, to be more exact, up to the 30th day of August last the sum of $9,876,970.08, not a dollar of which would have come to this state but for the existence of our works at Crystal City.

It is reasonable to suppose, and I believe it to be a fact, that the larger portion of this additional wealth thus brought into our state has been distributed among the various other mercantile and manufacturing interests, chiefly here in St. Louis, that furnish the personal and household supplies required by our employees, as well as such articles as we ourselves use in the course of our business.

Not only this, the farmers all around our works now have a regular and steady market at St. Louis retail prices for all of the produce they choose to raise—chickens, eggs, butter, potatoes, hay, corn, oats—in fact, everything that a farm produces—while the taxes we have paid in Jefferson county have enabled its officials to reduce the rate of assessment, and at the same time have assisted us in providing such increase in the school fund as has enabled the commissioners to extend the means of education.

Other counties north, south and west of us remain just as they have been for years past, simply because of the absence of just some such industry as we have planted in Jefferson county.

Now as to the consumer of plate glass.

Our records show that we are today getting for our glass just 70 per cent less than we received for it 10 years ago, and this is explained by the introduction of improved methods of manufacture.

All the materials we use are now obtained either in our own state or in this country with the exception of soda ash, which we have to import, and the duty on which, upon the amount we annually use, equals from $11,000 to $12,000.

We do not ask that this duty shall be removed or transferred with our particular, because by reason of this duty some of our countrymen are now establishing here for the manufacture of soda ash in the United States, the successful development and operation of which will ultimately bring about such a production of domestic soda ash as will enable us to get it relatively as much cheaper as this article now is as we are now furnishing plate glass to consumers if the same protective policy is continued with respect to soda ash as has been in force with respect to plate glass. In other words, we wish to see American industries developed to the fullest extent, believing the ultimate result to be a reduction of cost in such case to the consumer.

As a practical illustration of this, in addition to plate glass, you will be interested in knowing that when we first started our works we had to import our foil, for polishing the glass, from England. An order of $1,250 per ton ruled. The protection given this industry in America during the last 10 years has enabled those engaged in it to so develop it that at the present time we buy American made felt of just as good quality as that made in England at about 70 cents a pound, or a reduction of nearly one-half of what we formerly paid.

I assure you in all sincerity that my statement to the committee—namely, that any reduction in the rate of duty on plate glass must inevitably result in a reduction of wages paid our employees—is an absolute fact, as we have come to the end, in the way of reducing cost, in every other direction, and you know what this would mean just as well as I do, not only to us, as manufacturers, but to the country at large and more especially to the laborer by whose action such reduction of wages would be rendered a necessity.

Do not understand me, my dear sir, as my statement, however, as urging you to consider this matter from a partisan standpoint. I simply ask you as a matter of state pride, and more particularly because of the enormous benefits our industry has conferred upon a large number of the people of our state, to do what you can to have the present schedule on plate glass remain just exactly as it is.

If what I have said is true with respect to our own state, my friend from Kansas, your colleague—Mr. Bynum—should join you in seeing that this schedule remains unchanged, inasmuch as four large plate glass factories are located in his state, with benefits accruing thereto, which I assume are no less important to the state of Indiana than they are to the state of Missouri.—Yours, etc.,

E. A. HITCHCOCK,

President Crystal Plate Glass Co.

"Only the Scars Remain."

Says HENRY HUDSON, of the Jones Smith Woolen Machinery Co., Philadelphia, Pa., who certifies as follows:

"Among the many testimonials which I see in regard to certain medicines performing cures, cleansing the blood, etc., none impress me more than my own case. Twenty years ago, at the age of 18 years, I had swellings come on my legs, which broke and became running sores. Our family physician could do me no good, and it was feared that the boy would be affected. At last, my good old to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I took three bottles, the sores healed, and I have not been troubled since. Only the scars remain, and the memory of the past, to remind me of the good Ayer's Sarsaparilla has done me. I now weigh two hundred and twenty pounds, and am in the best of health. I have been on the road for the past twelve years, have noticed Ayer's Sarsaparilla advertised in all parts of the United States, and always take pleasure in telling what good it did for me."

The Hubbard County Enterprise urges its farmer readers to let up on so much wheat raising and if they can't get due, to give more attention to raising other crops, and we think this a pretty good idea for Polk County farmers to adopt. It does not matter so much what the cause of low prices, in fact is that wheat can not be profitably raised at the prices that have prevailed for the last few years and it is a fact that the less of it we raise in the valley in '94 the better chance we will have to get good prices for what we do raise. The crops that promise best are flax, barley and oats in the order named. Potatoes, beyond a certain limit, will not be so profitable. Pork will undoubtedly pay very well for a year or two though that is not selling quite as high this spring as many predicted it would. But almost everything a farmer can produce promises better than wheat and it would be well for the producer if not over one-half crop of that was raised this year all over the world.

Economical Spring Gowns for Ladies.

A somewhat rapid glance over the coming fashions indicates that they are practically the same as last year's. This fact, however, will prove a blessing in disguise, as it will enable many to exercise a well-timed economy and take advantage of this sameness of style for modelling old dresses. Every part of a gown can thus be made over, and especially the overskirt which will be so largely worn. By using an old skirt as an overskirt above a plush skirt of a different material the transformation will be at once both complete and effective. If the lower part of an old dress be ripped or soiled, it may easily be removed as the drapery in some styles is drawn up as far as the knee on the side, and half way between the foot and the knee in front. As a matter of course the draperies are varied in form and sometimes quite complicated. The McDowell Fashion Journals contain all the novelties of the season. Address Messrs. A. McDowell & Co., 4 West 14th Street, New York.

HILL AND THE TARIFF

THE SENIOR SENATOR FROM NEW YORK IS FOR PROTECTION.

He Advocates a Tariff to Cover the Difference Between Foreign and American Wages—He Has "No Sympathy" With Free Trade.

Outside the importing interest the people of New York largely favor a tariff framed expressly for the protection of American industries from the destructive competition of cheap foreign labor, and outside that same interest this has been the dominant sentiment of the state ever since the day of Alexander Hamilton. Every statesman, irrespective of party, who has represented New York in the senate, and (excepting Mr. Cleveland) every New Yorker who has occupied the presidential chair, has given official emphasis to the protective policy.

The bill now presented to the senate offers the New York senators a renewed opportunity to maintain the record of their state. This opportunity receives peculiar significence from the recent decisive expression of popular sentiment on the subject, fortified as it is by the additional evidences of hostility to the pending measure that are being daily given by Democrats and Republicans alike among our vast army of manufacturers, farmers and wage earners. Various industrial interests in New York would be fatally injured by the Wilson schedules of ad valorem duties, while the large extension of the free list which the bill proposes will be equivalent to a prompt transfer of certain important industries from this state to the manufacturing and mining districts of foreign lands.

Referring to the descriptive character of ad valorem rates half a century ago, Henry Clay said, "Let me fix the value of the foreign merchandise, and I do not care what your duty is." The fundamental idea in the system of ad valorem duties on which the Wilson bill is based is distinctly stated in the quotation from the Kentucky statesman. On Oct. 29, 1890, Governor—now Senator—Hill delivered at Wheeling a speech before a large audience of iron manufacturers, mechanics and laborers, discussing the tariff in view of the passage of the McKinley bill, and applying as a Democrat in defense of his party he said:

"Our opponents assert that the policy which we advocate tends to lower the wages of laboring men because they must compete with the underpaid work men of Europe. The proposition is an insolent as it is unfounded. The Democratic platform of 1888, reaffirming the platform of 1884, declared that—

"Our established domestic industries and enterprises should not and need not be endangered by the reduction and correction of the burdens of taxation. On the contrary, a fair and careful revision of our tax laws, with due allowance for the difference between the wages of American and of foreign labor, must promote and encourage every branch of such industries and enterprises by giving them assurance of an extended market and steady and continuous operations.

"This is plain and explicit. It completely refutes the silly charges of our adversaries. It entirely protects the American mechanic and places him upon an equality with all competitors. The plain and simple interpretation of this platform is this: We believe in the recognition of the demands of labor and propose to shield our workmen from such competition as can justly be considered as unfair—for instance, if it costs $3 for labor to produce a certain manufactured article in foreign countries, while it costs $4 to produce the same article in this country, then we favor a tariff of $1 on that article in order to equalize the difference in wages. The imposition of that amount amply protects the American workman and secures to him the place and a standvantage by reason of the competition of the alleged pauper laborer of Europe. This is all that the tariff that any intelligent American workman ever desired or asked for."

Less than two years ago, at a mass meeting held in the Brooklyn academy Sept. 19, 1892, Senator Hill expressed his views "as clear as the noonday sun" and it required no special plank in the platform to emphasize it. We believe in the encouragement of labor and are desirous of protecting its interests in every reasonable way consistent with the rights of the whole people."

At this same mass meeting in Brooklyn Senator Hill was determined that his large audience should have no misunderstanding as to his being a protectionist and not a free trader. The year previous (1891) he had been invited to address a free trade mass meeting in New York city at Cooper Union. Senator Hill declined to do so, and in order to emphasize his position as a protectionist he said at the Brooklyn meeting the reply that he had made to the free traders. That reply was as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, EXECUTIVE CHAMBER, ALBANY, April 1, 1891.

LOUIS F. POST, Esq., President, etc.:

DEAR SIR—I am in receipt of your favor of March 28 inviting me to attend a free trade mass meeting to be held at Cooper Union on Thursday evening, April 2. While thanking you for your courtesy, I cannot attend the meeting because I have no sympathy with its professed purpose. I had supposed that my opinions upon the tariff question had been so frequently expressed in public that nobody could expect me consistently to attend a meeting intended to promulgate the doctrine of free trade.

I am not an advocate of free trade and never have been. I believe that the best interests of our country—industrial, agricultural and commercial—demand the maintenance of that policy declared and particularly defined in the national Democratic platforms of 1888, 1884 and 1868, and I am earnestly opposed to thontempt which is now being made in many quarters to undermine the sound and conservative position of the Democratic party upon this question and to commit it irrevocably to the doctrine of free trade.

The men who are engaged in this effort, no matter how honest or sincere they may be in their individual convictions, have no right to forget or misunderstand the fundamental principle declared and particularly defined in the national Democratic platforms of 1888, 1884 and 1868, and I am earnestly opposed to thontempt which is now being made in many quarters to undermine the sound and conservative position of the Democratic party upon this question and to commit it irrevocably to the doctrine of free trade.

SPAIN'S GREAT FAIR.

MADRID EXPOSITION ILLUSTRATES HER HISTORY AND INSTITUTIONS.

Some of the Attractions to Visitors of One of the Most Ancient and Romantic of European Capitals—The General Scope of the Fair.

Spain seems to be reasserting herself and trying to push forward once more into the front rank of nations. There is no good reason why she might not revive some measure of her ancient glory if only she would permit the spirit of progress that formerly animated her people to reassert itself. That spirit is by no means dead, but merely hampered by the shrulle of an outgrown philosophy, and recent years have brought forth many signe that the bonds were being burst asunder. There bes never been any doubt of Spain's ambition, but her methode were antiquated and slow, and she lost her pre-eminence in the commercial and scientific worlds as one of her own old diligence drivers might in competition with a steam railroad.

No more encouraging sign of her awakening could be given than is seen in the grand international exposition now of progress in Madrid and which is to re main open until Oct. 31, a month more than the half year usually devoted to world's fairs. The building in which it is held is known as the Palace of Arts. Manufactures and Dependencies and is a stately edifice of magnificent proportions, well adapted to the purpose and worthy of a place among the grand architectural piles of the historic city, which its more modern style of construction forms a pleasing contrast.

The exposition of course is not so extensive in its scope as many of the world's fairs of the past decade or two, nor as an exposition does it appeal so powerfully to people of distant countries and different speech. But within its limitations it is abundantly illustrative of the world's progress and certainly sets forth in unprecedented array the history, wealth and material prosperity of the Iberian peninsula and its various dependencies. Upon Spaniards its influence must be broadening and entirely beneficial, and while by visitors from elsewhere it may be considered as merely incidental to a general survey of the scenic, antiquarian and artistic riches of old Spain even for them it must contain epitomes of rare knowledge not otherwise to be obtained.

In accordance with the usual custom in monarchical countries, her majesty the queen regent is the patron of the exposition, and his excellency Fleld Marshal Jovellar has been named first honorary president. The presidents are his excellency Alexandro Pidal, president of the chamber of deputies, Madrid, and his excellency Juan Navarro Reverter, member of the cortes and commissioner of Spain to the Paris Universal exposition of 1889.

These officers are assisted by 48 members and honorary members of committees representing Spain and the rest of Europe. To these have been added the lord mayor of London and the mayors of Edinburgh, Glasgow, Vienna, Rome, Christiania, Turin, Bordeaux, Venice, Geneva, Genoa, Cologne, Dresden, Zurich and Rotterdam. Why New York and Chicago were not included in this list is past finding out. It looks as if our very cordial friends the Princess Eulalie and the Duke of Veragua had already forgotten their vows of undying constancy, for they surely might have had the list amended in one day.

The Madrid exposition is Spain's third large exhibition within a period of seven years. In 1887 the old Peninsular city of Cadiz had one that was honored by the attendance of royalty and representatives of royalty from abroad, including his royal highness the Duke of Edinburgh and his staff. The second exposition was held in Barcelona, one of the most modern spirited, enterprising and progressive cities in Spain and one of her largest manufacturing centers.

Spain has a peculiar attractiveness for Americans, the majority of whom are better acquainted with her romantic history than with that of any other foreign nation except England. Madrid particularly has been the terminating point of many a sentimental journey in the day dreams of American youths who have surrendered themselves to the witchery of Washington Irving's magic pen, and it is likely that a great many of them may now be encouraged to undertake in fact the trip they have so often made in fancy.

The journey is not near so arduous and expensive as it was in Irving's time, and even in those days American visitors always felt themselves amply repaid for the toil and privations of primitive methods of traveling. Nowadays the traveler can go by an express train from Paris to Madrid by way of Irun in 28 hours. If he should happen to be in London, his journey will be only 10 hours longer, for now he is the recognized time between the English and French capitals. It need not be a very costly journey either, as the expenditures can easily be suited to the modest purse by purchasing a second or third class railway ticket. An English traveler of experience once remarked that only lords and fools traveled first class, and shrewd Americans will certainly forego the honor of being classed with either sort of nobility if economy is necessary.

THE GOOD OLD TIMES.

AN HONEST SHIPBUILDER TELLS ABOUT THEM IN OHIO.

Ten Shillings a Day For a Skilled Mechanic—He Got His Pay In Goods at the Store and Not a Cent of Money—The Halcyon Days of Free Trade Recalled.

Last week I had occasion to go over to Long Island on business and tumbled into a regular old free trade nest where three free trade papers are published in a couple of villages of 30,000 inhabitants in the township of Hempstead.

I felt sorry for the farmers there and particularly for the farmers' wives, because those papers never speak the truth and would never tell the women folks how millions of dollars had been saved to the country every year by protection on eggs. People down there have felt the hard times pinch, too, and want all they can get for their farm stuffs without having to sell in New York in competition with potatoes from Bermuda and Europe and cabbages from Dutchland.

An old man, who had an eye as bright as a new dollar and wits as keen as the edge of a razor, said: "There are lots of young fellowe around here who talk of good times and hard times, but they haven't been alive long enough to know anything about it. I let them talk, and I listea, and sometimes I tell them of the good old Democratic times we had nearly 50 years ago."

"How were the times then?" I asked.

"We read a good deal about them, but it is not often that one has a chance to talk with a man who has seen real good old Democratic days."

He looked at me pretty sharply, as if sizing me up, and then began:

"I am an old ship's carpenter and a shipbuilder. That's my trade. I was born right here in Freeport. In 1847 I moved around a good bit and seen something. For quite a number of years I lived in Ohio, and there I had a contract to build a vessel for the lake trade. The country back of Ohio wasn't opened up then as it is now, and the lake trade was not so large, but still there was something doing. Well, I got this contract. The owner supplied all the lumber and stuff himself, and his contract with me was to pay me 10 shillings for each and every day I worked."

The old salt looked around, thought he'd try once more and said: "Ten shillings was pretty good wages. my boys, that long time back, when the country wasn't what it is day, and there we had a Democratic government and plenty of free trade too. Yes, sir, 10 shillings a day was pretty good pay."

He paused, took a sip at the cider and a puff at his pipe. His eyes began to twinkle as he asked, "How often do you think I got poid?"

We waited for him to answer his own question, which he did as follows:

"I'll tell you. My pay was 10 shillings a day, and good pay too. I worked 6o months in and months out on that vessel and put in good work on her, but from the day I began to the day I finished I received never a single shilling," bringing his fist down with a whack on to counter that made the windows rattle.

"Not a d——d shilling did I ever get," he repeated, "not a shilling."

"Didn't he pay you anything at all then for your work?"

"Oh, yes, he paid me. He paid all he owed me. You see he had a store, and every day's pay that I earned I had to take out in goods at his store and at his price. I was loaded up with wheat, hat thank heaven it wasn't as cheap as in these free trade times, or else I'd have had an elevator full. Yes, sir, every shilling I earned I had to take out in trade at the store at top notch prices, and I never once saw a cent."

"I've been through the mill. That's only a part of my experience with the good old free trade times that these young fellowa around here have been hollering for. Give 'em all they want of it," he said, "I've had my share. Let 'em get some sense and carn it as I did."

B. THINKES.

Protection In the Scriptures.

We wonder if free trade congressmen ever attend divine service or if they ever listen to the reading of the Scriptures? It is certain that they do not heed them. Let us refresh the free trade memory by a quotation from Matthew, chapter 17, beginning with the twenty-fourth verse.

And when they were come to Capernaum they that received tribute money came to Peter and said, "Doth not your Master pay tribute?"

He saith, "Yes." And when he was come into the house Jesus prevented him, saying: "What thinkest thou, Simon? Of whom do the kings of the earth take custom or tribute—of their own children or of strangers?"

Peter saith unto him, "Of strangers."

Jesus saith unto him, "Then are the children free."

Thus did Jesus determine in favor of protection. Only by the taking of customs duties or tribute from the strangers were "the children free." The inference is that the direct taxation incidental to free trade or tariff for revenue only" rendered "the children" slaves. It will be the duty of the people to prevent those who favor such a system from coming "into the house" of representatives after the next election. Under protection only "are the children free."

Wilson Bill Gives Hope to Scotland.

The manufacturers of flax and jute goods in Scotland are increasing their issues of work, and in some instances running overtime, so as to be in position to supply the American market. The Forfar Herald says there is a slight rift in the black cloud of trade depression," and also that "these mercies are small, but they are hope inspiring." The manufacturers of jute goods in Brooklyn and at Allentown, Pa., have been able to secure a few small contracts at free trade prices which are expected to rule when the Wilson bill becomes law. Here "the black cloud of trade depression" overhangs us. There is no "rift" in it, and it is not "hope inspiring" for Americans.

A MANY SIDED JURIST.

New Jersey's Chief Justice Is a Man of Varied Accomplishments.

Chief Justice Mercer Beasley of the New Jersey supreme court, whose decision settled the long fight between the Democratic and Republican members of the state senate, is regarded as one of the most accomplished men in the state. He is well posted on art, science and general literature, likes a game of whist and used to be fond of billiards. From boyhood's days he has been an ardent devotee of the dog and gun, and he is well known as an expert marksmen and successful hunter. His latest day's work is wood carving, to which he devotes himself with the ardor of a young artist.

Yet Justice Beasley is 79 years old. He was born in Mercer county in 1815. His father was Rev. Frederick Beasley, for many years president of Kenyon college, of Pennsylvania and at one time rector of St. Michael's church, Trenton. His mother was Maria Williamson, daughter of Mathias Williamson, brother of ex

CHIEF JUSTICE MERCER BEASLEY.

Governor Isaac Williamson. He entered Princeton college when a lad, and after remaining there but a year returned to Trenton to study with his father and then read law under the direction of Samuel H. Southard. He afterward entered the office of ex-Chancellor Isaac D. Williamson of Elizabeth.

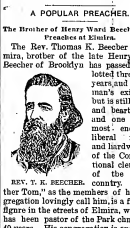
In 1839 he was admitted to practice in the September term of court. He became a counselor in 1842. He was appointed chief justice by Governor Parker in 1894. He has always been considered one of the ablest lawyers in the state, and his fame as chief justice is recognized abroad as well as at home. His decisions are constantly quoted, and it is conceded that few, if any, of the eminent American jurists possess a more accurate or extensive knowledge of law.

In his younger days Justice Beasley was city solicitor of Trenton, for which he received the munificent sum of $15 a year. In 1851 he was the Whig candidate for mayor of Trenton, but he was defeated by William Norton. In 1856 he served as president of the Trenton common council. His circuit as chief justice comprises Monmouth and Middlesex counties.

A POPULAR PREACHER.

The Brother of Henry Ward Beecher Still Preaches at Elmira.

The Rev. Thomas K. Beecher of Elmira, brother of the late Henry Ward Beecher of Brooklyn has passed the allotted three score years and ten of man's existence. He is still hale and hearty mind and one of the most conservative, liberal minded and hardworking of the Congregational clergymen of the whole country.



REV. T. K. BEECHER.

ther Tom," as the members of his congregation lovingly call him, is a familiar figure in the streets of Elmira where he has been pastor of the Park church for 40 years. His congregation is one of the largest and most prosperous in the state, and he has done a great deal of useful work since he has been connected with it, both in the pulpit and in the various fields of humane and charitable enterprise with which he is connected.

Like most of the Beechers, he is full of eccentricities, but his pleasant, good hearted manner makes them lovable, and his people like to talk of them as if they enhanced his value. He is somewhat of an expert in the mechanical arts, and callers often find him, with overalls on, doing some job of household plumbing or paper hanging as if his livelihood depended nopon it. He worked in an optical instrument factory in Connecticut when he was young and never to have lost his taste for tools. He has a fondness, too, for athletic diversions and rides a bicycle, rolls tenpins and plays a good game of billiards, often taking a hand with the boys when they are having a good time.

In personal appearance Mr. Beecher is tall and broad shouldered. A plentiful brown beard, well tinged with white, full, genial brown eyes, with a direct, kindly look, and hair worn long and brushed back from a broad, intellectual forehead form a personality to which a stranger would give more than a passing glance. He has never taken enough time from his pastoral duties to do much literary work, but he has written a book—"Our Seven Churches"—and contributes occasionally to the local press. Mrs. Beecher, who takes a deep interest in his church work and all else that concerns her husband, is a granddaughter of Noah Webster, the great lexicographer.

Military Tactics.

A Confederate guard in South Carolina during the war was questioned as to his knowledge of his duties.

"You know your duty here, do you, sentinel?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, now, suppose they should open on you with shells and maskecry, what would you do?"

"Form a line, sir."

"What! One man form a line?"

"Yes, sir. Form a bee line for camp, sir!"—Texas Siftings.

CAN'T LIVE WITHOUT DOGS.

Eskimos Find the Faithful Animal a Necessity of Their Miserable Existence.

"Without dogs the larger portion of the great Eskimo family peopling the barren northern coast of America would find it impossible to exist in its chosen home." So writes E. W. Nelson in his "Mammals of Northern Alaska." They are used in the winter for hunting, sledge drawing and the like, but in summer are mostly left to shift for themselves. They receive much hard usage, as well as do much hard work, but are described nevertheless as a rollicking set, full of play, fond of human society and quarrelsome as schoolboys.

Mr. Nelson credits them with a vein of humor and declares that their varying characteristics can be read in their faces. They are worth from $2 to $15 apiece, according to age, size and intelligence. For sledge drawing they are harnessed in teams of either seven or nine—three abreast and a leader. The load is from 350 to 700 pounds, and the coursels mainly through unbroken snow or over rough ice. With a team of seven dogs and a load of more than 300 pounds Mr. Nelson made a journey of more than 1,200 miles in about two months. The last 60 miles were made over a bad road in a continuous pull of 21 hours. They are rarely affected by the moon. During full moon half the night is spent by them in howling in chorus.

"During the entire winter at St. Michael's," says Mr. Nelson, "we were invariably given a chorus every moonlight night, and the dogs of two neighboring villages joined in the serenade." He speaks of its "wild, weird harmony" and seeme to have found it agreeable rather than otherwise. The influence of the moon is also very apparent when the dogs are traveling. They hrighten up as the moon rises, and pricking up their ears start off as if they had forgotten their fatigue. The fur tradera take advantage of this fact and sometimes lie over during the day and travel at night. The dogs endure an astonishing degree of cold. Mr. Nelson saw a female with two newly born puppies lying upon the snow near a hut, with no sign of shelter, when the thermometer ranged from 30 to 35 degrees below zero.

Indian Coroners.

American women who long for coroners should hesitate before accepting Indian ones. The case of an Indian woman who sued for divorce from her Hindoo husband points a moral. She alleged cruelty as a ground for the suit, and it is claimed that the same plea might be made by nearly all the women who marry or wrestle and go to live with them.

As a usual thing, the oriental gentleman pursuing his studies at an English or American university is a picturesque figure. He is likely to be very clever, and it is also very probable that he is a prince at least, when he is at home. He is popular with his fellows, and through some of them he meets and marries a pretty, freely brought up girl. Then he takes her home.

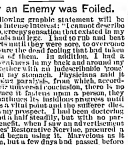
She may not meet with unkindness from her husband's family, for the orientals have many amiable and attractive qualities and they are not cruel. But if the husband has not cut himself adrift from the ancient ties of his childhood his wife must conform to a certain extent to the ordinary life of the native women. And, much as she will love only do this so far as her love and duty to her husband oblige her, she will certainly fail to satisfy her own relatives and will be looked on with coldness and suspicion by them.—New York World.

Used Visiting Cards First.

The Chinese are said to be the originators of visiting cards. So long ago as the period of the Tang dynasty (619-907) visiting cards were known to have been in use in China. From ancient times down the present day the Chinese have observed the strictest ceremony with regard to the exchange of cards, the manner which they use for this purpose are large and of a bright red color.—Chicago Record.

Hospitable Monasteries.

In Mongolia, Asia, there are no hotels. Monasteries, however, are numerous, and they always accommodate travelers.



A STRANGE CASE.

How an Enemy was Foiled.

The following remarkable statement will be read with intense interest: "I cannot describe my health, except to say that I was afflicted in my joints, hands and legs. I had no rest and least movement of my body caused me excruciating pain. The doctors said I had rheumatism in all forms. In addition, I had a complication of kidney and bladder troubles, together with an indescribable 'tone' of the stomach. Physicians said it was dyspepsia. Some, whose knowledge was more comprehensive, called it nervous prostration. I was treated by the best physicians, but got no relief. Finally, I concluded to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. Before I had taken half a box I felt that I was on the road to recovery. I have taken in all six boxes, and can say that I am entirely cured. I was never so well as I am now, and have gained ten pounds in weight, though I had run down from 170 to 132. Four others have used Dodd's Kidney Pills from my recommendation, and they, too, are cured. Dodd's Kidney Pills are the best on the market."—Jonas King, La Grippe, Ind.

CHAPTER XIII.

CRAZED.

I sat on the edge of the sill and slid down, expecting to land safely on the spot which I had poled and probed with the butt end of my rod, but it proved to be a false bottom or not the bottom it all. Whatever was the obstruction at this point, it gave way before my descending weight. It was, in fact, an accumulation of drift-wood and other certain rotten branches that had stuck here in the entrance, lying transversely along the incline. I broke through all this with a loud crackling of broken timber and continued to slide or indeed rush down a still steeper incline descending into the darkness, and when I believed that I was being precipitated into eternity I fell into a soft mass of what seemed dry seaweed without sustaining any injury. "Pacific descent!" I cried as I landed on this soft bed, all my alarm yielding suddenly to a sense of the ridiculous. Seeing the window of such a moderate distance above my head, I had not the least doubt that even the slope should prove too sheer I could easily swarm or clamber up at any point where this slope met the walls of the cave. The moment I found myself I was bent all on exploration. I struck a match and by its transient and faint light attempted to inspect the dubious smuggler's storehouse. I continued to fight one match after another. Eventually gathering all the remainder in a little bundle, I ignited them in order at by their united blaze I might see much as was possible under the circumstances. When they had burned out and I had thrown away the stumps, I did seem almost nothing. I betheught me of the return journey and that it would be better to make haste, for it would be ill work groping my way home in the dark along the face of that sheer cliff. I tried to swarm up the incline, but failed. I thought of a cockroach in a glass trap and laughed. I had often watched with some faint glimmerings of pity and compunction the futile efforts of these black gentry to climb the smooth sides of their prison. My own futile efforts to climb the slope suggested a ludicrous resemblance to the frustrated energies of those insects. Again and again I addressed myself to different parts of the smooth slope, but nowhere could secure a purchase for hands or knees. "At revocare gradum superasque evadere ad aeras. Hic labor, hoc opus," I murmured. I was not yet alarmed; yet, as if far down in the depths of my nature, I was conscious of a dim formless emotion which I never experienced before.

Still certain that I would in some way escape, I sought the point where the incline left the west wall of the cave, sure that I could get up in the angle so formed by the support of the craggy sides there. I tried first on the left. Here, however, the incline seemed to break off sharp. I found this out of course by my sense of feel. Then, creeping over huge smooth bowlders and the aforesaid heaps of seaweed, I reached the north wall and found it ragged indeed and shutting on the incline, but at this point the incline was almost sheer. In short, I could not ascend. The faroff emotion, scarcely recognizing when I quoted those half-conveyed lines from Virgil, was now fast getting the upper hand in my mind. Nevertheless I made frantic efforts to ascend, but all in vain. Again I thought of the cockroach in the glass trap—the ludicrous resemblance did not avail standing on the smooth walls of their prison. But I did not laugh this time. I was, too, like them. Yet I did not in the least despair of getting out—if not tonight, which was improbable, then tomorrow. I knew that there were many devices to be tried yet. For one thing I thanked God sincerely—the place where I fell was carpeted thick with seaweed. On each side there was none. Whatever the gales or the crests of great waves in winter had thrown in had been washed down through the interstices of the great bowlders and probably escaped at some lower point in the cliff's sides. I sat down on this providential seaweed to collect my thoughts. I filled my pipe and then searched all my pockets, hoping somewhere to discover a match, for I used to keep those matches indifferently in all my pockets and often had found one hidden somewhere in the lining. My search was bootless. I had not a match left.

It was growing dark rapidly. I had no time to waste, for only were to effect my escape from this infernal cave I would require daylight for the return journey along that dangerous cliff road. I proceeded at once to gather together all the seaweed that I could lay my hands on and piled it up in a heap against the incline. As the heap rose my heart rose with it. There seemed an abundance of seaweed. I could feel it thick under my feet. Its crackling sounded pleasant, for it was very dry. Still I had to go farther and farther into the cave for each armful, or barth, to use a local word, for I did not like entering where, but, as if were, in a line running inward from the middle of the incline. Here, then, lay a road of sorts, a level foot wide, but on either hand only bare stones. It was now getting so dark that I at last determined to give over this labor, for it would be sheer madness to attempt the return journey in the dark. A sinister suspicion, too, was growing in my mind that the supply of seaweed was giving out. My last armful represented a good deal of groping. The seaweed only seemed to be really abundant close under the window. I did not wish to make my suspicion a certainty by putting the facts to too close a test. The thought of the easiest and status of my parents and family, as may be imagined, contributed a good deal to my unhappiness. When I ceased working, I began to grow cold, and soon very cold. The seaweed was quite dry and crisp. I piled a great deal of this over me under my bed clothes, and, thanks to youth and health, ere long fell sound asleep in spite of my troubles. When I awoke, it was broad daylight, and the level rays of the sun streamed far into the interior of the cave, which seemed of vast extent. Indeed I guessed as much on the previous night as I listened to the reverberations of my voice in its abysmal bollows. Starting up, I at once renewed my task of collecting seaweed with the object of ascending the incline by its aid.

CHAPTER XIV.

NOT TO GET OUT.

Presently I found that I had already collected more than the seaweed that was procurable at this end of the cave. But after my first easse of disappointment I did not so much mind this, for I expected to meet with plenty of stones such as one usually or often finds in the interior of such caves. All such bowlders, however, as I could see seemed quite too large to lift. I did not doubt, though, that I could somewhere find removable pebbles in sufficient quantity to build up for myself a sort of scaling ladder against the mouth of my prison. Yet I went to the extreme limit of the daylight without finding any and afterward penetrating the sheer darkness groped about in all directions without success. Everywhere I scrambled only over large bowlders. Still groping forward in the darkness, nigged now by the fiery edge of despair, I found myself suddenly cut off altogether from even a view of the window. I had gone round some angle of rock and was immersed in dense darkness. I gave myself up for lost, and having searched around in vain without perceiving anywhere a ray of light sat down and—well, not to be too prosaic, wept long and bitterly. Then, praying fervently and thinking with such feelings as may be imagined of the opening line of that little familiar collect, "Lighten our darkness, we beseech thee, O Lord!" which I had so often repeated with little or no thought of its meaning and which was now naturally brought to my remembrance, I scrambled again for the light, clambering wearily over the bowlders, and at length to my extreme joy perceived a faint ray of light. Moving toward it, I suddenly caught sight of Curry's Window, and however I might have been inclined to mock at this matter anywhere else, sincerely blessed it and the lovel rays which shot through it into the inner deal of water this day. When I had joyfully light, offspring of heaven's first born!"

I may mention here that I was very fond of poetry, and had formerly a great deal of it in my memory, so that I could repeat a vast number of the English lyrics and even long poems such as Spenser, Shakespeare and Milton. This intellectual provision or accomplishment, or whatever it may be called, proved a great blessing to us in my misfortunes, companionship and was probably the means, under God, of preserving my reason. With the rediscovery of heaven a blessed light, peace and calm and also hunger. Now for the first time I thought of food, for though high famished I had not been quite conscious of it hitherto, owing to the feverish excitement into which I had been thrown. I had with me somewhere I heard, though far away, the splash of descending water. I ate my bread, and going to the spot where I had felt moving water on the previous night made a cup with my hand, and pressing the inside edge of it against the rock, and doing this again and again, got a good drink of very pure spring water.

I now resolved to search the cave more carefully than I had done before for pebbles such as I could remove, and to be particularly cautious about losing sight of the window. I searched around now for hours, but in vain. Hardly a stone of the kind could I discover. I returned to my bed of seaweed and lay down to rest. I was now painfully conscious of a great weariness of body. My excitement was wearing away and the lack of food beginning to tell. It was now about midday. From time to time I shouted as loudly as I could, but only heard for response the mocking echoes and reverberations of my own voice. Knowing that boats were not likely to be passing in the middle of the day, I determined to husband my energies in this direction until the evening. It was now certain that I could not climb out of my prison or within the limits and vicinity of the great rock seaweed or stones in sufficient quantity to make for myself a scaling ladder. My last hope lay in my rod and line. I piled up all the seaweed procurable, took off my clothes and laid them on the top of the heap, and thrusting upward the butt-end of the rod engineered by means of the crook supplied by the reel to secure a purchase upon the sill of the window and so drag myself bodily out of this pit. If the rod and reel had only been strong enough, I might have succeeded. I was conscious that it was a forlorn hope, but nevertheless made the attempt. I did succeed in getting a grip somewhere at the sill with the rod, but as soon as I began to climb the top joint of the rod gave way. I tumbled down, rolled from the seaweed heap on the bowlders and was much bruised and shaken by the fall. With the destruction of the rod which remained in my hands I succeeded in disengaging the reel, which fell back into the cave. It next unrolled the line, doubled it, doubled it again and made a pretty strong rope, which I fastened to the thicker part of the rod and renewed my attempt, this time flinging up the rod and letting it slide back from the sill, hoping that the reel, which was a large one, might catch. The rod end twisted line were indeed strong enough to bear my weight, but I had great difficulty on this occasion in securing a purchase with the reel, and when I did the momentum

At the Post meeting on Friday evening last Comrade J. O. Sargent gave a graphic description of his trip to California, which was listened to with interest by a goodly number of the old boys. He saw a number of Grand Army men in his travels and learned that the work deepens in interest as the years go by. The California boys favor St. Paul for the national encampment of '95. The Grand Army Post at its last meeting had under consideration the subject of preparation for memorial day. All over the United States, in the larger cities the citizens are getting into the habit of attending to this matter themselves, considering the Grand Army men more as honorary guests than as being the ones to bear the burden and brunt of the business. While this is a sacred duty of every true American citizen, and the post here has always been first and foremost in its observance it is becoming the habit in other places to start the movement, bear all the expenses and invite the old boys to participate, and they always respond with alacrity. Will this habit ever obtain in Crookston?

The debating club that has held weekly sessions in the schoolhouse in Pete Cornelius' neighborhood, still keeps up its regular weekly comedies, and lots of fun results. These entertainments are extremely interesting.

The confidence that people have in Ayer's Sarsaparilla as a blood medicine is the legitimate and natural growth of many years. It has been handed down from parent to child, and is the time-tried family medicine in thousands of households.

Talk about your fine teams! That was a dandy pair of four-year-olds in the city on Tuesday. One weighs 1,500 and the other 1,600 pounds, and they are neat and no mistake. It does one good to see such a team.

There were 962 votes counted and quite a number cast that for some defect or other could not be counted, enough to make the total number cast over 1000, while some voters' names were in the poll list failed for some reason or other to cast a vote.

"Six days shalt thou labor," says the great lawgiver. To do good work man must be at his best. This condition is attained by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It overcomes that tired feeling, quickens the appetite, improves digestion, and makes the weak strong.

Eli Steenerson: "The Continental is the only company to come to the front promptly. Our customers have settled with the victims of the Central house fire; A. R. Holston gets $725, and the damaged furniture and A. J. Johnson gets $125 and what is left of his goods."

Gen. Beauregard, or a tramp who called himself a relation of that noted confederate general, was brought before Esq. Gossman on Monday on a charge of vagrancy. He admitted the soft impeachment and the judge gently and pathetically remarked to him—with the deference due so illustrious a character. "One simoleon and costs, Gen., which sentence I will suspend long enough for you to shake the dust of the city off your feet." The general departed from the city.

The JOURNAL in no uncertain terms last week was made to say that S. L. Collins had purchased of the Andover House Co. the Clyde horse, "King Tom." Well, that would have been all right if that company had ever owned "King Tom," but it happens that it was another king that they owned, even "King David" and the JOURNAL takes great pleasure this week in restoring to Collins his own horse and returning "King Tom" to his owner, Joseph Laframboise with ample apologies.

John Ryding, a prominent merchant of Fertile, who recently disposed of his interest in the firm to his partner Mr. Knutson, was in the city on Monday. Mr. Ryding is making preparations for a trip to Norway; expects to start about May 1st, and be gone a year. Mr. R. came to Polk county 13 years ago this spring and located at Ada, later on going into business at Fertile where he has been very successful. He is a man who has a strong and abiding faith in his adopted country and will return to it after a good visit to the old home.

Will Himmelsbach informs the JOURNAL that he is getting many letters from farmers inquiring if he has any flax seed for sale. The JOURNAL stated a few weeks ago that the Himmelsbach Bro's. raised some flax last year, but sold it too soon to get the best results from it. They haven't got as much as they would like to now themselves and will informs the JOURNAL that they kept their crop they could have sold every bushel of it this spring for seed at $1.60 per bushel. The JOURNAL has endeavored to find some flax-seed for some of its patrons and can learn of none short of Minneapolis or St. Paul and from what we learn of that, a man would run some risk of getting Russian thistle seed also. It would seem as though farmers who desire flax will be obliged to wait till fall when they can no doubt procure seed for the next year—and run no risk of seeding down their farms to Russian thistles.

A petition signed by residents of Jensen's Addition was read requesting the opening and grading of State street. Same was referred to 4th ward aldermen, with instruction to have city engineer furnish an estimate of the probable cost of the work.

A petition signed by residents of the 5th ward was read requesting the construction of cross-walks in said ward. Same was referred to aldermen of said ward to report at the next regular meeting.

Bonds of O. O. Christianson as treasurer, William Bloom as constable, A. A. Glenn as constable, were read and approved.

The application of S. Marin to sell intoxicating liquors for one year, was read and the city clerk was instructed to have same published according to law.

On motion Mayor Cromb was appointed purchasing agent for the ensuing year at a yearly salary of $1200.

The report of Justices Spendley and Goessman were accepted and ordered placed on file.

On motion the city attorney was instructed to look up the matter of part of report as justice of the peace of C. O. Christianson while in office yet remaining unsettled.

City attorney made a verbal report on having examined the matter of the 40 feet of ground in blocks 1 and 2 original townsite of Crookston with a view of vacating the same, and informed the city council that the city had the fee in these lots.

Bill of Dr. Holte for $9.00 for attending Knut Grindy for typhoid fever was rejected, as the same had not been ordered by the city.

The following resolution was unanimously passed by the council:

At an adjourned meeting of the city council of the city of Crookston held April 17th, 1894, it was moved by Alderman Watts and seconded by Alderman Kirsch, Resolved, that the sum of nine hundred dollars ($900.00) of the moneys in the Park fund, and four hundred dollars ($400.00) of the moneys in the sinking fund be transferred to the general fund of the city of Crookston.

It was moved by Alderman Watts, seconded by Alderman Kirsch, that the balance of the money due for the construction of the sewers on 4th and Second streets be paid. Motion carried.

It was moved and seconded that Duncna Crawford and Minnie Johnson, as recommended by the poor committee be placed in the county hospital. Motion carried.

Messrs. Jennings, Kirsch and Hall, were appointed as a committee to look into the matter of repairing the roof of the city Hall.

It was moved and seconded that G. S. Chesterman, undertaker, be allowed an additional amount of $11.75 on his former bill. Motion carried.

The committee on poor was instructed to furnish transportation to J. Fisher, and draw on the authorities where he belongs for same, if in their judgment they saw fit to do so.

Moved and seconded that all dead animals in the city be buried under the supervision of the street commissioner. Motion carried.

On motion the purchasing agent was instructed to buy a reasonable amount of planks for the repairing of sidewalks; and that he be authorized to purchase axes for the police force, and also purchase two pair of rubber boots for the use of the street commissioner.

On motion council adjourned.

WM. A. LANCROT, Clerk.

Home Talent.

Every entertainment gotten up in this city convinces us more emphatically that Crookston possesses more and better "home talent" than the average city of her size.

The entertainment given in the Baptist church last Thursday evening for the benefit of the W. C. T. U. was so much appreciated that by repetition was asked for, and it was again given on Monday evening to a delighted audience, and it was pronounch by many that it was the best entertainment ever given in this city by home talent.

The following program was rendered:

Piano solo by Miss Clara Reynolds.

A doanle quartet—"Bridal Chorus" Mesdames Adams, Van Arnum, Slocum, Miss Hancock and Messrs Mayne, Wheeler, Bugg and Sisson.

Solo—"Ecstacy of Love"—Miss Tillie Fortier.

Reading—"The Leper," John Crawford.

Quartet—"Helen and Flora" Mesdames Adams, Van Arnum, Slocum, Messrs Mayne and Sisson.

Solo, by Prof. Mayne.

Quartet—"Legends" Mesdames Adams, Van Arnum, Slocum and Miss Hancock.

Solo—"What a Little Bird Said"—Miss Dollie Bunnell.

Duet—"Go Where the Mists are Sleeping"—Mesdames Van Arnum and Adams.

Reading—"Mary Elizabeth"—Miss Ida Hancock.

Quartet—"Good Night" Mesdames Adams and Slocum, Messrs. Mayne and Sisson.

Anniversary Exercises.

The Oddfell ws lodge No. 70, will have an anniversary celebration on April 26th, at their hall in the McKinnon block. Delegations will be present from McIntosh, Ada, Red Lake Falls and Fisher. If the weather is propitious, there will be a street parade in the afternoon. In the evening, the exercises at the hall will consist of addresses by members of the lodge, banqueting and dancing. Each member of the lodge can invite his friends.

A Runaway.

A genuine thunderstorm Wednesday evening gave token that summer is near at hand.

Strikes seem to be the order of the day these times—even the weather seems on a strike for something or other—hard to say just what.

AN EXPLANATION.

Halvor Steenerson Says he is not Seeking a Congressional Nomination.

CROOKSTON, April 10, 1894.

EDITOR JOURNAL:—I have been credibly informed that a democratic orator, on Saturday evening before election, publicly stated that a vote for the republican nominee for congress must Hugh Thompson for congress, and was against the interest of my political aspirations, and that this was the reason why I did not speak at the republican mass meeting then being held at the opera house, or words to this effect. Coming as this did from a person who might be assumed to be speaking by authority, I deem it necessary to publicly refute this charge. The reason I did not speak at the opera house that evening was that I had been all that week engaged in court at Hallock, where I tried one side of every jury case tried, and on Saturday had been compelled to rush through an important damage suit against the railroad company in double quick time in order to finish in time for south bound train. In the morning we did not expect to finish, and I neglected M. R. Brown, for which my regrets and liability to speak or be present at the opera house meeting. That, I supposed, settled it, but I was not expected there. Coming down, train stopped but a few minutes at Stephen where we tried to get a lunch, but it was unsatisfactory. I had been in court from 8:30 in the morning with one hour's intermission for dinner, till five in the evening; had no supper and no shave; was tired out and unable to speak properly, and did not know till the committee met me at the station after nine o'clock, that anybody expected me to speak. I knew I could only trie out an audience by a personal explanation, and for this reason, and this only, did I make the request to forego my supper and harrangue the meeting. For confirmation of above situation I refer to Hon. Frank Ives, Judge, A. C. Wilkinson, attorney, and B. A. Strawbridge, court stenographer, who were with me on the trip to Hallock and return. And now as to my alleged political aspirations. Without hypocricy, I can truly say that these are the reverse of strong; that are weak, so weak that I would not lose the esteem of the most indifferent friend, neglect the cause of my political client, nor look for the most spiteful adversary for the sake of gratifying them. It is, however, true that many seem to have the power in the councils of the republican party of Minnesota, have for a long time repeatedly urged me to declare my willingness to accept the republican nomination for congress in this district this year. I have invariably answered that I would not do this, and gave as a reason, first, that my business is of greater importance, pecuniarily, and that I could hardly afford the honor. Secondly, that the republican organization is in my own county was so constituted that I could not get the support of my own county delegation, and, thirdly, that if this delegation could be secured, it would be at the cost of a bitter personal struggle, unseemly and improper for so dignified and honorable a position. At such cost a nomination would be extremely undesirable. I still adhere to these reasons.

So far as Mr. Hugh Thompson and Mr. John Cromb are concerned they are both good and honorable men—my personal friends, neighbors and fellow citizens. Should the republican convention of this county select delegates favorable to the candidacy of either, or to a delegation composed of citizen and republicans, I would most heartily concur in the choice and cheerfully work for its ratification by the big congressional convention of this district; nay, more, I would cheerfully support their election in the ensuing campaign on the stump, so far as my professional duties would permit. The important thing is republican success, not the ambition of individuals; to drive hard times, starvation and bad government off from the face of this fair land back to the infernal regions of slavery, anarchism, envy and corruption from whence they came, and to restore the government back to the party of glory, of honor, of freedom and prosperity.

In whatever position I can most effectively strive for this result, I will willingly work. Personally, it would be both preferable and profitable for me to work in the ranks rather than at the standards, but it would to my mind be little less than a public calamity should we not again have a republican landslide all over the land.

Yours for good times,
HALVOR STEENERSON.

The Strike.

The Great Northern strike, that appeared last week like a cloud upon the horizon about the size of a man's hand, has assumed the proportions of a dark cloud overspreading the entire continent anil the entire system from Crookston to the coast is entirely tied up—not a wheel turning. It would seem that the wages of the employes have been cut to that extent that there is not a living in it for some and hence the strike. A reduction was made last fall and the men endured that and in February, while Mr. Hill was in Europe another cut was ordered. This produced much grumbling but the men, hoping that the deal would be changed when Mr. Hill returned, endured it as best they could. When he did return and no action was taken the revolt came and quietly the great strike was organized and is now in full bloom. How it will end it is difficult to say, but it is freely predicted that the men will win sooner or later. In any event it can but be a hardship upon the men, who are dependent upon the little they had been getting for a livelihood. It is also disastrous to the business interests of the country dependant upon the road for shipping facilities, and it is the earnest wish of all concerned that it may soon be satisfactorily adjusted.

Rev. Battey's Lectures.

The course of temperance lectures which Rev. R. H. Battey is delivering in the city this week are well worth listening to. They are being given in the Methodist church, and there will be one to-night and one to-morrow night.

The first one was given on Tuesday evening. His subject was: "When Pegs the Liquor Bills," and he produced an array of figures to show the consumption of liquor in the United States during the past few years. His lectures are especially adapted to that class of people who are neither drinkers nor temperance workers, and we are inclined to say; "well, the saloons don't bother me; they don't get any of my money." Mr. Battey seeks to show these people that liquor drinking does cost them something—in fact a good deal—in the way of taxes. In support of his argument he claimed that liquor drinking has made an additional expense to the country of over $3,000,000,000 last year, and he gave each item of expense separately an apparently reasonable estimate.

The moral side of the temperance question has been talked on so long that it has become a hackneyed subject, and it seems useless to appeal to the sentiment of the people. Mr. Battey presents the financial side of the question and appeals to the pocket-books of the people.

There will be a children's rally in the Methodist church this afternoon at 4:15 and also to-morrow evening at the same time.

A Lively Fire.

At about 4:50 on Sunday afternoon the fire bell rang out its notes of warning and in a few seconds less than no time the department answered the summons and were at the corner of Fletcher and Main, where a lively blaze was getting in its work in the tin-shop of A. O. Bnaterud, over the hardware store of Alderman, Sylvester & Elsett. The flames had gained good headway and seemed to have gotten full possession of the southeast corner of the upper floor and entire through the store below when the first stream was turned into the tinshop. The firemen had hardly got down to business when a tremendous explosion was heard and the tin roof was rent from one end of the building to the other and from side to side, caused by the hot air being pent up beneath the tin roof. Shortly thereafter a portion of the brick veneering broke loose belonging to the second story carrying a portion of that along to the sidewalk. Andrew Elken, who stood beneath in the doorway received various and many thumps and bruises, but fortunately missed the bulk of the debris. Alderman Morrisey also had a very narrow escape. A dog belonging to G. L. Young was less fortunate and had a hind leg broken. It only took a very short time after the firemen reached the seat of the disease before the danger was over and the fire was all out at 6 o'clock. A defective chimney is thought to be the cause. The loss will be fully covered by insurance, except in the case of Busterud, who had no insurance. The hardware firm had $4,000 on stock and $1,000 on building, in companies represented by Christianson Bros. As soon as adjustments are made the building will be repaired and business again resumed.

Flax Seed.

Never before has the demand for flax seed been so great as this spring and never has the supply seemed to be so limited. A JOURNAL representative visited St. Paul and Minneapolis to look this matter up and was shown many samples, some of which were so full of foul seed as to be wholly undesirable. The chief danger of that seed, however is in the fact that much of the flax was grown in South Dakota and very liable to contain Russian thistle seed and this country can get along without the introduction of that pest. We have, however found a party in Moorhead who says he can supply a carload of northern grown flax seed on track in Crookston at $1.75 per bushel cash on delivery. The JOURNAL will willingly undertake to ascertain whether enough orders can be taken to secure a carload and will then turn them over to some farmer or business man, whoever the parties interested may choose who can arrange for the balance of the deal. If all who want flax, and are prepared to pay cash for it on delivery, will drop a card to the JOURNAL stating the amount required we will fix said orders until enough for a carload have been received and then give notice through these columns when the interested parties can arrange for the balance of the business as they see fit. No use to write unless you have the cash ready for the seed as it is strictly a cash deal. The seed in Fargo retails at $1.50 per bushel in small lots. While the price is high the quantity required to sow an acre makes the cost of seed but a trifle more than is required to sow an acre of wheat and the prospects for the price of wheat, and flax is no more subject to the manipulations of the gambler than oats or barley.

The Great Kyed Monster.

Our little friend, Holtson, is having spasms just now because he fears that Hagh Thompson will try for and obtain the nomination for congress. He got into a terrible ake last week to the effect that Hugh had corralled Ole Bang's influence through the appointment of his brother on the force. That's pretty good for a guess but shows how much Holston has yet to learn about politics. The real fact is that Holston is afraid of Thompson, knowing him to be a good fighter and better qualified for the position than Holston, and it is only the green-eyed monster, jealousy that is hitting Holston. He could pick out candidates for us to nominate that he imagines he could beat easier than he could Mr. Thompson. But Holston need not lose any sleep. Mr. Thompson is not a candidate for the honor.

Farmers.

Why not have your business in ship-shape? The JOURNAL has a form of contract for hiring men, that we can supply cheaply, and when you have these contracts both you and your hired men know what to depend upon. Call at JOURNAL office and see samples.

Otto Kunkel was up from Fertile last Thursday. In conversation with a JOURNAL reporter he told of a pretty good joke on himself. Not long ago a lumber company in Fertile wanted to trade him some flax seed for some feed. He thought he had no use for flax seed in particular but wishing to be accommodating he traded for the flax seed and then ground it up for feed. When we told him that flax seed would readily command $1.00 per bushel the eyes stuck out so you could hang a hat on them and he looked wild.

Speaking of the prospects for extending the Fosston branch of the Great Northern to Duluth this year the Duluth Evening Herald says: "President James J. Hill's interviews might be interpreted to mean that the Duluth-Fosston line will not be built this year, but he did not mean that. He has a habit of dodging a direct question, and there is good reason to believe that the line will be built this year."

The Salvation Army will hold their first anniversary on Sunday next. On Monday night there will be a supper from 6 o'clock. Tickets 25 cents. All are welcome.

STRIKE SPREADING.

GREAT NORTHERN TIED UP FROM ST. CLOUD TO THE COAST.

Traffic Entirely Suspended, Hardly a Wheel Turning or an Instrument Ticking on Two Thousand Miles of Lines. The Cascade Division Involved—Strike Complete on West End, All Branches of Service Participating.

SEATTLE, Wash., April 15.—The Great Northern railroad strike was extended over the Cascade division and the coast lines and the whole system is tied up from Grand Forks to Seattle and Seattle to New Westminster. Hardly a wheel is turning or a telegraph wire ticking over 2,000 miles of line. The strike was ordered with such secrecy and suddenness that an hour before it was to begin the officials had not a suspicion that it was to happen. The order was received in this city about 7 p. m., but no information of it was allowed to get beyond the men interested. When the time came to make up the eastbound passenger train, the was set in front and not coupled to the rest of the train. When orders were given for the train to go out, the engineer refused to take out more than the mail car. Superintendent Copeland said the train or nothing would go out, and after waiting for nearly an hour to give him an opportunity to reconsider the crew went home and the officials followed suit. The strike is complete on the west end and all branches of the service are participating. The Canadian Pacific officials, anticipating an extension of the strike, have made arrangements with the receivers of the Lake Shore for through cars, both passenger and freight, to run over the Lake Shore to and from this city.

OUT AT ST. CLOUD.

Four Hundred Employes of the Road Quit Work.

ST. CLOUD, Minn., April 16.—A strike has been declared on the Great Northern and all members of the American Railway union went out at midnight. A meeting of 400 employes of all kinds was held. Stirring speeches were made and sympathy is a unit. A message from James J. Hill was read, which capped the climax, as follows:

"The company hopes that upon a little reflection the men would return to work and thus save the company the necessity of hiring other men."

All men in the union went out, including shopmen, conductors, brakemen, yardmen, etc. The strike went into effect at Barnesville at 1 p. m. The men here feel confident of winning. Order will be maintained. Twelve policemen have been appointed from the strikers to preserve the company's property.

HASTY AND UNNECESSARY.

President Hill Sc Characterizes the Action of Strikers—The Other Side.

ST. PAUL, April 16.—The Great Northern strike still continues. It has a threatening outlook. The American Railway union seems determined to fight it out to the very end. Meanwhile the struggle goes on—a trial car contest—with the A. R. U., the old brotherhoods and the Great Northern company as factors. It appears like a war for supremacy between the A. R. U. and the railway brotherhoods. It may reach St. Paul—but probably not for several days.

President Hill states positively that no wages have been reduced; that the old schedules still remain, and that with that understanding they still govern and will govern, until others take their place. The schedules had not yet gone into effect, Mr. Hill says, and the company has been waiting for the several brotherhoods to take action, by vote either of rejection or acceptance. President Hill says further that there has never been any disposition on the part of the company to take any advantage of the employes. They can always be heard, he says, on any grievance, and will ever be given the fullest consideration. The present strike he feels to be rash, hasty, precipitate. In this respect he is indorsed by one brotherhood chief, who calls it an "unbusinesslike" and "an unwarrantable proceeding."

The Employes' Side.

Vice President Howard of the American Railway union has arrived here. In an interview on the Great Northern situation he said:

"The Great Northern strike originated at Butte on April 13. Organizer Hogan of the A. R. U. solicited a chance to be heard, but was refused audience. The Great Northern people knew that the strike was pending and made preparation for this. In the interior the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen were voting whether they would accept a cut or not. Organizers Hogan and Goodwin were not idle during this time. They gathered the employes into organizations of the A. R. U. The time had come, and the men knew it, that they could not get help from the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers or the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen. The committees from these brotherhoods had already signed the new schedules presented, but with reluctance. No man can cheerfully accept a cut in his wages. The hour for a strike was proper, and the A. R. U. took the initiative. April 14 the strike was ordered sent to Minot, and to Grand Forks the day after. It is marching onward to St. Paul, and may even go as far as the head of the lakes.

Northern Pacific Man Uneasy.

TACOMA, Wash., April 16.—Rumors are current that the Great Northern tie up will be followed by a general strike on the Northern Pacific. It is said the Northern Pacific men have been arranging to quit work together. The leaders here deny this, but members of the American Railway union, which seems to have superseded the old organizations, say that it is not improbable.

THREE CHILDREN PERISH.

A Farmer's Residence Near Janesville, Minn., Destroyed by Fire.

JANESVILLE, Minn., April 17.—A terrible tragedy occurred about three miles west of here at 6 p. m. in the burning of the residence of August Krinke, a German farmer, and the death of three of his children, namely, Martha, Edith and Augusta, aged 10, 8 and 6 years. The fire caught from a defective chimney, and the house was half consumed when discovered. The father had gone to the pasture, and the mother, in trying to rescue her children, was considerably burned, and only escaped with her two smaller children. A quantity of kerosene stored in the house exploded, blowing the house to atoms. The report of the explosion was heard for miles around.

LOVE.

Hidden upon my night there woke
The trouble of the dawn,
Out of the east the red light broke
To broaden on and on.

My daysong timed to finer chords
And lit by higher suns,
Through all my thoughts and all my words
A purer purpose runs.

No matter if my hands attain
The golden crown or cross:
Only to love is much to gain
That lasting is not loss.

And thus, whatever fate betide
Of rashness or of pain,
If storms or sun the future hide,
My love is sun to rain.

So only thanks are on my lips,
And through my love I see
My earthliest freedom like enlighted ships,
Come sailing home to me.
—John Hay.

Speaking French.

A Tennessee chaplain, the Rev. J. H. McNeilly, says that at Port Hudson his regiment was encamped next to the Thirtieth Louisiana, which was made up of French speaking men. The French language, naturally enough, was a mystery to most of the rural Tennesseeans.

One night all hands were in the trenches. Farragut's fleet was in the river, and an attack by land was also expected. The Tennesseeans, who were close to the boys from Louisiana, noticed that the frogs in the numerous ponds were croaking incessantly in a kind of low, continuous chatter.

"Hark, boys!" said one fellow. "These frogs have been camped so long by the Thirtieth Louisiana that they are all talking French!"

At another time some of the men were lounging by the riverside when they heard some French speaking women, who were engaged in washing, talking to each other.

Suddenly one of the boys called to an other, who was noted for his slowness of speech:

"Come here quick, Sam, and hear this woman talk! She can give just one flutter of her tongue and say more in a minute than you can in a week."—Youth's Companion.

Politeness.

Politeness means much. A cable car was humming up Broadway and collided at with an express wagon at Tenth street. "D—— your eyes!" yelled the driver. "D—— your own eyes!" answered the gripman, after which the air was blue with profanities and vulgarities, which ought to have ended in some head punching, and probably would had it not been for the interference of a gentleman, who, oddly enough, turned up at the right time. After that everybody went along cut of temper, cross, red faced and muffed. Not long after that a hack was rumbling along Fourteenth street and nearly upset a light wagon in which two young sports were speeding The pole of the hack caught between the spokes of the wagon wheel and would have caused considerable damage, but the quick eye of one of the young men saw the danger. "Ah, there, Johnnie!" said he good naturedly. "Look out, old man, or you'll break your neck!" The hackman answered in the same vein, and away they went, laughing, each about his own affairs. Yes, politeness is the honor thing, and politeness is the grease of the inman axle.—Joe Howard.

A Remarkable Tree.

The most remarkable tree yet discovered flourishes in the island of Teneriffe, one of the largest of the Canary group. This island is so dry that not even a blade is to be found within its boundaries, yet there grows a species of tree, the leaves of which are narrow and long and continuous green throughout the year. There is also a constant cloud surrounding the tree, which is condensed, and falling in drops keeps the cisterns placed under it constantly full. In this manner the natives of Fierro obtain water, and as the supply is limited the population must of necessity be limited also.—Philadelphia Press.

WORK OF CONGRESS.

Tuesday, Apr 10.

A resolution to close debate on the tariff bill on June 4 was introduced in the senate. It was referred to the committee on rules.

Senator Lodge made a speech in opposition to the tariff bill.

After the passage of two private pension bills and the bill to extend the jurisdiction of the United States district court of Wyoming over the Yellowstone park, the house went into committee of the whols on the postoffice appropriation bill.

Wednesday, April 11.

In the senate, after routine business was dispensed with, the tariff bill was taken up and Senator Hais made an address against the measure. He concluded at 2:15 and Senator Peffer finished the speech begun by him last Thursday.

The house was deadlocked for an hour and a half over a parliamentary question. Adjournment was then taken.

Thursday, April 12.

The house transacted no business, the day being spent in an attempt to adopt a rule to prevent filibustering.

Senator Peffer continued his speech until 5 o'clock, when the urgent deficiency bill was taken up and discussed until 6 o'clock.

Friday, April 13.

The house adjourned after a short session, without transacting any business. Republicans filibustered.

In the senate the tariff and urgent deficiency bills occupied the time. Senator Mitchell of Oregon spoke on the tariff.

Saturday, April 14.

The house was in session but a few minutes. The Democrats lacked 27 of a quorum.

Senator Quay spoke on the tariff bill.

Monday, April 16.

No business was transacted in either house on account of the death of Senator Vance. Funeral services were held in the senate chamber, which most of the members of the house attended.

BRECKINRIDGE MUST PAY UP.

The Jury Awards Miss Pollard Fifteen Thousand Damages.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—Jury rendered a verdict for Miss Pollard and awards her $15,000 damages.

In his charge to the jury Judge Bradley spoke part of the pollution of the case. He said it contained few interesting legal points, and that if the parties had been obscure it would have attracted but little attention. But because one of the parties had been of national prominence, and because, he feared, of the character of its details, it had attracted a large and sometimes a vulgar crowd. It was inaccurate to say that the community at large was a third party to the case. Except to see that justice was done between the parties the world at large had no interest in the case. Public opinion should not weigh a feather weight, abstract principles were not to be vindicated, nor the country, the home and the family.

Only a Question of Contract.

It was only a question whether a contract to marry existed and whether if broken there was an excuse for breaking it. The verdict was not to vindicate the character of either party. Although the judge said that the defendant, quoting a Massachusetts opinion, could not be excused from failure to perform a marriage contract by legal inability to fulfill it, because his legal inability did not lessen the damage to the plaintiff from his failure to marry her.

To sum it all up, if a contract was not made, or if it was agreed to with the understanding that it was not to be carried out, the verdict should be for the defendant. If a contract had been made and broken they were to find for the plaintiff, awarding such damages as they saw fit. Their verdict must be formed upon the preponderance of evidence.

CURRANTS FROM GREECE.

A Cheap and Dirty Food That Gets Mixed Into the American Pudding.

Currants are dried seedless grapes from Greece, produced from the black or white Corinth varieties, the word "currant" being an English corruption of the word "Corinth."

There are other forms of dried seedless grapes—such as sultanas, from the seedless sultana, and especially in California, also, the Thompson seedless and the seedless muscatels.

All such dried seedless grapes serve the same purposes—viz, they are used in cooking, in pies and pudding and cakes, being desired because the absence of seeds saves labor in preparing them for the kitchen.

Currants, however, have a technical trade name limited to the dried grapes of the Corinth varieties. They are filthy products which do not deserve any favor, being dried on the bare ground and gathered together with the dirt and gravel, which every housewife understands. If she is cleanly, she picks out the gravel and washes out the dirt. The slovenly cook saves the dirt and permits you to crunch the gravel in your teeth.

"Raisins" are technically dried grapes of the muscatel and other varieties, recognized by size and appearance, having seeds, and sometimes with, sometimes without, the stems.

"Dried grapes" in our markets are usually the same as raisins, but from varieties which have little pulp—such as dried clusters, etc., not suitable for dessert purposes.

The terms "raisins and other dried grapes" might not be construed to include currants, but "raisinsand all other kinds of grapes preserved by drying" would certainly include currants.

It costs as much or more to produce "currants" in California as it does to produce sultanas or seedless muscatels, because all our methods are clean. The Greek dirty methods would not be tolerated with us. If Grecian currants are cheaper, it is because their methods are such that their goods should usually be excluded from our own markets. A low tariff on "currants" is a premium on dirt. The labor used to clean them makes them cost more than clean California goods—a condemnation, however, not appreciated in trade.

A Free Trade Monument.

A STORY WITHOUT WORDS.

Street scene in New York, corner Seventh avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street; Grover Cleveland, president; Jan. 31, 1894.—American Economist.

Free Trade Education.

The Republicans and the Democratic voters are studying the lesson of Democratic national finance with much more personal and pecuniary interest than in 1892.

The lesson of 1893 closes with this handwriting on the blackboard:

May 4, 1893, to Oct. 3, 1893, withdrawn by the people from national banks, $378,000,000.

Loans called in by national banks, $600,000,000.

National banks and other banking institutions suspending payment in 1893, 585.

Railroad property gone into hands of receivers, over $1,200,000,000.

The money lost to thousands of men and women, representing every form and grade of labor, estimated by Mr. David Wells by no less than a thousand millions of dollars, or more than one-third the amount of the national debt at the close of the war.

At no previous time in the history of the United States have so many people been out of work.

Cause—Distrust.

Distrust in banks? No.

Distrust of currency? No.

Distrust—widespread, popular distrust—in the legislative branch of the government, with its Democratic majority and possibilities.—Vermont Standard.

The Cuckoo.

What cares the cuckoo
For his mother's weal,
When Grover's favor
Rewards his traveling zeal?

The shops are closed
And famine stares,
What cares the cuckoo
When his master cares?

The cuckoo declaims not.
So that Grover guides
And cheers not cynically
: Aught that he besides.

But the people's wrath
Must surely will Lay out the cuckoo
With November's chill.

AMERICA'S VINTAGE.

WINEGROWERS ARE FOR PROTECTION TO THEIR INDUSTRY.

Pure Grape Wines Are Undersold by Foreign Stuff Concocted With Cheap Alcohol and Poisonous Drugs—Low Prices Mean Ruin to American Vineyards.

The common enemy of pure native and imported wines is the producer of artificial and compounded or imitated wines. There are no laws in this country which prevent such competition, and all efforts to procure such have so far failed. Imitations are so cunningly made that only the experienced taster can detect them. Yet the medical profession notes the differences in effects on the consumer, as he does the differences between natural and artificial mineral waters. The chief constituent of value in imitated wines is alcohol. The present low prices of our native wines has reduced the home production of artificial wines to a minimum because the cost of tax paid spirits precludes profit. When our business revives and our prices again become remunerative, we foresee the revival of bogus wines.

To illustrate: With the tax of grain spirits it costs under our present internal revenue laws 24 cents for each degree of alcohol in artificial wine. An imitation 12 per cent strong made with distilled spirits must start out with a cost of 30 cents plus cost of the other materials, not exceeding generally 6 cents a gallon if wholly artificial. If a small portion of natural wine is added, the compound escapes our internal revenue restrictions, but the cost prevents proper competition with pure wines. The specific duty of 50 cents per gallon equally reduces the importation of such wines. So also does the present duty on cherry juice, prune juice, etc., reduce the evils coming from that direction.

An ad valorem duty on still wines would in effect permit foreigners to produce and sell in this country compounds in bond which our own people are prevented from doing by the internal revenue tax on spirits and would assist the legitimate interests of native producers of pure wines. In Hamburg proof spirits for exportation are untaxed and are worth only 15 cents per gallon, and being the chief element of cost in compounding artificial wines would enable foreigners to compete against home producers, who must pay, as is now proposed, $1 per gallon tax if the ad valorem duty on wines is agreed to. The same could be done in Canada.

It is evident that all articles containing alcohol, whether fermented or distilled, should bear no less a rate of duty than the rate of internal revenue on spirits, reckoned according to strength. At $1 per gallon for proof spirits, which contain 50 per cent of alcohol, the internal revenue tax would be at the rate of 2 cents for each degree. Therefore, if we are to have an internal revenue tax of $1 per proof gallon of spirits, the tariff law should provide in every instance where alcohol is contained in imported goods that the duty shall in no case be less than 3 cents for each per centum of absolute alcohol in addition to whatever ad valorem or specific rate is fixed for the product containing such alcohol. In many cases the tax on the alcohol should os the same as the tax on foreign spirits, as in the instances of cherry juice, prune juice, prune wine, cherries preserved in alcohol, etc., which largely enter into the compounding of spirituous beverages.

An ad valorem duty on fruits preserved in spirits is a prohibition against the production of similar articles in this country. So also would be a reduction in the duty on cherry juice if reduced below the internal revenue rate on spirits. Rectified spirits form the base of ordinary brandies and whiskies in common consumption, distinguished as such from "straight" goods. Rectified alcoholic beverages are mostly compounded from neutral spirits of very high alcoholic strength, flavored with various materials, among which are frequently prune juice, cheap sherry, angelica, muscatel, raisins, etc., reduced to standard proof with water, colored with burnt sugar and characterized by an addition of genuine straight brandies or whiskies, in more or less proportion as the product is to be relatively cheap.

Under an ad valorem tariff of 100 per cent on wines it will be possible to import foreign alcohol reduced to 23 per cent, or half proof, floured to imitate certain kinds of fortified wines, such as sherries, malagas, madeiras, etc., of poor quality, containing nearly all the materials used in compounding and rectifying certain alcoholic beverages, including the water needed to reduce the strength. Such compounds can be made in Hamburg for 16 cents per proof gallon. We pay duties on the finished article for compounds reduced to 25 per cent and could be sold to rectifiers, cost of transportation and fair profit included, duty paid, at the rate of 40 cents per proof gallon, the same material in this country that would he displaced being taxed $1 per proof gallon.—Charles A. Wetmore.

Textile Workers In Europe.

A national congress of textile industries was recently held at Roubaix, France, at which was a delegation from Burnley, England, representing 125,000 English textile workers. A very interesting report has been issued, from which we gather that the weavers of Manchester earn $6.68 a week on the average for 56 hours. The engineers average $8.33, and girls from 18 to 20 years old, $4.50 to $4.50. Piecers earn $4.88, and bobbin boys, $1.78 to $1.95. In France, at Cambresis and the Department of l'Aisne, the weavers earn 19½ cents to 19½ cents a day of 14 hours. In Germany, in one large weaving factory of 90,000 spindles employing over 1,000 hands, which is a fair example of the other mills, the girls and women earn equal to $1.45 for the week of 66 hours.

The republican state convention for North Dakota will be held at Grand Forks July 11th.

"Xit. things some to those who wait." It looks as though Tom Reed, of Maine, is the master spirit in the House. He is truly a bigger man in every sense than the democratic speaker.

The Minneapolis Journal is authority for the statement that Hill does not intend to extend the Fosston branch to Duluth this year. The Journal's source of information is a little vague, but the report may be true nevertheless.

The Fargo Argus says: "Fargo, N. D." stands for "Fargo—Now for a Divorce!"

Pshaw, that's too far-fetched, Gugo. Why didn't you say "Fargo —Never Divorce." That's about the correct thing.

All that the democratic congress seems to lack is to know what to do and how to go about it. They have every other facility—a good working majority and a democratic president, but with all of these advantages the business interests of the country still continue to languish.

The Pioneer Press keeps a man in its city parlor to search every crossroads in the United States for every republican victory but it is wonderfully mum on the great victories occurring in its own state. Crookston won a splendid republican victory over the combined efforts of pops and dems, but the Pioneer-Press, despondingly quotes democratic correspondent here, don't know anything about it. That building is too darned high to see what is transpiring in Minnesota.

It has been the custom of democrats, ever since big burly Tom Reed so ably presided over the lower house to refer to him as "Czar Reed." They have hammered him unmercifully and howled terrifically over his rules, but now, after vainly trying for months to discover a sure means for getting a quorum, when recalcitrant members do not vote to one, they are obliged to adopt Tom Reed's rules and thus go into the "czar" business themselves. Time time evens up all things.

The new council of Fergus Falls was affected with an economical streak—in keeping with the democratic times we are having—and fixed the salaries of officers and employes as follows: Day laborers are to receive $1.25; man and team, $2.80; city clerk, $300 a year; city attorney, $100; chief of police, $45, and patrolman $35 per month. But for some reason the council wants to raise more revenue this year than usual, and the liquor license was raised from $500 to $800, and there is a good deal of disappointment that it was not placed at $1000.

It is whispered about that Chas. W. Johnson, who has been chief clerk of the senate for years past, and who went out of business in that line upon the advent of democracy, is an active candidate for clerk of the house at next term, having the idea that the republicans will be in control. Johnson is a long-headed shrewd politician and seldom misses a guess, but by that same token it strikes us that he has already had lots of recognition and there are lots of republicans who just as good who never had anything from the party.

Barlo's sword.

It was at the late state encampment that the following good story on A. Barto was told and vouched for by comrades who belong to that post where the occurrence took place. The story has never been published in print but has enjoyed quite a circulation. While Comrade Barto was department commander he was invited to visit a certain post in the northwest and accepted the invitation. Now it seems that this post was newly organized, was in rather limited circumstances and its commander had never yet had a sword, so the comrades chipped in enough to buy a cheap sword which they intended to present to their post commander on the evening that department commander Barto visited them. The evening came, bringing department commander Barto clad in his usual bright, hearty smile but minus a sword. In due time the comrade whose duty it was to make the presentation speech (and whose name we will call Eskelman for want of a better one to call him by) arose and faced the post commander and the department commander, who sat together upon the platform, and proceeded to address the post commander omitting, however to specify which commander he was referring to, simply addressing him as "commander") and making a very eloquent address, relating how deeply the boys all loved and respected him, but what was his chagrin and embarrassment, when, as he wound up and was about to hand the sword to the post commander, department commander Barto arose, and with many an his beaming smile calmly took the sword, and in his happiest vein thanked the comrade and the post for their kind remembrance, saying that though he had before now been made the recipient of far more expensive swords than this, he would always cherish this one more highly because he knew it came from the hearts of the comrades who had very evidently put themselves out to purchase it. And he did take it home with him too, and the boys never lisped a word of the truth of the matter but quietly went to work and bought another for their post commander. They say now that the only regrets they have in the matter is that the sword was not more in keeping with the merits of commander Barto. They do not like to have it appear that Ada post could not afford a more costly present to the department commander than that cheap sword was.

ADITDIONAL LOCAL.

The Rathog-er-die seems to be plodding on in the even tenor of its way, serenely contemplating the fact that it is, at date of present writing, the only Scandinavian newspaper in Crookston. Its motto: "Friedbrerd for Luke, save some for Tor," to us seems expressive of a great deal of sympathy for the troubles of a brother editor, if Bydal could be construed as the "Tor" who seems just now to be out of "friedbread" and Ole Hagen the "Luke" who has plenty.

Lewis Ellingston will engage in farming a bit, the coming season, and will seed some 600 acres. He means to make barley, oats and potatoes specialties, and expects to plant 25 or 30 acres to potatoes or enough to keep a man and team busy all summer. He will plant Beauty of Hebron and Early Rose mostly, and ship the crop to market early in the fall.

The Shakespearian club will hold their first full rehearsal for the production of the Merchant of Venice in the opera house this (Thursday) evening. The play will be presented in about two weeks.

Engineer Dutton, who was engineer at the Walker saw mill last year returned on Tuesday morning and will go to work at once putting the engine in shape for the season's business. It is said that it will only require eight or ten days after the river is opened to get the logs in and it looks as though the company intends to make an early start this year.

On Tuesday the draye upon the street were conspicuous for their absence. It was said also that the teamsters failed to show up. It was not the strike but the muddy streets that ailed them.

The death of F. S. DeMers, which occurred at the insane asylum at Jamestown, N. D., on Friday last is announced. All old time Polk County residents will remember Mr. DeMers who was for sometime a resident at Fisher, associated in business with Hugh Thompson.

Chris Houston is building a kitchen addition to his farmhouse.

E. H. Stanton, who for the past three years has been associated with Halvor Steeuerson in his law practice, has decided to strike out for himself and open a law office. He hasn't yet determined whether he will locate in Crookston or in some of the surrounding towns, but the JOURNAL hopes he will stay with us, as he is a bright lawyer, a good citizen, and a credit to any community.

Broke Off Before She Began.

A noted clergyman of Boston upon one occasion entered a ball while a temperance meeting was in progress. A laboring man was on the floor at the time making a speech. As soon as the cleric entered the chairman interrupted the speaker and sent the secretary to escort the clergyman to the platform. He introduced him to the meeting and called upon him for a speech. The clergyman returned thanks for the courtesy shown him, expressed his readiness to speak a few minutes later, but observed that he is coming in some one on the floor had been interrupted in his address. He hoped that this speaker would be allowed to finish his remarks first.

The speaker was then called upon to do so, which he did in the following fashion: "Mr. Chairman, when the reverend gentleman entered the room I was nearly through. I was just about to be another giving a rule for reclaiming the drunkard. I think it is a good one. Anyway, I have never seen a better. And if any of ye find a better one, I will thank ye to tell me. If ye will all observe my rule, I'll promise ye will all become reformed men." My rule is to knock off the drink before you begin."—Boston Herald.

Effects of Tobacco on Boys.

A distinguished French physician has investigated the effect of smoking on 38 boys between the ages of 9 and 15 who were addicted to the habit. Twenty-seven presented distinct symptoms of nicotine poisoning. In 22 there were serious disorders of the circulation, indigestion, dullness of intellect and a marked appetite for strong drink. In 3 there was heart affection, in 8 decided deterioration of the blood, in 12 frequent bleeding of the nose, 10 had disturbed sleep, and 4 had ulceration of the mouth.

A Numerous Court.

The court of the emperor of Russia, says one of St. Petersburg papers, consists of one chief chamberlain, five chief court masters, one chief gentleman of the table, one chief inspector of theater, one chief court marshal, one chief carver, one chief stable master, 36 court masters, 17 stable masters, 25 hunting masters, one director of imperial theaters, one chief masters of ceremonies, eight assistant hunting masters, nine assistant masters of ceremonies, 178 chamberlains, 349 assistant chamberlains, 24 court physicians, 26 court priests, 10 ladies in waiting, four ladies of the bedchamber and 160 assistant ladies in waiting. It is well that the czar is one of the wealthiest men in the world, as the list is rather a long one to support.

A Philanthropic Woman.

Mrs. Mary Hemingway, who lately died in Boston, provided by her will that the entire net income of her estate, which is estimated to be worth $15,000,000, shall be devoted by her executors for a period of not more than 15 years to the furtherance of certain plans in which she was interested. These causes she names as follows: First, educational work in Boston and vicinity; second, the historical and educational work connected with the Old South Meeting House; third, the study of American archeology. She bequeaths a valuable farm in Massachusetts, known as the Lowry farm, to Hampton (Va.) institute, founded by General Armstrong.—Boston Commonwealth.

An International Hymn.

My country, 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty,
Of thee I sing!
Land where the wheels are tied,
Land where industries died,
And to the English side
Took rapid wing.

My native country, that,
Land to which strangers flee,
Thy name I love;
I love thy Cleveland frills,
Thy cut-rate tariff bills,
The Canadian, Sugar and Mills,
Born from above.

Let music swell on the breeze
Democrats, to your knees
And swell the song!
Let those who brought this fate
Their medicines take straight
And three years longer wait
To right the wrong.

Our father, Grover C.,
Mogul of misery,
To thee we sing!
Bear with us if you can,
But if not, like a man,
Say you don't care a damn
For anything.

THE CLEVELAND BADGE.

A Prevailing Fad, Worn as a Necessity Rather Than Ornament.

Here is a story from actual life that is too good to be lost: A lady in Macomb, wife of one of our mechanics who voted for Cleveland and reform, was down town the other day doing some trading at one of the leading grocery stores. She was well acquainted with the proprietor, and after through ordering goods fell into a chat with that gentleman. After awhile she suddenly started, and said: "Well, this won't do. I must hurry home and finish my husband's Cleveland badge."

The grocer is a Republican, and he flew up in a minute, saying, "I should think you would be thinking of anything but making Cleveland badges these hard times, and I can't imagine what sort of a badge you would make." "I'll tell you what it is, sir," the spunky woman retorted. "It's a patch about the size of a palm leaf fan on the seat of his trousers. It's the prettiest thing fad up in the Second ward since the present administration came in. Why, even the Republicans are putting them on. And there never was a more appropriate badge in the world," and with a smile the woman passed out, while the grocer, what sold grocer soliloquized:

That woman diagnosed the case precisely. It's as appropriate a badge for Cleveland and reform as the skull and crossbones is the proper coat of arms for a poison label."—Macomb Journal.

LORD BACON ON PROTECTION.

He Gives Good Advice to Visitors, the King's Favorite.

"Let the foundations of a profitable trade be thus laid, that the exportation of home commodities be more in value than the importation of foreign, so we shall be sure that the stocks of the kingdom shall yearly increase, for then the balance of trade must be returned in money or bullion." "At the vanity of the times be restrained. Let vanity in apparel and, which is more vain, that of fashion be avoided."

"The excess of diet in costly meats and drinks fetched from beyond the seas should be avoided. Wise men will do it without a law. I would there might be a law to restrain fools. The excess of wine costs the kingdom much and returns nothing but surfeits and diseases. Were we wise as easily as we might be within a year or two at most, if we would needs be drunk with wines, we might be drunk with half the cost." "If we must be rich in lands and embroideries, which are more costly than either wares or comely, let the curiosity be the manufacture of the realm."

"But instead of crying up all things which are strange brought from beyond the sea or wrought here by the cunning of strangers, let us advance the native commodities of our own country and employ our countrymen before strangers. Let us turn the wools of the land into cloths and stuffs of one sort or other, and the hemp and flax growing here into linen cloth and cordage. It would set many hands at work, and employ the shilling's worth of the materials would by industry be multiplied to 5, 10 and more shillings to 30 times more in the value being wrought."

The Sheep Industry of Texas.

Texas alone possesses about 4,000,000 sheep, or about one-eleventh of all the sheep in the United States. These sheep bring into Texas each year about $7,000,000, which is expended in the state for feed, herding, shearing, salt, shedding and the lease of lands. There is a vast amount of rough lands in Texas now being utilized in the sheep industry which pays a good revenue, as the land thus occupied is worth from $1 to $3 per acre, and it otherwise would be comparatively valueless.

The agitation for a reduction of the tariff on wools has caused the value of the wool products to drop from 18 to 20 cents per pound to 8 cents per pound in fact, to no sales at all—and the value of sheep has fallen in proportion. Taking into consideration the great number of men, directly and indirectly, who are engaged in this industry and the vast amount expended annually among all classes of people, it must be conceded that the position of the people connected with this industry is less favorable than it has appeared at any previous time. It is rain that Senator Mills is advocating for his fellow citizens in his own state.

Do Not Dread the Smoke Nuisance.

About two years ago there was a great outcry about too much smoke from the smokestacks at Chicago and elsewhere, and the question was mooted of making laws to compel the factories to consume the smoke, as it spoiled the clothing while being dried on the lines. But the solution of the vexed question was solved in a way different from what was at first expected. A large number of the people voted for free trade, and the consequence was that the factories soon stopped, and there was no further trouble from the smoke. But now all the people agree that they want the factories running, even if they do have to put up with smoke. But the factory fires all burn again.

TO COUNT A QUORUM.

SUCH THE DECISION OF THE DEMOCRATS IN CAUCUS.

The House Committee Has Prepared a Rule Carrying Into Effect the Principles For Which Ex-speaker Reed Has Been Contending.

WASHINGTON, April 16.—After a session of two hours the Democratic members of the house committee on rules agreed on the new quorum counting rule, and thereupon sent for Messrs. Reed and Barrows, the Republican members of the committee. It is understood that the rule provides for ascertaining a quorum by counting members present and not voting, and also for fining members who absent themselves from the house.

This is the parliamentary principle for which Mr. Reed has been contesting ever since the end of the Fifty-first congress. It is expected that when the rule is presented Mr. Reed will make one of the greatest speeches of his life.

THE HOUSE CAUCUS.

Finally Decided to Adopt Reed's Quorum Counting Rule.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—After a heated session of two hours and a half, the Democratic caucus decided, by a vote of 80 to 44, to instruct the committee on rules to ascertain and record the presence of a quorum, whether voting or not.

GUARANTEES FREEDOM.

Peixoto's Generous Offer to Brazilian Insurgents.

NEW YORK, April 16.—A Herald dispatch from Montevideo says: President Peixoto's government, through the Brazilian minister here, offers to pay the quarantine fees and other urgent expenses, together with free passes to the home of all General Salgado's refugee forces who desire to return to Brazilian territory. This is coupled with a guarantee of freedom from political persecution on account of their recent rebellion to all of them who will acknowledge by reward the constitutional authorities.

Word has been received here from Santa Victoria, in the province of Santa Catharina, that after Admiral Mello's fleet left Urnguayan waters he attempted to regain a foothold at Rio Grande City. He landed a force of men on the beach south of the harbor entrance, but President Peixoto's troops attacked them so successfully that they were forced to re-embark after sustaining a loss in killed, wounded and captured of more than 500 of their number. The fleet then sailed north with Mello still on board the Republica.

HOUSE TO HOUSE CANVAS.

Chicago Authorities Begin a Determined Effort to Eradicate Smallpox.

CHICAGO, April 17.—Alarmed at the spread of smallpox, the city authorities have begun a house to house canvas of the infected districts in search of persons stricken with the disease. Police officers will act as health inspectors and investigate every case. They will stamp out the dread malady. Thirty new cases were reported to the health department Monday, and it is by no means other are lying sick in hovels, ignorant of the dread disease which they are suffering. Carpenters are to start at once at building detention rooms at the Harrison street and Desplaines street stations, and ground has been broken for an addition to the pesthouses which will accommodate 50 cases. Of the 30 cases discovered Monday only a few were removed to the hospital and these are crowded to confocation, more than half of the patients being compelled to lie on the floor.

Appealed From Judge Jenkins.

MILWAUKEE, April 16.—An appeal has been taken from the decision of Judge Jenkins refusing to vacate the order issued by him which restrains the Northern Pacific employes from striking, and the cases will probably be taken to the United States court of appeals for the Seventh circuit at Chicago next Monday.

Will Meet in a Tent.

CLEVELAND, April 11.—A mammoth tent has been secured from Barnum & Bailey in which to hold the big convention of the Christian Endeavor society, which will be in session here from the 1st to the 16th of July. A personal house to house canvass will be made to secure sleeping quarters for the 40,000 young people that will be present.

Deadwood Boycott Raised.

DEADWOOD, S. D., April 17.—The boycott declared against the Homestake miners' union and Knights of Labor on the merchants of Deadwood, and all Deadwood institutions, has been declared taken by the Deadwood people in the big labor troubles at the Annie Creek mines has been declared off.

"Willie" Wilde Married.

"When I was a Boy,"

Writes Postmaster J. C. Woodson, Forest Hill, W. Va., "I had a bronchial trouble of such a persistent and stubborn character, that the doctor pronounced it incurable with ordinary medicines, and advised me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I did so, and one bottle cured me. For the last fifteen years, I have used this preparation with good effect whenever I take

"I have been using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for 20 years, with the most satisfactory results, and can cheerfully recommend it as being especially adapted to all pulmonary complaints. I have, for many years, made pulmonary and other medicines a special study, and I have come to the conclusion that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral occupies a position pre-eminent over other medicines of the class."—Chas. STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk, } ss.
City of Crookston—ss.

Notice is hereby given that application has been made in writing to the City Council of said City of Crookston, and filed in our office, praying for the annexation to said municipality for the year commencing May 1st, 1894, and including May 1st, 1895, the following parcels of land and the following pieces of property, to the City of Crookston, to wit: Lot one (1), block sixteen (16), original townsite of the city of Crookston, Polk county, Minnesota.

Said application will be heard and determined by said City Council at the regular meeting thereof, on the 8th day of May, A. D. 1894, at 8 o'clock p. m. of said day.

Witness my hand and seal of said city, this 17th day of April, A. D. 1894.

Waiting For the Lower Duties.

On Feb. 1, at the port of New York, there were 1,908,276 pounds of wool cloths, valued at $1,230,020, and 7,822,882 square yards of woolen dress goods, worth $1,889,077, waiting for the Wilson bill to become law, so as to compete with the product of the American mills and reduce the value of American labor.

The fear of free trade in wool caused a decrease of 2,225,586 in the number of sheep in the United States last year and a total loss of $36,725,154 in the value of all our flocks. In this connection it is interesting to note that on Feb. 1 there were 28,669,914 pounds of foreign wool waiting in bond at New York alone for the remission of the duty so that it can rush in and help to glut the wool market and hasten the ruin of the American farmer.

Wrapper tobacco to the extent of 5,080,986 pounds, worth $4,887,116, and 8,201,690 pounds of other tobacco, worth $2,970,934, were lying in bond a New York, Feb. 1, waiting for lower duties.

Nearly 26,000,000 pounds of foreign salt were stored in bond, Feb. 1, at New York alone. When this is admitted free of duty, it will not be of much use to the sheep farmers whose stock is being killed off by the free traders.

The innkeepers' business was practiced in Rome at the time of Christ. There were then over 700 registered inns in the capital. Each had a registered sign, which no other innkeeper was permitted to copy.

The days are ever divine. They come and go like crowded and veiled figures sent from a distant friendly party, but they say nothing, and if we do not use the gifts they bring they carry them as silently away.

with his only child, Lady Musgrave, and to attend the 21st birthday celebration of his grandson, Dudley Field Musgrave.

Mr. Field was suffering from pneumonia which he contracted while waiting on deck to claim his baggage.

His Family Present.

NEW YORK, April 15.—Funeral services over the remains of the late David Dudley Field were held during the afternoon at Calvary Episcopal church at Fourth avenue and Twenty-second street in the presence of many eminent men who had gathered to pay a last tribute to the memory of the dead jurist. The pall bearers were Chief Justice Fuller, John Bigelow, Charles Butler, Joseph H. Choate, William M. Evarts, Abram S. Hewitt, ex-Judge Charles B. Peabody, Chancellor McCracken of the University of the City of New York, R. E. Deyo, R. M. Galaway, Judge Abraham R. Lawrence, Henry B. Anderson, Sir William Lane Booker, ex-Judge John F. Dillon, Judge Cheries P. Daly and General Wager Swayne. The casket was placed aboard a special car attached to the train leaving the Grand Central station at 9 a. m. for Stockbridge, Mass., where the interment will take place.

WAGES RESTORED.

Judge Dundy Issues an Order in the Union Pacific Case.

OMAHA, April 13.—Judge Dundy has ordered the wages of Union Pacific employes restored to the old rate. This applies to all the employes of the Union Pacific whose salaries were cut last September. The order directs the receivers to restore the old wage schedule, so far as relates to the men represented by the petitioners and others similarly situated, and in cases where the men receive less than $60 per month, the increased pay shall commence on March 1 last, and in all cases where the men receive $60 per month or over, the increased pay shall commence on the first of the present month.

IN A HAUNTED HOUSE.

Rosina Vokes' Story of Her Family's Isolation in Crowded London.

In an interview lately Rosina Vokes was altogether and bewitchingly the Rosina we know across the footlights—the same big, honest eyes, the same deeply staccato speech, the same tossing of that fluffy mane of shining hair, and the matter of her speech was quite as flavorsome as any lines her playwrights ever set down for her speaking. It is a pity she never told across the footlights for all the world to hear the story she once told in a forced few. The Vokes family, she said, had returned to London from a provincial tour, and intending to remain for the season decided to hire a house in preference to taking lodgings. They looked upon it as miraculous luck to find a house in an eminently fine, the neighborhood at a phenomenally low rent. They soon found out the reason. A particularly shocking murder had been committed in the house a few years before, and since then it had stood untenanted, its evil reputation intensifying with every night its dark windows gloomed upon the else cheerful street.

"But it was a lovely, comfortable house," said Rosina, "and we didn't mind its story at all—in fact, we thought it rather distinguished than otherwise. And, as for spooks, we'd all played 'em too often in Christmas pantomimes to hold 'em in any especial awe. Besides we never saw any—nothing. I give you my word, most fearsome than a blind beetle ever crossed our paths in that maligned house. But for all that a more uncomfortable three months our happy go lucky family never spent. The neighbors gave the house a bad name and shunned it. They took no notice and that any one willing to live in a murder stained house was simply an accessory after the fact. My dears, never shall I forget the first morning I called on the local butcher with a plan for chops. 'Send them to 343 — street,' piped I cheerily. The butcher turned duskily pale. He edged behind his block. He glowered at me over it, 'Three forty-three, you said, mum?' he gasped. 'Man alive, yes!' said I. 'We live there, and we're not ghosts, or we shouldn't need chops!'

"Well, the long and short of it was we could get nothing sent that wasn't ordered at high noon, and then the butcher's boy had a way of firing up the things from the bottom of the steps—didn't want to come within grabbing distance of the door apparently. That was hard on the provisions, especially the eggs. No oilman would deliver milk in the gray of the morning, not he! We had subsequently to bring it home in a can. When the water pipes burst, we had to sop 'em up with our stockings, while the boys scurried London for a plumber rash enough to cross our fated threshold. We lived like Robinson Crusoes on a densely populated island. It was horse in upon us at last that it was a pity so much wholesome terror should go to waste. So the last few days of our stay there we went to burning blue lights at midnight in the area window and emitting hollow groans from the front cellar. I fancy our landlord reaped the results of this light minded conduct. We never inquired."—Boston Transcript.

Shakespeare's Cats.

Shakespeare makes very frequent references to the cat in his plays. Lady Macbeth taunts her husband when he hangs back from the murderous work:

Letting I dare not wait upon I would,
Like the poor cat i' the adage.

alluding to that animal's fondness for fish—"What cat's averse to fish?"—but its unwillingness to wet its feet in catching them.

Falstaff seizes upon another feature of the animal's character, so detested by the wicked sleepers in terms: "Shall I not I am as melancholy as a gib cat!" When Mercutio longs for a fray with Tybalt, he scorns him: "Good king of cats, I would have nothing but one of your nine lives. That I mean to make bold withal, and, as you shall use me hereafter, dry beat the rest of the eight," and there upon receives that celebrated "scratch" which set "not an dog a well nor a wide as a church door."—New York Sun.

Robert Louis Stevenson's Home.

Vaillima, which is famous for "fine waters," is the name which the Stevensons have given to their beautiful home in Samoa. Four miles from the beach and 600 feet above the sea level a clearing was made among the trees, and the house, a rambling two story structure, painted dark gray and with a red roof, was erected. Roomy and comfortable porches extend both ends of the house, and from the upper, looking northward, one can see the "fine waters" of the Pacific. As the back are the green slopes of the Apiaman mountains. There is no driveway to "Vaillima" from the town. The home being accessible only to foot passengers or to those mounted on the sure footed native horses.—Ladies' Home Journal.

When There Were No Plumbers.

Lord Fountainhall, in 1674, says that there are no plumbers in Scotland, because there is no need for them. Happy simplicity of our ancestors! Now every man should be his own plumber. No man should be allowed to marry till he has passed an examination in plain and fancy plumbing. Few know what to do if the pipes are frozen or if the gas meter is frozen. If you are practicing with a pistol, however, and casually cut a gas pipe, we do know what to do. Hobbs's soap! Fill up the orifice with soap. This accident is, it must be admitted, less frequent than sudden flood.—Saturday Review.

A Clinching Argument.

The healthfulness or the reverse of corsets seems likely to be settled. They have been found on the mummies of Egyptian princesses of the royal family. These corsets are simple, and it is interesting to note, are all dead. What more need be said? The dress reformers appear to be justified in denouncing corsets.—Boston Transcript.

ARTISANS' HOMES.

HOW GLASGOW HAS IMPROVED SOME OF ITS POOR DISTRICTS.

The Influence of Municipal Tenements In Brightening Human Life — Clean and Comfortable Dwellings Furnished to the Poor at Reasonable Rentals.

Municipalities are not necessarily wiser than other corporate bodies. Glasgow has by no means solved the human problem. But she has made some notable experiments in the direction of brightening human life. But, with less than half a dozen blocks of municipal tenements, she is still far from pointing the way to a healthy condition. She is also far from having become a socialistic city. She had the opportunity to make experiments in the most wretched of her districts. The experiments have succeeded, and private enterprise here, as elsewhere, has made similar experiments and with similar success.

The municipal tenements or artisans' dwellings, as they are variously called, consist of blocks of flats on either side of the Saltmarket. The buildings are four stories in height. The ground floors are occupied by shops. The houses are usually arranged so that in every block there are three tenements, a tenement of two rooms being on each side of the staircase and a tenement of one room between them. There are also several flats of three rooms each. The tenement of one room is 14 by 12 feet. It is fitted with a bed closet, which is expected to answer the purpose of a second room, a scullery, a large "press or cupboard, a commodious dresser and a kitchen range. Each an apartment rents for $40 a year.

The two roomed flat has a small living fitted with a press, or closet. On one side of the lobby is the living room, which is completely furnished as a kitchen. A scullery adjoins. There is also a bed alcove in the room, on the other side of the lobby and on the front of the house is the sitting room, to which is also attached a bed closet. Such a flat rents for $49.50 per annum. The three roomed flats rent for $80 a year. Gas is supplied by the city at the annual rate of 60 cents per 1,000 feet. There is a laundry at the top of the house for the use of the tenants. The municipal dwellings are constructed in the most substantial manner. The stairs are stone, and the stairway walls are tiles of glazed brick, which is easily kept clean.

It has long been objected that these dwellings do not meet the necessities of the poorest class of laborers. The rents were too high for men who work in the streets or on the docks and at other kinds of unskilled labor. Glasgow had to consider whether it were possible for the municipality to reach these men in any way. If it had been a question of letting rooms to single men, the experiment could have been made easily enough. But the difficulty was to devise houses for large families, and it usually happens that in this part of the world the poorer the man the larger is his family. Houses could be built, of course, but could the poorest class of laborers afford to pay a rent which would return to the municipality an interest of 2, 3 or 4 per cent on its investment? Could the municipality compete in that respect with the owners of rookeries, where families live in single apartments? Much deliberation was given to the subject. It was found that the municipality could put up a block of substantial buildings to meet the wants of the class hitherto left untouched, but that it would not be practicable to provide anything more than what are called "two roomed houses"—that is to say, one room to a family. To be sure, the rooms could be divided by a partition running within two or three feet of the ceiling, the sleeping quarter being thus separated from the cooking quarter.

It was finally decided that a block of single room tenements should be constructed. A place was cleared at the rear of a block of artisans' dwellings, and a plain building of three stories was erected, with four single room tenements on each floor, two in the front and two behind. These were let at rents well within the means of unskilled laborers. The building was opened, and it has been filled ever since. The experiment is financially successful, but in other respects there is little to be said for it. Of course the apartments are roomy, lighter, healthier, better built than any single room tenements in the old rookeries. Nevertheless the objection to the building of a family in one room are not thereby removed. They are merely minimized and in a very slight degree. It is true that any means demonstrated that a municipality is justified in doing anything to perpetuate the single room tenement system for families.

The construction of Glasgow's municipal tenement houses, whether on the better class or of the poorer, is admirable. The stairways, being built entirely of masonry, are consequently fireproof. The stairs themselves and the hall floors are of stone, and the walls of the halls are faced with glazed tiles or buff bricks, as the case may be, and, as I have said, are easily kept clean.

A very large amount of work yet remains to be done on the municipal estate in Glasgow before the full accomplishment of the improvement fund. Old houses are still being torn down, and crowded areas are being cleared away. Of course all this is a very expensive business. But it is being gradually carried on so that the work may not fall excessively on any single year.—Glasgow Cor. Boston Herald.

A Duke Rebuked.

When commanding the Galatea some years ago, the Duke of Edinburgh called in plain clothes on an admiral, who rebuked him with the remark, "Sterling, I should have been very happy to receive your royal highness on any other occasion, but unhappily at this moment I am expecting a visit from the captain of the Galatea." The duke went back to his ship and put on his uniform.—San Francisco Argonaut.

HOW FAR IS THE SUN

NEW LIGHT WHICH HAS BEEN THROWN ON THE PROBLEM.

Results of Observations Made by the Coast Survey at the Sandwich Islands—The Distance to the Sun Is Something Like Ninety-Six Million Miles, More or Less.

A little new light has recently been thrown on the problem of the distance of the sun. This is the great yardstick of astronomy. For more than a century every effort has been made to ascertain the distance as accurately as possible. Methods direct and indirect have been employed. Considering the fact that the knowledge thus ordinarily pursued can serve no utilitarian purpose, the generous contributions in the pursuit does credit to the intellectual aspirations of the human race. From the time of Captain Cook's expedition to the Society Islands to observe the transit of Venus in 1769 until the present day millions of dollars have been spent in this effort to drop a sounding line to the sun.

Copernicus believed that the sun was not more than 5,000,000 miles away. There were philosophers before the Christian era who knew as much as that. For several years past we have been assured that the distance could not be far from 92,800,000 miles. But almost a century ago Laplace assumed a parallax for the sun which gave almost exactly that distance. Since his time various astronomers have attacked the problem, and their results have varied from 91,000,000 to 96,830,000 miles, the difference between these extreme estimates being nearly as great as the entire distance was believed to be by the founders of astronomy.

Yet these facts carry no challenge to the soundness of modern astronomical methods or the substantial correctness of the results obtained by them. The distance of the sun is not yet known with absolute accuracy, for the same reason that the height of Mount St. Elias or of Mount Everest has not yet been exactly ascertained. But the limits of error are narrowed tariff may one day afford these. see estimates of the sun's distance varying by millions of miles. If a series of observations can be made agreeing in length with one of the recent measures of the solar parallax, and all should then be stretched from the earth toward the sun, every one of them would end in the sun although none might stop precisely at its center.

As to the recent light upon this problem, it is furnished by the results of observations by the United States coast survey at the Sandwich Islands to determine the constant of aberration of the stars. By this is meant the amount of displacement that the stars undergo in consequence of the fact that we are looking at them from a globe which is not standing still, but is moving in an orbit around the sun at the rate of about 18½ miles in a second. Light travels 186,-330 miles in a second. The ratio of the velocity of the flying earth to that of light measures the displacement in the position of the stars that is called their aberration. But, manifestly, if we can learn precisely how far the earth travels in a second, we shall know just how long its orbit is. We know that the earth takes one year, or, more exactly, 31,558,-150 seconds, to go once around the orbit. If, then, we can find out with rigorous accuracy how far it goes in a second, we can at once calculate not only the length of the orbit, but the distance of the sun, which depends directly upon the size of the orbit. Of course allowance must be made for the fact that the orbit, instead of being a circle, is an ellipse, and consequently the earth's rate of traveling varies a little. But mathematics take care of that.

Now, it is by means that the displacement, or aberration, of the stars furnishes a means of determining the ratio of the earth's velocity to that to the known velocity of light. If that aberration is accurately measured, it must be by a simple calculation, the velocity of the earth and the distance of the sun. That information ascertained at the Sandwich Islands is slightly smaller than previous measurements had made it. It amounts to 20.433 seconds of arc. This gives for the average velocity of the earth in its orbit 18.4583 miles in a second, and for the distance of the sun 92,769,000 miles. The distance derived from the observation of the transit of Venus in 1874 was about 93,000,000 miles less than this, while that calculated from the transit of 1882 was about 190,-000,000 miles. But Langley's value of the solar parallax, adopted by him in 1799, gives a distance differing by only 69,000 miles from that now shown by the calculation based on the new constant of aberration. So Laplace was probably nearer to the truth than some of the later astronomers have been.

It is evident that the final solution of the problem of the sun's distance has not been obtained. There is an uncertainty of perhaps as much as 100,000 miles in the remaining. Since the distance of the sun forms a base line for calculating the distance of the stars, an error of 100,000 miles in that base line would make a difference of nearly 50,000,000,000 miles in the distance of the nearest fixed star in the sky. It is for the astronomers of the future, then, to determine the exact distance of the sun. Perverse, if they can. For our part, we must be content to know that they are getting almost beyond the power of mathematics to express and certainly beyond the power of imagination to conceive.—New York Sun.

Buried In Old Paint.

The late well known Miss Jane Clarke of Regent street, dealer in antique lace, fantastic fans, etc., desired in her will that she should be buried in old paint. One is curious to know if her eccentric command was carried out to the letter. Again, when Jenny Lind was dying, she left directions that the Indian shawl given her by the queen and a quilt, the gift of some school children, should be buried with her.—Notes and Queries.

Interesting Comments From the British Press That Show How They Want to Sell Their Goods—Closed American Factories Mean Riches For England.

Exports to the United States have not been growing our quite so fast as otherwise might have been anticipated, and if the new tariff bill is accepted by the senate a large increase in tonnage is most probable.—Morning, England.

The (Wilson) bill would reduce the duties in many cases if it became law, and intending exporters to the States are therefore holding back all the goods they can in order to escape the McKinley duties, should these be ultimately repealed.—East Anglian (Ipswich) Times.

It will be a bad lookout for Welsh tin workers if America ever succeeds in making enough tin plates to meet its own consumption. It will be still worse if America can manufacture more than sufficient for its own wants, for that will mean competition with Wales in markets now its own.—Western Mail, Cardiff, Wales.

There is at present going through the United States congress a measure which ought to prove of vast importance to Irish trade, but especially to the woolen industry in this country. The time to be in the field is not when the new tariff has been in operation some time, but on the first day that it comes into play. The English and Scotch and other woolen makers will make a rush for possession.—Dublin Telegram.

The Americans will settle their tariff with an eye to their own interests and not to ours. As free traders we may think the time to legislate in the American era a long way from seeing matters in the same light. British manufacturers should not let any chance slip them of utilizing to the full any opportunities for increased trade with the States a reformed tariff may one day afford them. But they must not trust too confidingly to a reopening of an undoubtedly fine market.—London Commerce.

The truth is that the effectual curse of the grave evils which afflict the body politic in the United States, and which, in spite of the immense natural resources of the republic, have evolved there a social problem at least as formidable and urgent as any which confronts the crowded states of the old world, will never be accomplished until the people have got rid of the mere sordid advantages which have been allowed to warp the management of their affairs.—Glasgow Herald.

In the Swansea and Llanelly district, which is by far the largest tin plate producing area in Wales, the news that the tariff bill had been passed by such a large majority was welcomed with unmistakable demonstrations of satisfaction. At this moment, when the industry is in such a depressed state, no news could be better than this from America, for with a reduction to nearly the old tariff rate the old prosperous and regular state of the industry may be looked for in the near future.—Western Mail, Cardiff, Wales.

The depression during the last two years in Wales has been felt so keenly that we can forgive the great rejoicing over the failure of the tariff in the States, although Llanelly and Swansea people who are rejoicing at the failure of the hopes of our employers who invested some of their capital in the States would do well to remember that had they been successful a goodly number were preparing quietly to follow their example and are now patriotic only owing to the force of circumstances.—Western Mail, Cardiff, Wales.

We must expect that the Wilson tariff bill will he keenly fought at every stage, and that plausible reasons will be found for not allowing it to interfere to any extent with vested rights and interests which have grown up under the McKinley tariff. In such a state of affairs as this and with so doubtful a future before them it will be well for our own merchants and manufacturers not to expect too much from the Wilson tariff bill and to be on their guard in making preparation for changes which it may or may not affect.—London Times.

The Industrial World would have been more in place had he vented his indignation against the telegraph clerk who some time ago it was feared would be sent to President Cleveland by the tin platers, thanking him for his efforts in repealing the McKinley bill, which, on the face of it, was a glaring indiscretion and would lead the Republican party to believe that President Cleveland was subsidized by South Wales tin platers. The indications are now that the immense popularity of President Cleveland will insure his election for another term, and providing the tariff is now arranged on the lines already laid down, and if President Cleveland or the Democratic party with a leader of the same pronounced opinions as Cleveland retain power after the election we can count upon a good run of trade here for seven or eight years.—Western Mail, Cardiff, Wales.

President Cleveland's bill, while it does not go so far in the direction of free trade as it might do, yet makes changes of vast importance, which must have a highly beneficial effect, and in many respects it goes further than many people in this country anticipated. The bill has yet to pass through the senate, and it is likely there to meet with more or less strenuous opposition. The new section dealing with income tax will in particular be unwelcome to the aristocracy. Whatever may be done with regard to this portion of the bill, however, it is practically certain that the senate will have to pass the tariff portion into law, even if some modifications are introduced. A fiscal reform which must have an immense influence and impetus upon the trade both of America and this country is therefore assured.—Leeds (England) Express.

WORK IN THE GARDEN

VEGETABLE RAISING FROM THE VIEW-POINT OF "THAT BOY."

There is Some Fun In Burning Up Vines and Weeds, but Spading and Fitting Beds and Weeding and Hoeing and Watering All Have Their Drawbacks.

Did you ever help make garden when you were a boy? No? Then you don't know the cost of tabs vegetables in aching backs and split finger nails and lame arms and broken knees, and it will do you good to read about it. If, as a boy, you have made garden, you may go on to the next column. You have nothing to learn here.

The first thing you are ordered to do, if you are a boy and your father thinks it time to begin on the garden, is to rake up the debris of last year. That is an easy job, and the burning of the weeds, and the dead sweet cornstalks, and the potato vines that comes after the raking is thoroughly enjoyed by every true boy. For did not the red men of the forest, who lived in this land before the white ever heard of it, burn open air fires under the same skies? And is it not possible that the Indians may have lighted more than one council's blaze on the very same spot of ground as that on which you are burning the remains of last year's luckless garden? And if your father does not object and your mother is not troubled with nerves, can you not prevail upon the garden while you are at work and whoop as near like an aboriginine as you know how and have no end of fun?

It doesn't matter if your whoop does bear about the same relation to that of the son of the forest as the willow whistle's blast does to the house screech of the foghorn. You don't know the difference, and you may add to your delight by imagining that the hatchet with which you may be instructed to cut up some old boards into kindling wood is a tomahawk. If your grandfather is like some grandfathers I have met, he may declare that the smoke of the burning weeds has made you "smell like an Indian," and for that reason he desires you to keep away from him. He may think it annoys you to be spoken to in that manner, but if you are the genuine article of boy you will be delighted with it.

It is the next day that your troubles begin. Then your father will direct you to spade up the carrot bed. If you have never spaded up a bed before, don't begin too vigorously. Before the day is over you may wish you hadn't, for this work will break your spine square in two, even if you get at it with deliberation and stop often to rest. If you work as hard as you can at first, you won't last half an hour, and when you do stop to rest it will be for so long a time that your father will think you are "soldiering," and if there is anything you can't find, that he hates it is that very thing. Nobody can get along in this world, he will explain, who slights falls into that habit. Besides, if you do too much work the first half hour, he will gauge your capacity thereby and will assume that in 10 half hours you ought to do 10 times as much, and you will find it very disagreeable and inconvenient to fulfill his desires. The raking of the spaded carrot bed and the clearing it of little stones and clods is not a hard job, but you will find it one that will require sharp eyes, and your father will go over the bed and discover dozens of pebbles and hard lumps of dirt after you have told him in perfect good faith that you have got them all out. He will sow the carrots while you get the onion bed in order, and after that you will be directed to attack the ground where the turnips are to grow while he puts out the onion sets. He will then sow the spaded ground has been fitted and the cabbage and turnip plants are in the ground.

The patches of ground that are reserved for the sweet corn and the early potatoes and the peas will be plowed, and not spaded, and the dropping and the covering of the corn is an easy matter. But the dropping of the potatoes is not so easy. It follows the cutting up of the seed tubers, an operation performed by your father, which will seem so obscurely easy to you, when you think about it, that he ought to be ashamed not to give it, instead of to dropping, to the boy. His talk about cutting potatoes being a task that requires the judgment and experience that come only with age will seem to you to be the rankest hypocrisy, but despite all the protests you will dare to make he will continue to sit on a keg or a box in the cool cellar calmly cutting potatoes into bits for you to take out into the hot sun in baskets or pallaful, each seemingly weighing about a ton, and drop and drop until you feel ready to drop yourself with fatigue.

By the time the last of the corn and potatoes have been put under the ground the agony of weeding will begin, for by that time the carrots will have begun to peep above the surface. If the tasks that have heretofore fallen to you have been hard, those which now confront you will be atrocious. You will have to go on your knees half the time, and your finger nails will suffer, and the small of your back will cant up. To make matters dumbly interesting, there is a strong probability that when you have about finished the bed your father will examine the work and explain to you in a dreadful voice that you have carefully pulled up all the young carrots and left rows of young grass blades growing instead. He will then essay to show you the difference between the two, and he may seek to spur a physical argument for the clarifying of your vision.

The same thing will happen all over again with the onions, but the spinaches, and the tomatoes, and the corn, and the potatoes, and the cabbages will not trouble you in that way. You will find, however, that it is no easy job to keep them clear of weeds with the hoe, although, as he will tell you over and over and over again, your father had no father when he was a boy of your size in doing the same work in a garden twice as big as the one you toil in. If he was not your own father, you might be inclined to think him a prevaricator, to put it mildly, and it may be possible that this talk on his part will sow in your youthful mind the first seeds of distrust of humanity that may become general.

After the garden is safely planted and weeded once or twice the worst of the work there is done. By that time it will be summer, and the weather will be hot and dry, and it will be yours to water the things night and morning. It will happen regularly that the watering will have to be done just when you want to go "in swimming" or playing ball or fishing, and of course sooner or later some day you will forget all about the garden, and some of the plants or vegetables will wither and die. Then if your father be editor of Truthful arguments you will wish that the man who invented gardens had never been born.

Another thing that you will have to attend to carefully, in the spring especially and to a less extent in the autumn, is the protection of the beans, the cabbages, the turnips and the tomatoes from the frost. Baskets and pans and blankets and papers must be brought out and the things covered at sunset or a little later in the evening whenever there is the least indication of a frost, and you will derive infinite joy from the occasional discovery by your father, just as you are slipping away into the land of Morpheus, that "that boy has not learned a bit to tell by the sky when these things ought to be done."

The cabbage plants, the cucumbers and the tomatoes, all of which were "started" in a sheltered angle of the house, fence or barn and transplanted to the open garden, must be carefully shaded from the hot sun for awhile. A good way to do this is to drive a shingle into the ground at the rising side of each plant. In the morning the shingle must be to the southeast of the plant. By noon it must be shifted to the northeast, and a lax memory in this matter will be of great detriment both to the plant and your personal feelings. There is nothing in the world that will more decidedly add to the fatigues of your father than forgetfulness on this point, and anything more easily forgotten cannot well be imagined by the human mind.

In the fall you must destroy the garden you created in the spring and have all summer toyed with such assiduous labor. The potatoes must be dug, the corn picked, the cabbages, the turnips and the carrots pulled and buried or housed and all the other products harvested, each in its own way. You will find "pulling roots" on a frosty day great fun—that is, if you are not personally engaged in the pulling, as you will be. The fingers get red and numb, the hands chap, and the world takes on a cerulean hue to whoever engages in this occupation. There is one satisfaction, however, in gathering the things—they won't bother you any more till the following spring. All you need have to do with them in the winter is to help eat them, and if you are a healthy boy you will do that with great joy.

Maybe you are not a boy at all, but a father, and maybe you have a boy of your own of the garden making age. If so, how would it do to remember that when you were a boy you used to think that if you ever got to be a man you would try some other method as to the garden than the one I have indicated?

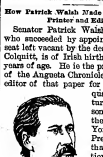
GEORGIA'S NEW SENATOR.

How Patrick Walsh Made His Mark as a Printer and Editor.

Senator Patrick Walsh of Georgia, who succeeded by appointment to the seat left vacant by the death of Senator Colquitt, is of Irish birth and about 56 years of age. He is the principal owner of the Augusta Chronicle and has been editor of that paper for more than a quarter of a century. He was the southern agent of the old New York Associated Press and after that organization collapsed became general manager of the Southern Associated Press. He has been prominent in Georgia politics for many years and has several times been a member of the state legislature and a delegate to Democratic national conventions. From 1884 to 1888 he served as the Georgia member of the Democratic national executive committee.



SENATOR WALSH.

Walsh came to America with his parents when a child. The latter settled in South Carolina, and Patrick learned to set type in the office of the Charleston Evening News. He worked at the case on various newspapers there for several years as a journeyman and has always been loyal to the friendships then formed.

After he became the owner of the Augusta Chronicle and was well to do he one day went over to Charleston, and hunting up all the printers with whom he had formerly worked at the case he gave them and their families an elaborate dinner at one of the principal hotels of the city. He chartered a steamboat and took the entire party for an excursion down the bay the next day.

At the beginning of the war Mr. Walsh served in the Confederate army for a short time and then went to Augusta and secured employment as a printer on The Constitutionalist, where he was soon advanced to an editorial position. While still on the staff of The Constitutionalist he edited a weekly paper called The Pacificator, which attained an extensive circulation. In 1869 he became editor of The Chronicle and 10 years later bought out the concern, annexed The Constitutionalist and has since made his paper one of the most influential in the southern states.

HE FIGHTS THE RAILROADS.

The Governor of Texas Has Pronounced Views and a Vigorous Policy.

The publication of the spirited correspondence between Governor Hogg of Texas and one of the superintendents of the Southern Pacific road in relation to the transportation across the state of Frye's "industrial army" has once again attracted general attention to the sturdy and determined governor of the Lone Star State. It was under Governor Hogg's first term with railroad officials, for he was the man who despoiled them of some 700,000 acres of land of which they had unlawfully taken possession under the exceedingly liberal land grant act that formerly prevailed in Texas and had antagonized them in various other ways, so that it was said at the time of his last election that he had to fight their combined power, thus strengthened by that of the whisky interests and the foreign money lenders, who were also opposed to him.

Governor Hogg is a man of positive convictions in regard to the laws and of utter fearlessness in enforcing them. When he was first elected attorney general, he said he would purge Texas of lawlessness and crime or he would bankrupt the state treasury. One of his most notable endeavors to redeem that pledge resulted in the life imprisonment of a man who had committed no less than 16 murders, and who had boasted that the state was powerless to check his career of crime.

His course as attorney general rendered Mr. Hogg so popular that he was nominated for governor in 1890 and elected by a majority of over 150,000 votes. He was elected for a second term by a plurality of 68,000 votes, and considering the forces arrayed against him and the fact that a very popular independent candidate was in the field in opposition to him he claimed the election as a complete vindication of his course.

Governor Hogg is a native of Texas and was born near Rusk, in Cherokee county, in 1852. He was left a penniless orphan at the age of 12 and had a hard row to hoe to get an education, doing his way up to a lawyer's shingle through such varied classes in the school of experience as printer's devil, compositor, country editor, road overseer and justice of the peace. After serving a term as attorney for Wood county he was elected district attorney of the Seventh district and then attorney general of the state, serving four years in each office. Yet he was not quite 38 years of age when he was first elected governor.

DAY'S BLAZING ORB.

Sir Robert Ball on the Substances of Which the Sun Is Made.

Lo no see if we have the necessary data for ascertaining what this solar material must be. We are first confronted with the fundamental question as to whether it is likely to be composed of elements found on the earth. There was a time when it would have been urged that in all probability the solar elements were so far different from any we know as to be terrestrial chemists that the solar clouds must be constituted of something altogether beyond our cognizance. But this view cannot be sustained in the present state of science.

Nothing is more remarkable in the recent advance of knowledge than the clear demonstration of the fundamental unity between the elements present in the celestial bodies and those elements of which the earth is composed. It is no doubt true that we have found grounds for believing that there may be one or two elements in the sun which we do not find here.

We have indeed assigned to these dimly discerned elements the hypothetical names of coronium and helium. But even if such bodies exist at all they are certainly wanting in the essential qualities that can be attributed to any element which purports to be the active component of the photospheric clouds. There cannot be a reasonable doubt that the sun is mainly composed of elements well known and abundant on the earth. It is clearly among these known bodies that it is our duty to search for the characteristic photospheric material.

As the terrestrial clouds consist of water they are derived not from a simple element, but from a compound body formed of the gases—oxygen and hydrogen. The multitude of composite bodies is, of course, innumerable, and the task of searching for the solar constituents would therefore seem to be an endless one, unless we were in some way enabled to restrict the field of inquiry. This is just what the vast temperature of the sun permits us to do. It is well known that at a heat resembling that at which the photosphere is maintained chemical compounds cannot in general exist. Ordinary chemical compounds existing at a temperature of such elevation are instantly resolved into their elementary components. It is thus manifest that in the endeavor to find the photospheric material we have not to consider the illimitable field of chemical compounds. We have only to consider the several elementary bodies themselves.

Thus at once the research is narrowed to a choice among some 64 different materials, this being about the number of the different elementary bodies. Most of them have already been actually detected in the sun, and it is very likely that the others do really exist there also in some part or other of the vast mighty volume.—Sir Robert Ball in Fortnightly Review.

As the Boy Saw It.

A Detroit business man was making some purchases at a Woodward avenue fruit stand the other evening when he saw a street gamin take an orange and coolly saunter off. There was no occasion to raise a row over it, but the gentleman felt it his duty to follow the boy and observe:

"I saw you hook that orange, my boy. It isn't of much value, but if you begin this way where will you end?"

"I never took it," he stonily replied.

"Oh, but I was looking full at you."

"I say I never took it."

"There it is in your pocket."

"What's a hull."

"Let me see."

"Oh, well," he sputtered as he worked the orange out, "this is allus my luck. I never git hold of anything on the sly but some great big duffer comes along and wants to know about it. Here's your half, and now it's only fair for you to steal some peanuts and divide."—Detroit Free Press.

The Human Electrical Forces!

How They Control the Organs of the Body.

The electrical force of the human body, as the nerve fluid may be termed, is an exhaustible storehouse of energy, and it exerts so marked an influence on the health of the organs of the body, that when it is produced by the brain and conveyed by the nerves to the various organs of the body in sufficient quantities to keep the latter with the vitality necessary to perform their functions, the pneumogastric nerve, as shown here, may be said to be the most important of the nerves that supply the heart. It supplies the heart with nerve force necessary to keep it beating and transmitting from the brain to the heart the vitality which is the pneumogastric nerve. It is through this nerve that the nerve force necessary to keep the heart beating regularly is supplied, which is supplied by the brain and conveyed by the pneumogastric nerve. Receiving the diminished supply the heart becomes weak, irregular and nervous, and frequently fail to recognize the importance of the first premonitions of nervousness, instead of the cause of the trouble. Dr. Miles' Nervine, a specific, Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., has given the greater part of his life to the study of this subject, and the principal discoveries concerning it are due to his efforts. Dr. Miles' Nervine, therefore, is the only remedy that has nerve food in prepared on the principle that nerve force must be supplied to the nerves before permanent relief or cure can be expected. Its wonderful success in curing all forms of nervous disease is known in every part of the land.

Restorative Nervine cures sleeplessness, nervous prostration, dizziness, hysteria, neuralgia, St. Vitus' dance, fits, epilepsy, etc. Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills relieve pain. It is sold on a positive guarantee by druggists, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5. Express prepaid.

Growing More Liberal

That's what the human race is doing—particularly the American part of it. There are a few left who are satisfied with ancient history. But most people are ready to apply modern progress and common-sense to the treatment of the human stomach—an organ that demands its rights whether or no; that resents the results of worn-out methods. All this is to emphasize the facts about

Cottolene

There was once a prejudice against Cottonseed oil. But people who are alive, who investigate, who have no bigotry in their composition, have found that pure, refined cottonseed oil combined with cottolene for beef suet is a better article in every conceivable way than hog's lard. And so they will continue it for cooking—and are correspondingly healthy and happy. The sales of Cottolene are enormous and constantly increasing; a proof that it is appreciated by appreciative persons. Ask your grocer for it.

PROBATE NOTICE.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court. Special Term, March 27, 1894.

In the Matter of the Estate of Christina Anderson, Deceased.

Letters of administration on the estate of said deceased being this day granted unto P. A. Sharp, of said County.

It is Ordered, That all claims and demands of all persons against said deceased be presented to this Court, for examination and allowance, at the Probate Office in the City of Crookston, on the 30th day of September, A. D. 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m.

It is further ordered, That six months from the date hereof be allowed to creditors to present their claims against said estate, at the expiration of which time all claims not presented to the City of Crookston in said county, shall be forever barred, unless, for cause shown, further time be allowed.

Ordered further, That notice of the time and place of the hearing and examination of said Claims and demands shall be given by publishing this order once in each week, for three successive weeks prior to the day appointed for such examination, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, Minnesota, said County.

CHAPTER XVIII.

FURTHER EXPLORATIONS.

Like Robinson Crusoe, of whom I often thought, I kept an almanac. On one of the largest and smoothest bowlders was fixed by me for this purpose. Like him, I made a stroke for each day—a long stroke for Sunday—and at the beginning of each month wrote its name, all, of course, with the point of my knife. After I had ascertained the seals to my presence, though before I had taught them to bring me fish, I began to explore the remainder of the cavern and in the same way as I had explored it from the window to the seal pool—by lighting a series of fires. A little beyond the pool I found that the cavern forked, one gallery, which was the smaller, terminating in another pool of unknown depth—I tried, but could not sound it—in which the tide rose and fell with a terrible and monsnful place, which, after that sounding, or trying to sound, I never afterward visited. The other gallery was of huge extent and ran far inland. When I first penetrated this gallery, I noticed at one point that the air seemed to be fresher than elsewhere and could perceive a slight motion in the flame of my torch. This, of course, was evidence that somewhere here there was communication with the outer world. Presently I scented eagerly the rool of the cavern, I could perceive there no welcome slit of sky. Nevertheless I felt sure that always to the outer world existed at this point, though probably so winding as not to permit the access of light. Then, as I recalled the physical character of that outer world under which I was entombed, I remembered a cleft opening into a deep and horrible abyss which had always possessed a fascination for myself and my younger brothers. It was called the "Devil's Parlor," and many times we rolled down stones here and listened with awestruck delight to their clashing and rattling as they went down into the subterranean depths. I need to maintain that it was bottomless and penetrated into the center of the earth, because I never could hear the final clash which told that the stone was at rest below. Then I searched around, and here, sure enough, did find a variety of stones, cast down no doubt by the hands of many boys at many times. Also I found many bones of animals, goats and sheep, which from time to time during past centuries had fallen thither while their grazed carelessly on the edges of the abyss or had been driven there by dogs or men.

"If only one such would fall in here now," I thought to myself ruefully as my imagination drew pleasing pictures of roast meat. In truth, I was becoming heartily tired of my fish diet, which was beginning to sicken me slightly and still more noticeably my strength. I blazed my way to the end of this gallery, the extreme limit of my gloomy kingdom. Here I made a singular discovery. Against the black wall of the cave there stood what I can only call white bowlder, lozenge-shaped—that is to say, somewhat flat and oblong. Examining this, I discovered upon it not only a variety of circles, but a curious engraving, something like a bent bow with straight strokes upon its concave side. I noticed, too, upon the edges a variety of scorings which traveled around to the side of the slab, which was hidden from view. Feeling all around with my hand, I came to one point where I could pass it between the slab and the rock. There was a hollow space behind, how large I could not tell, but apparently considerable. As it was evident that this slab had been set up here by men's hands and in order to block access to the cavity behind, I at once concluded that this well protected pocket was a treasure chamber or perhaps a tomb. I threw in some lighted timber, and flinging more upon the top of it and making a blaze I applied my eye to the cavity. I saw an earthen crock about the size of a large flowerpot, filled with something which I could not distinguish, but dig notice, both there and elsewhere, what looked like metal of some kind. Owing to the smoke, which rapidly gathered there, I saw nothing distinctly and after a moment or two, owing to the same cause, saw nothing at all. "This," I said, "is surely old Curry the smuggler's treasure chamber. If I ever get all-sorts of this den, I will come back with my brother Ned. Together we will blast away this bowlder or contrive in some other way to rifle the old villain's treasures."

CHAPTER XIX.

ANOTHER ATTEMPTED ESCALADE.

After I had thoroughly explored the whole cavern and perceived that no other outlet of an available character existed, I commenced to saw every portable article which I could discover to Curry's Window—stones, gravel, debris of all kinds, bones, etc. I knew that the supply was utterly inadequate to enable me to mount to the aperture, but would make the attempt nevertheless. Of course it failed, but a certain portion of the incline was thus made serviceable, and this was something. The storms of the approaching winter might fling in sufficient driftwood, boards and even beams big enough to enable me to construct a ladder. This idea of a ladder was present in my mind almost from the moment that I entered my prison. The extreme brittleness of the timber, among which there was hardly a solid bit, had prevented me from making the attempt before. I now determined to utilize the skeletons of the sheep and goats for the purpose and unwind the leather of the young seal to supply fastening material, keeping only the wire for tether. On the latter I discovered those bones I set to work. Many of them were too brittle to be of any use; some were sound; others, though too brittle or too small to be separately of sufficient strength to bear my weight, I bound together. Some of the feather driftwood I treated in the same manner. Though I knew that I had neither material enough nor twine enough, I labored on. With every round made I was coming nearer to my deliverance. Yet I believe my fishing rod could amply more materiel for the latter than all the reet put together. Seeing that even by cutting up its latter my ladder would not be near long enough, I forbore to destroy the rod, knowing that I could do it at any time. It was well that I refrained, though I have not had occasion to mention the fact yet. Shortly after my imprisonment I was aware that pigeons of the slate colored variety, common along this coast, were in the habit of roosting somewhere in this cave. In the dusk of the evening I had often seen them as they whirred through the window and disappeared into the interior of the cavern. While I was engaged in taming the seals I had made a close exploration of the cavern, with the hope of finding their roost, and at last discovered it. Standing perfectly still in different parts of the cave and listening intently, I could at once detect the birds making little sleepy noises, but at such a height above me that, though I bridled s considerable fire long, I could not see them. Now, however, shortly after that exploration of the long gallery, I made a similar noise at a point below me and seemingly proceeding from upon much nearer to the floor of the cavern. Here, with the aid of a torch and a seoss hall dozen of them upon a ledge, all very close together. Next day I fastened a large canvas hook to the extremity of my fishing rod and leaned the rod against the ledge upon which they roosted. I then lit a fire, such as would throw a faint light upon the ledge, and sat down to wait. In the dusk the pigeons arrived and took up their night quarters. They looked at first a little startled, and I kept perfectly quiet with their little, bright round eyes, but presently clustered close together, as their manner was, and seemed to fall asleep. Indeed they were by this time pretty well used to the fires and lights of the cavern. Quietly and gropping, I felt with ons and and bringing the point of the hook over the back of one of the sleepers, I drew the rod down quickly, yet gently. I had the satisfaction of knowing that my prey was secured. My fear, of course, was that he might be mortally injured; but, as it turned out, he was not. I had set the feathered victim fast turning him into food. My intention was to utilize him as a messenger. I must inclose in a waterproof pocket handkerchief, the corner which bore my initials, fastened it tightly around his leg and let him go. The bird over see him afterward. I was afraid that the remainder would not again use my cavern as a roost, but they returned, two of them settled down here, while I, as usual, lay in wait below. I struck down and secured one of them in the manner that I have already described. To the leg of this pigeon I tied my ring. It was one which if he should ever see or taken would be at once identified as mine by any member of our family, for on the inside it was engraved with a Latin inscription. It had been given to me by a greatuncl a few years before. I afterward captured a third and to him fastened a gold shirt stud of a peculiar pattern, which I felt sure my brother Ned at least, who often examined it curiously, would at once identify as mine. After this third capture I could effect no more for a long time. The birds were quite frightened away from that perch. Finally, not long before my brother Edward made his way to me, I caught a fourth. Round the leg of this messenger I wrapped tightly a piece of my handkerchief, on which I had inscribed with blood characters a statement of my whereabouts.

CHAPTER XX.

A PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPERIMENT.

One night about three weeks after my entombment, as I sat beside the fire thinking mournfully of home and what they were all doing there now, I thought, after looking at my watch, that this was Charley's bed hour, and the child's singular countenance and large eyes—indeed he seemed all eyes, like a young crow—rose before my mind. Then I remembered having read somewhere, I think it was in one of Bulwer-Lytton's novels, that there were some persons so firmly and sensitively organized that a person with whom they were en rapport might, though at a distance from the latter, receive by the mere concentration of thought, impressions or thoughts upon their minds, the patient being at the time in a receptive or passive mental state. Charley, I said, is now in bed and not yet asleep. I will at least try. I did so and remained for half an hour or so endeavoring with the utmost concentration of thought to convey to Charley the knowledge that I was here. For short a week I continued to do this and then gave over. I noticed all the time that it was absurd and probably only went through these mental gymnastics for want of anything else to do. Once as I awoke I heard a slight thud somewhere in the long gallery as of something falling. I did not attach any importance to it. I thought it was a stalactite falling from the roof. However, after I had been fasted and played with my seals, I thought I would explore that gallery once more. Something might have fallen in or been thrown in from the outer world. Coming to the spot where I had discovered the bones of animals and searching around in all directions, I found something at which I cried out in a passion of delight and joy. It was one of the great brown soda cakes which were such a familiar appearance on every tea evening on the family board at home. It was grievously bruised, crushed and gapped, but nevertheless a real bona fide housesoda cake. I felt almost that it was the result of my absent experiment. Perhaps Charley had thrown in another whose fell I had not heard. I searched again and was about to leave some shelf of the winding, rocky path. The delight with which I consumed these dainties may be imagined, but there was by greater was the joy caused by the consciousness that some one on the outside, no doubt Charley, was aware of my presence here.

In cutting that fragment of a cake to which I have already referred my knife seemed to be resisted by something unusual. Looking for the cause, I found a bit of paper, which, having unrolled, I found to be a letter to me from Charley. It ran as follows:

MY DEAR JACK—I know that you are alive and think that you are in the "Devil's Parlor." I send you a loaf and here it will drop. I know I saw you quite clearly, but they said I was dreaming. I will send you a cake every second day. Your affectionate brother,

CHARLEY MORGAN.

All doubt was now at an end. Charley knew where I was, and though they called his vision dreaming I am sure that now I could communicate with the upper world and convince folks there of my presence here. The cake which I found flung down at 7:30 in the morning. On the second morning, long before this hour, I was at the place and had prepared to shout at intervals. Half past 7 peaceful, 8, 9 passed, but no sign came from above and no cake. At a relieved learned, Charley had been sent away for change of air under the supposition that his mind was deranged. I seemed now as badly off as ever, and for some time was in a frame of mind to which even the seals, I might have killed myself. The gayety, pranks and affection of these poor dumb creatures prevented me from utterly losing heart, and gradually my spirits returned, or rather my fortitude and determination to overcome all that it might please God that I should endure rather than do a deed so cowardly and wicked. Like Robinson Crusoe, of whom I often thought, I remembered that, though I had suffered and might suffer a great deal, I had not a great deal to be thankful for. I might have starved miserably, whereas I was in an almost miraculous manner supplied with daily food, and instead of utter and maddening solitude I was blessed with the society of these sensible, intelligent and affectionate animals. They would now wriggle and flap themselves up the rock to my fire, and I noticed that whenever my mood was anxiously low they threw particularly sought to attract my attention and provoke my caresses. I called the big male Mr. Jones, his mate, of course, Mrs. Jones, and the infant Scamp. They knew their names, quite well. The little one, which was the most teachable, even learned some me many tricks, which gave me, in spite of my trouble, many a hearty laugh.

About this time I had a new excitement in my family. One day I noticed at the entrance of the fissure which communicated with the sea a beautiful bird, round, wondering eyes. It represented a strange seal, which Mr. and Mrs. Jones, by various motions and barkings, seemed to be enticing into our society. Confidence in a plant of slow growth in the breast of every seal, and the young are drawn inward by parental affection like Mr. and Mrs. Jones. However, not to be too tedious, I succeeded in overcoming the confidence and affection of this animal also and subsequently of others, so that before my liberation I had a full nine friends, while there were three more shy ones, to which I was making advances. I was often surrounded by the whole nine together and likened myself to old Proteus, the old man of the sea, upon whom Ulysses pounced while taking his siesta in the midst of his seals. I did not, however, at all remark any disagreeable odor, which old Homer describes as arising from them. When too many of them came about me, I used to drive some back into the water, for their smell, though by no means intolerable, was not quite pleasant.

CHAPTER XXI.

ATTEMPTED ESCAPE VIA THE SEALS' TUNNEL.

Of course from the moment that I became aware of the seals' presence the thought naturally suggested itself to me that I might be able to get out through the same tunnel or boring by which the seals came in. Immediately after ascertaining the young seal in the manner which I have described, I took off my clothes and swam to the opening of the tunnel which was like a small cave at the side or side of the pool. Here I could only spectate a yard or two. Dropping one feet down and feeling for the opening. I discovered it. I returned, and waiting till the water of the pool was at its low est swam back again, hoping that the ebb of the tide would have bared this tunnel sufficiently to enable a swimmer to get through. I was disappointed in this. The water, even at low tide, filled the tunnel and stood above the ragged portal to the distance of between two and three feet. By diving I might get through, but not otherwise. This was a very sore disappointment, for I had at first fondly supposed that I could easily swim straight out into the open sea and so to Dho-Corrig, or better, to the shady cove where Mr. Watkins kept his boat and where there was a nice strand and easy landing place. Among my many disappointments, I think there was none which affected me like that. At one moment I saw a door of escape lying open before me, black indeed, but the entrance of a tunnel plainly in communication with the sea. The next, in a manner quite unexpected, I found that door barred—barred with water. And now I by no means gave up all hope of eventually making my escape by this avenue, for I was a good swimmer and diver, though I knew well that a man who would make his way under water from the point where I now was to the open sea would probably require three or four breaths in the course of his submarine journey. The source of this my second spring of hope in connection with the seals' tunnel will presently appear. The ventured, however, upon which I had my resolution fixed I postponed executing till I should have quite tamed my seals.

First, then, I measured very carefully the distance from Curry's Window to the seals' tunnel. I counted my steps, remembered, first treaded straight inward and then described a curve to the left along downward steeply and at times even sharply the whole way. This curve, continuing, became a recurve in the neighborhood of the pool, so that this part of the cavern was nearer to the outer sea by some 80 yards than I knew. I also noted the point in the farthest inland and away from the sea. The calculation was not easy, but here for the first and last time in my life I found my college trigonometry of some practical value to me. My object, of course, was to discover the distance from the mouth of the tunnel at the seal pool to the other mouth, by which it communicated with the sea. As the face of the sea cliff was nearly if not quite vertical, my problem was not complicated by the introduction of an ex tensal element. I merely added a few yards to the 80 I supposed myself to be from the outer sea, and for some time was in a frame of mind to which even the seals, I might have killed myself. The gayety, pranks and affection of these poor dumb creatures prevented me from utterly losing heart, and gradually my spirits returned, or rather my fortitude and determination to overcome all that it might please God that I should endure rather than do a deed so cowardly and wicked. I also noted the point in the farthest inland and away from the sea. The calculation was not easy, but here for the first and last time in my life I found my college trigonometry of some practical value to me. My object, of course, was to discover the distance from the mouth of the tunnel at the seal pool to the other mouth, by which it communicated with the sea. As the face of the sea cliff was nearly if not quite vertical, my problem was not complicated by the introduction of an ex tensal element. I merely added a few yards to the 80 I supposed myself to be from the outer sea, and for some time was in a frame of mind to which even the seals, I might have killed myself. The gayety, pranks and affection of these poor dumb creatures prevented me from utterly losing heart, and gradually my spirits returned, or rather my fortitude and determination to overcome all that it might please God that I should endure rather than do a deed so cowardly and wicked. Like Robinson Crusoe, of whom I often thought, I remembered that, though I had suffered and might suffer a great deal, I had not a great deal to be thankful for. I might have starved miserably, whereas I was in an almost miraculous manner supplied with daily food, and instead of utter and maddening solitude I was blessed with the society of these sensible, intelligent and affectionate animals. They would now wriggle and flap themselves up the rock to my fire, and I noticed that whenever my mood was anxiously low they particularly sought to attract my attention and provoke my caresses. I called the big male Mr. Jones, his mate, of course, Mrs. Jones, and the infant Scamp. They knew their names, quite well. The little one, which was the most teachable, even learned some me many tricks, which gave me, in spite of my trouble, many a hearty laugh.

About this time I had a new excitement in my family. One day I noticed at the entrance of the fissure which communicated with the sea a beautiful bird, round, wondering eyes. It represented a strange seal, which Mr. and Mrs. Jones, by various motions and barkings, seemed to be enticing into our society. Confidence is a plant of slow growth in the breast of every seal, and the young are drawn inward by parental affection like Mr. and Mrs. Jones. However, not to be too tedious, I succeeded in overcoming the confidence and affection of this animal also and subsequently of others, so that before my liberation I had a full nine friends, while there were three more shy ones, to which I was making advances. I was often surrounded by the whole nine together and likened myself to old Proteus, the old man of the sea, upon whom Ulysses pounced while taking his siesta in the midst of his seals. I did not, however, at all remark any disagreeable odor, which old Homer describes as arising from them. When too many of them came about me, I used to drive some back into the water, for their smell, though by no means intolerable, was not quite pleasant.

A smooth rock quarry slate and a bit of hard stone my pencil.

Sindbad the Sailor and the manner in which he escaped from his tomb by following the course taken by an animal slong a winding passage into the open air, and of the safety and delight of Aristomenes, the Messenian, who escaped in a similar manner, save for the fact that a stalactite roof had been the animal—a fox—hard by the tail.

But for the water I would have made my escape by the seals' tunnel and finding me and the brave Messenian would under my circumstances have been just as much at a stand as they were.

Now, I knew from experience that I could dive 30 yards with ease in clear water. Consequently, diving at my full rate of speed, I would have to take breath at least twice before reaching the sea. Then, after having got a good start in the tunnel, with the expectation of striking against rock with every forward drive, I was seriously a very difficult thing from under water swimming in the unobstructed sea. Moreover, in my train of that distance would at once expect to see anything, owing to the absence of light, and therefore should in all probability gropa my way painfully along. It might be imagined that all these considerations would at once and altogether remove from my mind the thought that I might make my escape through the seals' tunnel. But they did not. I argued that the fact that the tunnel was quite flooded at its entrance did not prove that it would be flooded all the way through. Possibly, I said, the tunnel is only submarine at low water, while, even at low water along this wall of cliff. Even if the tunnel through most of its extent were flooded, it might well be that at certain points here and there it was not flooded, and that I might be able here and there to come to the surface and breathe and find myself swimming in a cave. With these shrieks of this description I might succeed in getting through. Provided they occurred at convenient intervals.

It was the 4th day of August when I first attempted the tunnel. I took my fishing line, and fastening one end of it securely to a pointed projection of rock near by the reel upon a piece of timber. This, of course, was to serve as a clew. In the event of failure I desired to have some surer method than that of mars feeling and groping to guide me back into the place which was my home and away from which I could not even contrive to exist for 48 hours. I may add that before I seriously attempted the tunnel I had gradually accustomed my seals to see me without my clothes. Naturally I feared to frighten away these creatures, upon whose industry I lived. Approaching the entrance of the tunnel, I dived, holding in my left hand my timber upon which the fishing line was wound, and entered the tunnel, letting the reel wind off as I went this thread from a reel. I groped along—it could hardly be called diving—with my back close to the roof of the tunnel, as it, as I calculated, half my power of retaining breath was exhausted. At this point I put a knot on the cord, and half swimming, half drawing myself forward by the cord which I held now in my right hand, retraced my way to the pool. When I rose to the surface of the pool, I was aware that I could have gone some distance farther without any distress. Coming to land, I drew in the line and found by the knot that I had made only 12 yards. That represented 24 yards to and fro, which was a considerable falling off from the 60 yards which in unobstructed water I knew to be the length of my average submarine performance. The seals splashed about and made joyful cries on my reappearance. They were now quite accustomed to me, both on land and in the water. I dressed, and thinking I had done enough for the first attempt dictated from a renewal of the enterprise till next day. The next day, however, was stormy. Indeed will weather now appeared for more than a fortnight. During this wild weather I made no attempt upon the tunnel. I knew that I had been lucky enough to get through the whole way into the ocean I would be lunged about in the surf and break ers at the foot of the clifts and would never be able to get home. Every day I took an observation of the weather at Curry's Window. After a fortnight and two days the weather grew mild and having waited three days more to allow the agitation of the sea to subside I renewed my efforts to penetrate the tunnel. This time I determined to proceed at least three yards beyond the knot. I did so, and still finding the rock above me was about to return when, as I was turning round and kicking, I discovered that my foot made no noise. This, of course, was because that I had agitated the surface of the water. Turning again and making a motion forward and upward, I suddenly found my head in the air. My delight may be imagined. The air of the underworld or airholes for which I had hoped was discovered. It might be the beginning of that second gallery reaching to the sea for which I had hoped. Resting for awhile, I began to examine this vacant space and discover its nature and capabilities as well as I could in the dark. I feared it might be so small that at full tide the water might fill it, but that was not so.

I raised my voice, and the echoes clearly proved that it was of great extent. As for my hope that it might be the beginning of a long reach of tunnel, half air and half water, I was greatly disappointed to find that such was not the case. I could swim all round it. At one point the edges were so inclined that I could get clear out of the water and stand upright. As far as I could reach with my hand I could feel free space above me. This blowhole at all events would be at my disposal, whether the tide was at flood or at ebb. Before starting from the seals' pool I had made a series of knots upon my line, each of which I made on the occasion of my first attempt, each knot representing a yard. The distance from the entrance of the tunnel to the farthest point of this cavel I found now by means of these knots to be 28 yards. In the event of my discovering the tunnel at this point in my return to the seals, and still 32 yards to the distance—the space that I could traverse without being obliged to turn back—I might now consider myself as being within 136 yards of the open sea and as having virtually succeeded in my task. No doubt I had a huge extent of water to get through still, but I was not daunted. On the contrary, I was filled with hope. I had made my first blowhole, and so could find others. "Who knows," I said, "but after passing through another submarine tunnel of half a dozen yards I might find myself in an airy gallery running almost to the edge of the cliff?" I again entered the water and swam slowly all around the edge of my cave, holding on by the rock and feeling with my feet. Eventually I thought that I had found the continuation of the tunnel, and though I could not be sure, yet quite satisfied, and more than satisfied, with the result of this exploration, I resolved to get home now. So I dived again, and following my clew reappeared in the seals' pool and that day dined in better spirits than I had been at any time since my descent into this terrible cavern.

DIET OF THE GREAT.

Favorite Dishes of the World's Illustrious Generals, Philosophers and Poets.

"Men is what he eats," said Feuerbach, the German philosopher, or, as he expressed it in his native language, "Der mensch ist was er isst," a play of words which is not without its deep meaning. Man's food is never without influence on his character, and the choice he makes in his meals without a certain reflection of his character. John the Baptist's eating of locusts and wild honey was indicative of his mind and motives, as was Zoroaster's predilection for bread and water ceases of his ethics and doctrines. Plato was satisfied with honey, bread, vegetables and fruit. Mohammed preferred mutton and milk to all other dishes and drinks. Hannibal, the Carthaginian warrior, lived on olives, while the Roman General Sulla's favorite meats were wild ass, chickens drowned in Falerian wine, ostrich brain and mails.

Charles the Great was a lover of venison. Henry IV of France had a gluttonous appetite for oysters; Frederick the Great for polenta, a sort of Italian pudding; Emperor William I of Germany for lobsters and oysters. Napoleon I was a passionate drinker of coffee, of which he took 20 to 25 cups daily.

Artists, poets and philosophers evince a larger variety in the choice of their meals and beverages. Goethe was very fond of champagne, Schiller of wine. Klopstock indulged in truffle pastry, smoked salmon and peas. Lessing's favorite dish was lentil soup, a predilection which he shared with Kant, while Leibnitz delighted in apple cake. Torquato Tasso was a lover of sweet things and heaped his salad with sugar. So did Moses Mendelssohn, who mourned the impossibility of sweetening sugar.

Byron took only one daily meal, consisting principally of old Chester cheese, pickles, red cabbage, wine or liquors. He used to drink great quantities of tea. Bismarck in his younger days was very fond of hard boiled eggs and bognes, which he preferred to "pretzel and beer," a beverage which he considers the chief cause of German pedantic politics and lack of resolute and harmonious action.

William II, the present emperor of Germany, loves his wine and prefers the sparkling juice of the Rhine, which not infrequently becomes his bogus. Champagne he avoids, lest "it cause his heart to run away with his head," as he once remarked, but probably because it is too French for him.—Baltimore Sun.

Brain Surgery.

Sawing out sections of the skull in the treatment of brain tumors to develop symmetrically seems a rather delicate and dangerous operation, but it is one that has on several occasions been performed with perfect success. Children apparently in a condition of hopeless idiocy have been treated upon this plan and are in prospect of developing the faculties usual in those of like age. The operation has been performed in some undully hardened permits growth, and the clouded intellect may become clear and normal.

Attention has been called to cases in which small lead bullets were supposed, upon the slik ligatures used in internal operations. In one case an abdominal tumor was removed, some years later there were calculi present in quantity that caused great distress. It was supposed that the foreign property was present in the silk, and that this acted as a nucleus around which the dirty particles gather.—New York Logger.

Population of the Ocean.

A striking proof of the vastness and variety of the population of the sea has been furnished by the results of explorations made by a committee of the zoological department of the British association in that part of the Irish sea surrounding the isle of Man.

Over 1,000 species of marine animals collected, 224 had never before been found in that region, 38 were previously unknown to the British waters, and 17 were entirely new to science. Indeed they were animals whose existence had never been suspected.

If such discoveries reward a few weeks of searching in so small an area of sea, how many volumes would be required to contain a list of the still undiscovered inhabitants of the great oceans? —Youth's Companion.

An Effective Whistle.

One of the popular English authors of the day was wholly incapacitated from work by a lady who lived next door and strummed through Handel's "Messiah." His idea of the inviolability of an Englishman's home did not allow him to send in any message, and he was at his wits' end till he saw in a shilly paper that steam whistles could be bought to fit onto kettle spouts. He provided himself with one and put it on the kitchen fire in the room nearest the singer. As soon as the whistle began he went out. Of course the bottom came off the kettle, but it cost little to solder it on again, and after two or three solderings the lady took the hint.—San Francisco Argonaut.

A Bottomless Lake In Sweden.

In Thomas Nashe's "Terrors of the Night"—published in 1594—he says that Lake Wetter, Sweden, is bottomless. He also tells other peculiar things respecting it. "For if no fowls flee at it, but it is found to death nor anio mean pass but is murmured like a statue of marble. Axyle ye inhabitants round about it are deafened with ye hideous roar of his waters when ont of its midst as out of Mons Gibel or Vesuvius a stinking smoak issues that well

The case of W. E. McKenzie against David Turner to recover one dollar alleged to be due for job work, was called in Justice Gossman's court at 10 o'clock on Monday and a change of venue taken before Judge Spalding. The case was decided in favor of defendant the plaintiff paying the costs. The particulars of the case seem to be that some time since Mrs. Turner ordered some cards printed at the the Times office, giving explicit directions as to how the job should be set and when the proof was submitted to her the job was not such as had been ordered and she declined to accept it, had took the copy to another office and had it done. Later McKenzie sent a bill to her for $1.00 for cards. She went to the office tendered payment and demanded the cards, which, of course were not forthcoming so she did not pay for them. McKenzie then sent a bill to Dave threatening to sue if it was not paid. Mr. Turner also called for the cards but did not get them and hence the suit.

STRIKE MEETING.

A Mass Meeting Held in the Opera House Last Saturday Evening.

A. B. Cashion, secretary of the local order of the American Railway Union, acting under the advice of the chief officers of the union, arranged for a public meeting in the city, to allow the citizens an opportunity to express their sentiments in regard to the strike on the Great Northern railway. The opera house was secured, the meeting was held last Saturday evening, and was presided over Mr. W. H. Norrie.

Mr. E. J. Montague made a short address about as follows:

According to the spirit of our laws and institutions, the laborer is entitled to a reasonable share of the profits in the accumulation of the property produced by his labor. It appears that the Great Northern Railroad company had made a mistake and reduced the wages of many of its laborers so low as to place upon those laborers more than their share of the burden to bear of the present depressed condition of affairs. It is too late in this age to attempt to turn backward the hour hand on the dial of time and reduce the laborer to the condition of serfdom.

Laboring men, be moderate in your demands; know that you are right, then demand what is your right, in a manner befitting the dignity of American freemen. Do not be rash enough to destroy property which is the fruit of your labor. You cause cannot be advanced by violation of the law. It should be your mission to protect, rather than to destroy property. Pursue a dignified, manly course; give no reason for charges against you of violations of the law. You will thus be acting in accordance with the true principles of the government under which you live, and will enjoy the esteem, confidence and support of the community.

Editor Steenerson was next introduced, and he gave statistics to show the financial condition of the Great Northern, and why it does not pay more dividends upon the stock. In his prosecution of the freight rate case against the Great Northern company Gov. Mr. Steenerson gained considerable insight into the workings of that concern, and is in a position to know whether or not the earnings of the railroad will pay a dividend on the money actually invested or not. His speech in substance was as follows:

Mr. chairman, ladies and gentlemen: When the otherevening I read in the daily paper a communication from a member of the A. R. U. complaining of the attitude of the city toward the strike and the able editorial on the same subject I became at once very much interested and could not rid myself of the notion that we were not treating this important matter right. The question involved cannot be evaded. The strike is either right or it is wrong, and we should take a stand one way or the other. A strike is a serious matter, and when it takes place upon one of our great trans-continental railways, it naturally causes much suffering and inconvenience so that such action should not be taken for light or trivial causes. A strike is in one sense a war, it is an individual war carried on by the laborers on the one hand and capital or employer on the other, and war of any kind should never be resorted to except as a last resort and for a just cause.

Is this strike justified? Who is the employer in this case and who the laborers or employes. The employer is the G. N. Ry. Co. What is that? I venture to say not a single man in this hall can tell me. It is a most complex piece of machinery. It embraces at least six different railway companies some of whom again consists of many consolidated corporations. It is a sort of multum in parvi affair, one within another. First the G. N. Ry. Co., has leased the St. P. M. & M. which company owns the main lines and the line to the Pacific.

This company builds the road and owns and leases them to the G. N. It issues bonds and stocks generally for more than the road cost, and then as rental the G. N. agrees to pay all interest on debt and 6 per cent additional on itsstock. So you can see that the investment it makes is absolutely safe and its stock per whether it does a paying business or not as long as the guaranty of the G. N. is good. It may build costly lines in new countries that are operated at a loss, and yet the dividend and the interest being fixed charges on the G. N. must always be paid.

Thus the people in well settled sections are obliged to pay the expense of opening and running new lines into the wilderness. This is not all, these fixed charges must be met whether employees are fairly paid or not. I desire to call your particular attention to the nature of these fixed charges. An enterprise be it railroad or a factory is started with, say 20 million capital and borrows 20 million more at interest. The 20 million of stock must take its chances of prosperous times or hard times. It is a venture like any other. It may return a profit or dividend or it may not. First the interest on the debt must be paid in order to keep on doing business, then the wages of labor, then the profit on capital stock or investment. But in the case of the St. P. M. & M. this is changed. Interest first, then the guaranteed dividend and then the wages, and when hard times of industrial or commercial depression comes it is labor wages that are first to be cutin order that both interest and dividend may be first paid. In this way when the G. N. leased the St. P. M. & M., there was created 20 million of stock into a fixed charge, to be preferred over wages of labor. This stock we have reason to believe never represented any actual investment.

Then comes the other five companies Wilmar & Souix Falls, Duluth Watertown & Pacific, Minneapolis Central, Eastern Ry. of Minnesota and Minneapolis Union Ry. Co.

These are called "proprietary lines" because the G. N. is proprietor or owner of their stock.

Each is first bonded for a large sum then stocked for an additional large sum, much more it would seem than the possible cost of the properties. For convenience of reference I will give their designations by number.

No. 1. St. P. M. & M. R. R.
No. 2. Wilmar, Sioux Falls R. R.
No. 3. Duluth Watertown & Pacific R. R.
No. 4. Montana Central R. R.
No. 5. Eastern Ry. of Minn.
No. 6. Minneapolis Union Ry. Co.

I will give the bonded debt, the stock and the mileage, and the stock and debt per mile of each as follows:

			Per Mile.	Mileage.
No. 1.	$65,310,734 Bonds		$30,697.90
	20,000,000 Stock		9,401.91	5,758.5
No. 2.	7,515,000 Bonds		17,886.90
	1,879,000 Stock		4,471.00	146.99
No. 3.	1,750,000 Stock		10,416.66	69.84
	720,000 Bonds		10,435.65
No. 4.	8,000,000 Bonds		30,303.03	236.50
	5,000,000 Stock		21,969.92
No. 5.	4,700,000 Bonds		64,000.00	73.39
	5000,000 Stock		66,070.31
No. 6.	2,800,000 Bonds		548,754.54	5.06
	500,000 Stock		100,686.44
				4,289.3

Total, $187,550,734 stock and bonds or $37,958 per mile of road.

One would think that this impense load of bonds and stock was enough to carry, but this is not all that this wonderful Great Northern Railway Co. has. It is itself stocked for $25,000,000, and owes $15,000,000, making $40,000,000, and it does not own one mile of railroad, either. It has to pay interest and divi endson all of the debt and capitalization of these six companies, and besides on this forty millions of its own. Is any wonder, having such a load to carry, that it has to charges exhorbitant rates on the one hand and refuse wages to the operation public on the other in times like these. One would not complain so much if it was actual capital these figures represent, but it is not. Adding the Great Northern's debt and stock to the other and it makes agrand total of $177,540,755, capitalized and bonded debt for this system, or at the rate of $41,370 per mile of road.

Now, as to the employes. They are all engaged in an arduous and hazardous employment, and a more industrious, intelligent, reliable and faithful set of men could not be found on the face of the earth. Ought they not to have a reasonable pay? Surely, no one will chiim that any man can live on $1 per day and support a family. I am told that in August last, before the first cut in wages, that these men were then paid less for similar service than was paid by any transcontinental railway line in the whole country, and this schedule it is that the Am. Railway Union have asked should be restored. Is this unreasonable? But even then the company places the greatest burden of hard times upon these men, for they do'not work on fixed salaries on the main line: they have a schedule of so much per mile, and if there is little or no business they are laid off. I am told of one instance where a brakeman who had a family to support, actually paid out $30 for board while on the road and earned about $28; and this was not a rare instance. Labor reduced to starvation wages becomes servile labor. It makes little difference whether a man is driven by the necessities of his family to labor constantly for existence, or is driven with a lash. Can a laborer reduced to such wages remain an independent citizen and educate his children for the duties of citizenship, and are we not all interested in this? It seems to me this is a vital question upon which the future welfare of the whole country depends. But I am told that it is the policy of the city authorities not to take a stand for right and justice in the matter, because we want to "stand in with the railroad" and get railroad shops located here. What a cringing ridiculous position! It is said of the great Henry Clay that when he was a candidate for the presidency, some scheming politicians approached him with a plan whereby a certain support could be secured if he would do certain things. Clay replied no, to do that would be wrong. Well, said the politicians, then you will loose the presidency. Then Clay turned and replied in the memorable words, which have been the inspiration of American manhood and citizenship for more than a generation: "I would rather be right than be president."

While I do not look for such exalted sentiments and manhood in these degenerate days, I cannot conceive of either you or I were in authority we could at least say, "I would rather be right than have the shops!" Refuse to take a stand for the right in a crisis like this, for such a cowardly reason! It is unmanly and ridiculous.

That is "to crook the pregnant hinges of the knee, that thrift may follow fawning" with a vengeance. [Great applause.]

No, my fellow citizens, let us stand up for the just and the right, let us uphold the dignity of labor, for it is labor that has made the world what it is to-day. Labor has created our magnificent civilization. Show me the history of the advancement of mankind from servitude to freedom and independence and I will show you the history of civilization, of freedom and of morality from the beginning of society to the present day.

This is a momentous struggle and nothing, since the great war for freedom, the war of the rebellion, can compare with it in importance and all. Let us, therefore, give these struggling men our support, both moral and material, and bid them God speed in the battle of right and shall have achieved their well deserved victory. (Great applause.)

Alex. McKinnon, P. M. Ringdal and H. Bendixon were also called upon and made short addresses.

Mr. Steenerson then offered the following resolution which was adopted unanimously:

Resolved, by the citizens of Crookston in mass meeting assembled, That in shifting the burdens of a business depression and consequent loss of revenue upon the shoulders of faithful hard worked laborers and trainmen who are the least able to bear it, the Great Northern Railway company have committed a great injustice, and we sympathize with the striking men whom it sought to reduce to a condition akin to slavery and we earnestly appeal to the generosity of the management of the company to meet the unfortunate emergency in our industrial life, rather than by a reduction of dividends and interest charges thus the reduction of wages; that we commend the manly, peaceable and considerate and loyalty under trying circumstances of these struggling men, and that we sincerely hope that the company will consent to their just demands and thereby set an example which will in the end redound to its benefit and leave a warmer spot in the hearts of the people and bring cheer to many an honest house.

A Regular Beehive

One of the busiest places just now is the store where orders are filled with seeds, bulbs and plants at the Vick Seed House, Rochester, N. Y. This firm has been in the habit of putting up carefully selected collections of vegetable and also flower seeds which they mail at one, two, five or more dollars. These collections contain at least 40 per cent. more than the amount would indicate, and are so well adapted to family use that thousands of families order them annually. If you are not decided as to just what you want we suggest that you send at once for one or more of these collections. This house will supply all your wants for the garden.

The judgment tax sale occurs at the court house, May 7th.

MERCHANT OF VENICE.

To be Presented by the Shakespeare Club Next Thursday Evening.

The members of the Shakespeare club are busy rehearsing every evening, the "Merchant of Venice," which will be presented at the opera house next Thursday evening. Appropriate costumes are being constructed, and the play will be put on the boards in first-class style. As will be seen from the cast below, the best dramantic and histrionic talent in the city is found among the performers. Who that has heard one of the readings given by John Crawford, or Miss Emcock, or R. S. Knudson, or W. F. Hitchcock, or any of the rest of the participants, can doubt for a minute that they will do credit to the characters which they will represent? This will be the first Shakespearian play ever presented in this city by home talent and it promises to be a treat to the lovers of legitimate drama. A good orchestra will be engaged and arrangements are being made to secure an experienced stage manager.

A Strike Situation Here.

Up to date there has been no material change here in the situation of the strike on the Great Northern railway. No regular trains have passed through this city yet. The passenger trains that were left at Minot, Devils Lake and other places have been moved east and west with the help of United States marshals, but no regular train service has been established. The trains on the branch lines out of here have been run regularly—the conductors acting as brakemen.

The Northern Pacific—the popular old Pioneer line—is taking care of the extra freight, passenger and mail business in good shape, and no inconvenience is felt here except as regards communication with a few points reached only by the Great Northern. It is to be hoped—for the sake of the people affected by the strike—that the difficulty will soon be straightened out satisfactorily and regular train service resumed.

Hardships of the Strike.

It is said that a grocery famine is imminent at Fisher. The sudden strike caught them with a large supply and the impassable condition of the wagon roads rendered hauling from Crookston impossible and they could not even get out to the N. P. road for loads. Several of our business men had important business in Fisher but could get there neither by wagon or railroad and had to forego the trip.

Practical Sympathy.

Merchants of St. Cloud, Grand Forks, Great Falls, Butte and other places have offered striking railroad men all the credit they want.

Flax Seed.

At the rate tint orders for flax seed are coming in we shall not get enough to warrant ordering a carload. All who intend to order should do so at once, before another issue of the JOURNAL, when we will announce the result. Many have already written us to ask them whether we can supply them with seed. To these we desire to say that we can not undertake to answer each letter in that way. A general notice in the JOURNAL must suffice for all. If they can comply with the terms (which are cash on delivery) and if we get enough orders to fill a car, notice will then be given and the matter placed in the hands of whoever may be chosen by the interested parties. We stated plainly last week that we do not intend to do any thing further in this matter than to ascertain whether a carload can be used, and if we find it can we shall turn the matter over to some person, whoever those interested may designate to order the flax and attend to the balance of the business.

Mrs. Mary Smith, mother of Mrs. John Stroot of the town of Belgium, died last week, and was buried in this city on Monday last. She was 72 years of ago.

TO BE EVICTED.

Settlers in Kittson County Who Expect to Lose Their Lands.

Replying to the chairman of the settlers association of Kittson county, who has asked Mr. Steenerson to defend the case of the settlers upon indemnity lands in said county, in their suit against the Great Northern Co., Mr. Steenerson says:

CROOKSTON, Minn., April 19th, 1884.

Asmund Johnson, Chairman of committee of settlers.

Dear Sir:—You ask me to state what if anything, can be done for the settlers on idemnity lands in your vicinity who are unable or unwilling to purchase the land from R. R. Co. These lands were all patented to the state and deeded to the R. R. Co. under its grant, so that it holds the absolute title and ownership of the lands. None of these settlers I am informed, settled as early as 1878 or 1877 even, and hence do not come within the class of settlers sought to be protected by the nets of Congress of 1874 and 1876 and of the legislature of Minnesota for 1877 extending the time for the completion of the road on the condition that the rights of settlers should be saved and secured. It is wrong for me to hold out false hopes to settlers under the circumstances, and it is impossible to truly say, that as matters now stand, these settlers will not eventually be ejected from the lands they occupy.

The only lawful remedy that I can think of is the claim sometimes advanced, that these lands were erroneously and wrongfully certified and patented to the company upon a too favorable construction of the grant as to where and for what indemnity lands were given.

These questions were not properly considered by the land department when lands were certified and patented.

It is within our power to ask for a rehearing of these questions before the proper officers at Washington.

I am willing to make a motion for each settler and apply to the land department for an order to show cause on the part of the company why these lands should not be deeded back to the United States under the act for the adjustment of land grants of March 3rd, 1887.

It seems to me that such a proceeding would at least give us a chance to be heard, and while it should be pending all settlers would be undisturbed, but the meantime congressional or legislative relief may be had to save these poor people from being thrown out of house and home by a greedy corporation which has abandoned the purpose of its creation and is no longer a railroad but a land company, doing little or no service for what it was paid all its lands to forever perform at reasonable rates.

Respectfully,
H. STEENERSON.

Journalistic Fluctuations.

The ups and downs of the Red River Valley are many and peculiar. Some two weeks ago it was taken possession of by the sheriff under chattel mortgages held by A. D. Stephens and W. E. McKenzie and the plant taken out and stored in another building; it was advertised to be sold by the sheriff, but the sale was postponed two days at the request of Editor Bydal, who wanted more time to raise the money to redeem the plant. When the day of sale came it was again postponed—this time until April 30th. On Tuesday the 24th, Bydal replevined the outfit, which was taken back to the Dalen office; yesterday the mortgagees re-bonded the plant, which was again dragged out and stored away. As there is a good deal of heavy material in the outfit, we would suggest that the wholeconcern be put on wheels to facilitate moving. Bydal claims that the mortgages are illegal and that if the mortgagees attempt to sell the plant they will get themselves into trouble. What thenext move will be the Lord only knows.

State vs. Demars.

The case of the state against Henry Demars, charged with illegal voting in the Fifth ward, at the recent city election, was heard before Justice Grossman on Sunday and Wednesday, but for lack of sufficient testimony to convict, the case was dismissed. Witnesses who had previously made sworn statements against him, when put on the witness stand, failed to corroborate those statements. Their memories had become defective in the interim, and "they couldn't remember." A. A. Miller appeared for the state and E. M. Stanton for the defense.

HE HAS CLIMBED THE LADDER.

Governor Brown Has Prospered In Business and Politics.

D. Russell Brown, who has been elected governor of Rhode Island for a third term, is a native of the Wooded Nutmeg State, but has been in business in Providence for upward of 24 years. He is the senior partner and founder of the house of Brown, Bros. & Co., the largest dealers in mill supplies in the United States, and being distinctively a man of the people may be considered a fair illustration of the sort of success that may be achieved in the business world by intelligent persistence on the part even of those who begin at the bottom of the ladder.

Governor Brown was born in Bolton, Conn., March 28, 1848. He was a farmer's boy and was educated in the district schools and in academies at Manchester and Hartford. After quitting school he secured employment in a hardware shop at Rockville and at the end of a couple of years was made head clerk and salesman for a big Hartford firm, where he remained till 1870, when he went to Providence to take charge of the mill supply house of Cyrus White.

Within a few months Mr. Brown formed a partnership which bought Mr. White's business and carried it on for seven years under the firm name of Butler, Brown & Co. Upon the death of the senior partner, W. C. Butler, in 1877, Mr. Brown, in company with his brother, H. Martin Brown, and Charles H. Child, formed the present firm.

In 1874 Mr. Brown married Miss Isabel Barrows, and they have three children—one son and two daughters. Their home is one of the prettiest in Providence, according to the comprehensive idea of a lady scribe, who says, "It is a very large house, fitted with stairways, bric-a-brac, hookcases, fireplaces and rugs." Mrs. Brown is an exceptionally well informed woman and is very active in charitable work, besides entertaining a great deal.

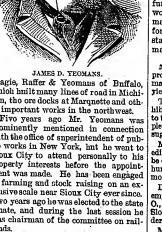
Governor Brown is deeply interested in the charitable, social and educational institutions of Rhode Island and is a member of almost every society in the state that has for its object the encouragement of any particular branch of art, science, literature, historical research or athletics, besides many Republican organizations and various Masonic societies.

HE KNOWS ABOUT RAILROADS.

James D. Yeomans' Qualifications For Interstate Commerce Commissioner.

James D. Yeomans of Sioux City, who succeeds Judge McDill on the interstate commerce commission, is a practical railroad man of many years' experience. He is a native of New York and was born in Cattaraugus county April 31, 1846. After getting a fair high school education he began active life in the railroad business at 17 years of age, first as an office boy and then as a brakeman on the New York and Erie railroad. He was rapidly advanced to the position of superintendent, serving some time in each of the subordinate grades.

During the war he ran trains for the government military operations in Georgia and other places in the south. After the war was over he became interested in the construction of the Buffalo, Philadelphia and New York railroad and afterward became superintendent of that road. In 1870 he became a member of the railroad contracting firm of



JAMES D. YEOMANS.

Cragie, Raffer & Yeomans of Buffalo, which built many lines of road in Michigan, the one down at Marquette and other important works in the northwest.

Five years ago Mr. Yeomans was prominently mentioned in connection with the office of superintendent of public works in New York, but he went to Sioux City to attend personally to his property interests before the appointment was made. He has been engaged in farming and stock raising on an extensive scale near Sioux City ever since. Two years ago he was elected to the state senate, and during the last session he was chairman of the committee on railroads.

Commissioner Yeomans is a man of large physique and fine personal appearance and is very popular with his colleagues of all political parties. He has long been a personal and political friend of President Cleveland and Postmaster General Bissell.

MINISTER THURSTON'S DIPLOMACY

He Has Been Courting an American Girl and Wife at the American Government.

That the golden thread of a love story runs through all the complicated meshes of diplomacy in which Minister Thurston of Hawaii has been entangled for the past year or more is evident from the announcement that he is about to marry Miss Harriet W. Potter of St. Joseph, Mich., the young woman who was until recently the cashier of the Hawaiian volcano cyclorama at the California Midwinter fair and had previously filled the same position while the cyclorama was at the Columbian exposition. Mr. Thurston has been a warm friend of Miss Potter's family for a number of years and has been a frequent visitor at St. Joseph, where he has a large number of acquaintance, but none of them suspected what was going on until the public announcement of the engagement was made.

Miss Potter is a very attractive young woman of 23, slightly above the medium height and of the blond type, her hair being light brown and her eyes large and blue. She was born in St. Joseph and graduated from the public school there three years ago, afterward taking charge of one of the classes. She was made a member of the staff of the St. Joseph Daily Press for awhile. In manner Miss Potter is very unassuming, but she possesses a quiet dignity that always commands respect and admiration. She is said to be a clever and entertaining conversationist and is unusually accomplished.

Minister Thurston is about 38 years of age and has been a widower for five or six years. He has a son 9 years old, who is now in Washington under the care of the minister's mother. Mr. Thurston was born in Hawaii. His parents were among the first American missionaries who went to the islands in 1820. He is well known as a lawyer in Honolulu and has been prominent for a long time in the republican movement there. He was the practical leader of the revolutionary cabinet of 1893 and was one of the commissioners sent to Washington by the provisional government to negotiate the treaty of annexation. That he is a thorough annexationist is proved by the treaty he has successfully negotiated with Miss Potter.

Fable of the Rum Moloch.

In the village of Smithville a brand new Rum Moloch was set up. The village had never had a Rum Moloch within its borders before, and some of the villagers exulted in the enterprise of the town. "It will improve trade," said they, "for the farmhands will now come to town to see the Rum Moloch and incidentally buy groceries and things." They forgot that the farmhands were then buying groceries and things, but not incidentally. The Wise Man of the village shook his head. He had heard what a Moloch is used for, and he told his fellow townsmen about it. "We'll wait and see," cried some of the more self-confident. Others cried "This is terrible! Lead the way, and we will pitch the Rum Moloch out of town." So the Wise Man strode into the presence of the Moloch and laid his hands on it to pull it over. The crafty Owner of the idol, however, had slyly smeared it all over with fresh black paint, which the Wise Man instantly discovered. "Ah!" he cried, looking in disgust at his blackened hands. "This is dirty work. Let us wait until the Moloch is dry." So the excitable people waited for one day. When they returned, the crafty Owner had fired up, and the Moloch was now redhot, the paint thoroughly dry. But in the Moloch's redhot arms the Wise Man, in agony, saw his own dear boy burned to death. This story teaches that it is better to attack the rum power at the risk of soiled hands than of burned flesh.—Golden Rule.

And Joy Would Sit at the Hearth.

If the workingmen should suddenly take it into their heads to take the earnings that they hitherto have used for intoxicating liquors and spend them for furniture, how much do you suppose would be let loose upon the furniture market? Not less than $6,000,000 in four weeks. There would then be no stagnation of trade in the furniture market.—Exchange.

Tea Planting In the Caucasus.

The partial failure of the experiments thus far made in the culture of Caucasian tea is attributed to a want of expert knowledge in the planting. As it is confidently believed that the climatic conditions and the nature of the soil in certain regions of the Caucasus are entirely favorable to tea culture, new and more practical experiments are about to be made. A large consignment of young plants, with the soil still attached to the roots and carefully packed in wooden cases, has just been landed at Batoum, direct from Hankow. This shipment is accompanied by 19 Chinese planters and an Englishman who has had a long experience on China plantations.—London News.

A Complete Installation.

One of the most complete electric light installations in existence has been decided on for a colliery in Lanarkshire, Scotland. The plant is divided into three parts. In the first the dynamo will run 500 lamps in the colliery itself, to be distributed both throughout the pit and above ground. Another installation is devoted to the lighting of 24 workmen's cottages, which are about 700 yards from the colliery, there being three lights in each cottage, or a total of 102 lamps in all. The third installation consists of a complete electric pumping plant capable of delivering 100 gallons of water per minute from the adjacent river to the colliery.

Schoolboy "Cigarette Fiends."

The Tariff in the Senate.

The cry for prompt action on the tariff question has again been urged from the quarters mainly by those who find themselves doing less business than formerly and who are willing to surrender any great cause and principle of protection for a possible pecuniary gain. This is wrong, entirely and utterly wrong.

Should this tessellated tariff become law and go into effect next July, only four months before the congressional elections, the country will be doomed to experience the evil effects of the policy of prostration for a period of nearly four years—certainly till after the great destroying angel has left the White House.

There is no reason why the tessellated tariff should not be further delayed for a few months. There has hitherto been no such great desire to force it upon the people. No special session of congress was deemed necessary for its enactment. It affects the people and affects them vitally. Any effort made now to rush this measure, before the people have had an opportunity of expressing their will in November, will be a cowardly act. It affects the people. It lowers their wages. Let the people say if they want their wages lowered.

An Exception to Nature's Laws.

According to the general laws of nature, when a body is cooled it becomes heavier then when it is hot. There is at least one exception to this rule, and that is in the case of water. Now, before you read further, shut your eyes and see if you can figure out just exactly how important this exception is to humanity. Cool a can or other vessel of water from, say, 70 degrees down to 40 degrees and then pour it into a tub of water the temperature of which is any place between 50 and 80 degrees. You will notice that the cold water will immediately sink to the bottom, and right here is an explanation of the mystery of river and lake circulation. But when your cooling process goes below 39 degrees, strange as it may seem, the water becomes lighter than it was when it was only one or two degrees warmer, and if poured into a tub heated as directed above will stay on top or immediately rise to that position. Now, let us suppose that water continued to get heavier as it got colder, as other bodies do; what would happen? Ice as soon as it formed would sink to the bottom, layer upon layer, and in this way seas, lakes and rivers would be frozen solid. But one freezing would do for all time, as the rays of the sun would not penetrate the thin skim of cold summer water to a sufficient depth to thaw the rigid mass. For us it is fortunate that there are "exceptions to all rules."—St. Louis Republic.

Treatment For Wounds.

Dr. Eichler, in the "Aerzt. Prakt," advocates Pern balsam as a dressing for wounds incurred wanting to heal quickly, its points of adaptation being that it adheres well and covers the entire surface of the wounds; it has a drying effect, but stimulates granulations, and following application a scab is formed under which healing goes on. Dr. Eichler states that its use is especially indicated in the treatment of wounds having a tendency to manifest putrefaction or partial gangrene, and in injuries of the hands and fingers the results are excellent. In practice, after cooptition of the margins of the wound, Pern balsam is poured over the entire surface, which is then covered with thin layers of gauze moistened with balsam and ordinary dressing. The latter may be left in place for several days, though it is an advantage to renew the outer dressing daily and moisten the gauze with the balsam without removing it from the wound. —New York Tribune.

SOUTH AND NORTH.

A BRAVE SOUTHERNER ANSWERS ABE HEWITT.

Judge Lee Lectures the North on Fraud Brains—They Are Not Clever Enough to Take Advantage of Favorable Situations. Not So Unscrupulous as the Southrons.

"Now that Abe Hewitt has raised this question about southern politicians having less brains than the Yankees," said Judge Lee of Georgia, "I want to tell the truth about this thing with no Eli Perkins imagination. The fact is, we southerners have always had brains enough to control this government. Think of it—we cotton states actually make a tariff for New England. We control congress. We are the nation today, and these mudsill Yankees are sitting down in the hall."

"How do you get so many congressmen?" asked Bourke Cockran.

"Why, Abe Hewitt's ignorant Yankees gave them to us. The Yankees voted themselves out, and we voted ourselves in. Why, do you know that little brainy South Carolina, with 462,000 people, has seven congressmen, while Massachusetts, with 2,215,000 people, has only 12?"

"And Mississippi?"

"She's got 544,000 people and seven congressmen, while Pennsylvania, with 5,148,000 people, has only 28. In one district in Georgia 80,000 southern people or 2,860 white voters, make a congressman, while it always takes 171,000 Yankees, or 85,000 voters, to make a congressman. But you've got representation according to your brains—small brains, small representation."

"But do the negroes vote?" asked a northern congressman.

"Niggers vote! I should say not, and they never will. Your Yankee idiots made them citizens—made them voters —but do you think we brainy southerners will ever count their votes? I should say not. They vote in Kentucky, Tennessee and the border states, but they will never vote in South Carolina, Mississippi or Louisiana, where they are in the majority. It wouldn't do."

"Then the 20 congressmen representing Louisiana, South Carolina and Mississippi are fraudulent?"

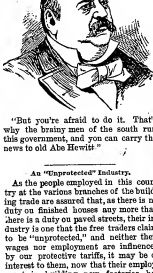
"No, sah, it's southern brains. We know how to manage."

"How many votes did Cleveland get in South Carolina?"

"Why, he got 65,000, and 88,000 in Mississippi, and 85,000 in Louisiana, but they made him president, and those ignorant northern Yankees let us do it. Why, you Yankee fools put McKane in Sing Sing for disfranchising a few citizens in Brooklyn and make a great row because Bob Ross was shot at the polls in Troy, while we brainy southerners next count out 858,000 niggers in Georgia, obliterate 600,000 in South Carolina and annihilate 744,000 black Yankees in Mississippi. We actually whip you Yankees in and make you help us do it! Brains! I reckon we have got brains!"

"What would you old rebs do if we Yankees should elect a president fraudulently in three northern states as you did Cleveland in the south?"

"What! You disfranchise a Democrat! You Yankees haven't nerve enough to do it. You haven't brains enough to stand by your own disfranchised Republicans in the south. If you should put in a president fraudulently, we'd paint FRAUD on his brow, as Dana painted it on Hayes', who was really the last president honestly elected in the nigger states. But you Yankees are afraid to do it. We old rebs would have some respect for you if you had nerve enough to write fraud on Cleveland like this:



"But you're afraid to do it. That's why the brainy men of the south run this government, and you can carry the news to old Abe Hewitt."

An "Unprotected" Industry.

As the people employed in this country at the various branches of the building trade are assured that, as there is no duty on finished houses any more than there is a duty on paved streets, their industry is one that the free traders claim to be "unprotected," and neither their wages nor employment are influenced by our protective tariffs, it may be of interest to them, now that the employment in building new factories has ceased under the threat of free trade, to quote from a summary of the general report on the census of England and Wales made by The Engineer of London. This paper says of the building trades:

"The number of persons thus employed shows an increase for the 10 years of only 2.1 per cent, whereas in the previous decade the rise was 21 per cent. The absolute number in 1891 was 680,886. The extremely small increase of a little over 14,000 in the building trades was accompanied by an actual decline in respect to the industries which supply the building materials. The falling off was only 1.5 per cent, but that there should be any decrease at all is a matter to be regretted, an increase being the proper result."

There is probably no trade in this country, unless we call farming a trade, that receives greater benefits from the building of new factories, factory towns and the various operations connected with the inauguration and maintenance of the industries developed in this country by protection than the building trade.—American Economist.

LIKE THE WHISKY INSURRECTION.

The South Carolina Episode a Reminder of the Steadfast Rebellion of 1794.

The recent lamentable outbreak in South Carolina against the enforcement of the celebrated dispensary law will probably take its place in history beside the Bradford whisky insurrection in Pennsylvania, which, it is worthy of remark, reached its climax and was suppressed in 1794, just a century ago. The circumstances of the two outbreaks are similar only in that both were caused by excise regulations, but they seem to unite in re-en forcing the fact that an excise law is no more popular in the United States than it was in England when Blackstone said its very name was odious to the people, and Dr. Johnson splenetically defined it as "a hateful tax adjudged by strange hired by those to whom excise is paid."

GOVERNOR TILLMAN.

The dispensary law was adopted at the suggestion of Governor Tillman as a compromise measure which it was supposed would end the strife between the Prohibitionists and the anti-Prohibitionists in the state and at the same time materially increase the public revenues. Its enforcement by every means at his command was to have been expected from a man of Governor Tillman's characteristic vigor and determination.

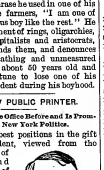
Governor Tillman is primarily a farmers' governor. He is a farmer himself and the idol of the farmers of South Carolina. He made his first political reputation about 10 years ago by stumping the state in opposition to the agricultural department as then conducted and succeeded in having matters reformed to suit him. Two years later he went over the state again advocating the establishment of an agricultural college, and again he was successful. Then the Farmers' Alliance suggested him to the Democratic convention for governor, and he got the nomination and was elected and two years later was nominated and elected again in spite of vigorous opposition within the party lines.

Governor Tillman prides himself on being one of the common people and used to be called the "one gallus" candidate because of a phrase he used in one of his speeches to the farmers, "I am one of you, a one gallus boy like the rest." He is a bitter opponent of rings, oligarchies, monopolies, capitalists and aristocrats, as he understands them, and denounces them all in scathing and unmeasured terms. He is about 50 years old and had the misfortune to lose one of his eyes by an accident during his boyhood.

THE NEW PUBLIC PRINTER.

He Has Held the Office Before and Is Promised Its New Political Politics.

One of the best positions in the gift of the president, viewed from the standpoint of patronage and good pay, is that of public printer, to which Thomas E. Benedict of New York was recently appointed. There are over 2,000 employees connected with the office, which does not come within the purview of the civil service law, and THOMAS E. BENEDICT.



although the salary is only $4,500 a year there are supposed to be many commissions and rebates on the purchase of material, of which the incumbent may take advantage, to the great augmentation of his income.

Mr. Benedict was public printer during President Cleveland's first administration and now succeeds F. W. Palmer, the man who five years ago succeeded him. In the interval he has been a deputy in the office of the New York secretary of state, from which he retired on the expiration of his term at the beginning of the year. He has been quite prominent in New York state politics and was an aspirant last fall for the Democratic nomination as secretary of state, but failed to secure it.

Warwick, Orange county, was Mr. Benedict's birthplace, and he was born in this year 1830. He received an academic education and taught school for awhile and then went to work as a bookkeeper in a railroad office. He had a taste for journalism and was a somewhat liberal contributor to the local papers even before he moved to Ulster county in 1863 and started the Ellenville Press, of which he made a very successful paper. His brother, G. H. Benedict, was interested with him in The Press and in 1873 the firm purchased The Banner of Liberty, a weekly, whose circulation they managed to extend considerably.

In 1879 Mr. Benedict was elected a member of the legislature and was afterward re-elected for four successive terms. At the end of his legislative service he was appointed deputy state comptroller, which position he held when he was first made public printer. In Albany Mr. Benedict formed a friendship with Mr. Cleveland, then governor, which has been maintained ever since, and to which his appointment as public printer is said to be due.

In the early days of the republic the government printing was done by contract. In 1863 the office of superintendent of congressional printing was created, in 1876 the name was changed from congressional to public printer and the present system was organized. Mr. A. M. Clapp was the first public printer, and he was succeeded by John D. Defrees and Sterling P. Rounds.

JOHN BROWN'S BODY.

IT LIES MOLDERING IN A GRAVE AT NORTH ELBA, N. Y.

Many Pilgrimages to the Old John Brown Farm In the Picturesque Adirondacks. The Region Has Lately Become a Fashionable Summer Resort.

If the soul of John Brown is still marching on, as the old war song says, the grave in which the same mysteriously inspiriting slogan hath it that his body lies moldering is becoming year by year a more interesting place of pilgrimage for students of his history and admirers of his deeds. It is yearly becoming more accessible, too, with the opening up and improvement of roads and the building of railroads made necessary since the wild Adirondack region has become a fashionable summering place. The grave is situated on the farm which John Brown bought in 1849 from Gerrit Smith at North Elba, Essex county, N. Y., and only two miles distant from those beautiful twin lakes, Mirror and Placid, whereof "society" has lately become enamored.

A good road leads from Mirror lake to the John Brown farm, which is situated in the midst of the grandest scenery in the Adirondacks. It is in an upland valley some 20 miles in length and of an average breadth of five or six miles, and around it the forests have been cleared away for grazing farms, so that the country is open enough to present some charming sweeps of vision to the eye. To the north is the grand old Whiteface mountain, 4,600 feet in height; and from the farm one can look up its entire southern slope and see where its dips into the famous Wilmington notch.

Looking southward, the visitor has a magnificent view of the grandest of the Adirondack mountains, Mount Marcy, with its domelike crown piercing the atmosphere at an altitude of near 5,000 feet, is the highest mountain east of the Rockies, with the single exception of Black mountain, in North Carolina. Near it is the Elephant, a long mountain with an apparent resemblance to the animal for which it is named. West ward of Marcy stands Mount McIntyre, second in height of the Adirondacks and affording, it is said, finer views than Marcy, owing to its more isolated position.

The finest views of all, however, are to be had from Whiteface, which also stands apart from the other mountains—seems, in fact, entirely separated from them. From its summit almost the entire length of Lake Champlain is visible as well as hundreds of the Adirondack lakes and the St. Lawrence river. A project is now under consideration to make the summit of Whiteface more accessible. It is proposed to build a railroad up from Mirror lake, like those up Rigi and Pilatus in Switzerland, or like those up Mount Washington and Pike's peak.

That John Brown must have had an inborn love of natural grandeur is shown by his selection of a burial place in the heart of this magnificent valley. But with his first coming to North Elba love of the beautiful had far less to do than his passionate love of freedom. What attracted him most was the fact that Gerrit Smith had there established a colony for negroes rescued from slavery. It may be that he thought it would be a good center from which to progress into a openly avowed idea of organizing a negro army to make war upon the slave holding states.

At any rate, he took a farm of 248 acres in the then unbroken wilderness, made a clearing and erected a little wooden house, which still stands, where he built it, though it has been considerably improved in recent years. Here he left his wife and the younger members of his family when he went to Kansas to fight against the extension of slavery into that territory. From there he went forth to his death in that famous raid on Harper's Ferry. There, after his execution, his widow took his body and buried it, in accordance with his desire, in the shadow of a huge bowlder that stands 30 or 40 feet away from the front of the house.

The house and farm are now the property of Kate Field, Sinclair Tousey, the sons of William Lloyd Garrison and several other admirers of John Brown. They bought the farm and put a neat wooden fence about the grave. Their aim was to protect the grave from desecration and the farm from unworthy uses. The inclosure about the grave contains about an eighth of an acre and is filled with wild rosebushes. At the head of the grave stands a tombstone which John Brown brought from the grave of his grandfather at Torrington, Conn., and on it are inscriptions commemorative of his death and that of his three sons, who died, like him, in the effort to emancipate the negroes. The tombstone has to be kept boxed up and padlocked to protect it from desecration by relic hunters, who had already chipped it somewhat before this precaution was taken. The bowlder has also suffered in like manner and has to be carefully guarded. On its summit, carved in great letters, is the inscription, "John Brown, 1800."

The Fergus Falls Journal suggests the name of Hon. S. G. Comstock for Congress, which doubtless means that Eb. Corliss does not intend to shy his castor into the ring this heat.

The probabilities are that the majority of the Great Northern employes who are out on strike, voted for Grover Cleveland and the democratic administration that is now arrayed against them.

Our congressman, H. E. Boen, has introduced a bill to provide hotel accommodations for Coxey's army when those patriots shall have reached Washington. Boen has a fellow-feeling for that sort of soldiering.

Tom Edson, a prominent democrat of Larimore, North Dakota, is said to be organizing a regiment for Coxey's army, and has established headquarters at the Hotel Dacotah, Grand Forks. Tom has always been considered an eccentric sort of fellow, but has been credited with having a little sense.

The liquor law of South Carolina has been declared unconstitutional by the supreme court of that state on the ground that the state cannot engage in the liquor business for profit. This will be a blow to temperance reformers who had expected much from this state dispensary law, which is an innovation in the temperance movement. They will have to fall back upon the old prohibitory law.

In his inaugural address to the council, Mayor Anderson of Grand Fork, tackled the water problem and suggested two remedies as follows:

First, the tower system, filtering the water, by which a constant pressure could be had and the pump stopped 10 hours each day. Second, by moving the intake to the center of the river and purifying the water by a series of filters that could be arranged for the purpose.

The question of raising sufficient revenue to meet the city's expenses, city's expenses was also discussed by the mayor, who found that the city was in such dire extremities that he urged the levying of a special assessment and as this would probably be illegal, he was in favor of going before the legislature and having the act legalized.

When the taxpayers of Crookston are inclined to complain about the financial condition of the city they should look about them and make comparisons with other cities of the northwest, and they will find that Crookston will not suffer by comparison.

The republican papers in the seventh congressional district are arguing S. G. Comstock to declare himself an active candidate for the nomination on the republican ticket. From our knowledge of the man we should say that Mr. Comstock is not built that way, in so far as making a scramble for the position is concerned, but, should the republicans of the district see fit to nominate him we believe he would not decline to make the race. Time has demonstrated the wisdom of Mr. Comstock's stand upon the tariff question while in congress before, and, while no doubt it defeated his re-election the people have had full time to find out by experience that he was right. He was also right in supporting Tom Reed for speaker and time has also fully demonstrated the wisdom of his action upon that point also. Mr. Comstock is one of the ablest men in this district as a legislator, one of the ablest men Minnesota ever sent to congress. The republicans could not make a wiser choice of a representative in congress.

The JOURNAL sought an interview with Hon. Halvor Steenerson upon his letter last week and that gentleman, though deep in the mysteries of an important land case from Kittson county, cheerfully put aside business for a few minutes to answer our interrogatories. He said in substance: "Yes, that letter is correct in every detail, and I most emphatically mean every word of it. Situated as I am at present should the nomination and election come to me without effort, it would be financially a detriment to me as my practice is far better from that point of view than double what I could save if I was a member of congress and I feel that I am obliged to devote a few more years yet strictly to business. While these matters should not always be allowed to govern the actions of a man I feel that I have a duty to perform toward my family that is paramount in this case, especially when the party can so easily find a far better man for the position. You may say, however that I stand ready to pull off my coat and put in my best efforts for the whole republican ticket and have no favors to ask from the people except that they take hold with me and elect that ticket."

The strike on the Great Northern railway seems to be in a fair way for settlement. Governor Nelson has taken a hand in the game, and asked President Hill to arbitrate the matter, which the latter has agreed to do. Pending arbitration the men are to return to work and await the decision of the arbitrators. The men favor settling the matter with Mr. Hill themselves, to which the latter agrees, and an early settlement of the trouble, in some way, seems probable.

That the men have the sympathy of almost every community on the lines of the Great Northern system is shown by the attitude of those communities, and the expressions of the citizens. The only action that creates any sympathy for the railroad is the manner in which the strike was inaugurated. The strikers labored under the impression—whether right or wrong—that the company was going to discharge the leading spirits among the discontented employes, and replace them with new men. Acting upon this belief, a strike was ordered with only a few hours notice to the company. This seemed to be taking an undue advantage of the company and the latter has made the most of this when defending its side of the case.

That a certain class of the railroad employes engaged on the Western Dakota and the Montana division, have a grievance there can be no doubt. The salaries of the section men, watchmen, yardmen, car cleaners and the like, before the last reduction was made, were already down to a point where there was scarcely a living in their wages, and when they were reduced still further it was more than they could stand. Therefore they had a grievance and their fellow-laborers and brother members of their organization all along the line have a right to use all honorable means to help them procure a fair day's pay for a fair day's work. Had the reduction applied only to high-salaried officials and to employes who were receiving over $75 per month, it would have caused no hardship to any one. But the company made the mistake of including in the reduction all those whose salaries were already down to the minimum—and this seems to have been where the trouble originated.

What have these reductions been made for? Because the road has not been paying as much dividend on its stock lately as it usually does—owing to the building and operation of the western extension to the Pacific coast—no piece of road that cannot be made to pay for years to come—and the business depression prevailing throughout the country. Of course the road could cannot be expected to stand any of this loss, so the salaries of the employes are reduced. The Great Northern railway has been one of the best paying pieces of railroad property in the United States; its stock has been always above par for years; it has never failed to declare a dividend both on the actual stock and on the watered stock—or wind. And yet it is said that this company pays smaller salaries than any other transcontinental line in American. Although its earnings have fallen 40 points in the last six months, it is still quoted at 1.04, while the Northern Pacific—with its splendid equipment and fine train service—is only quoted at about 5 cents.

There is one point that has been overlooked by those who sympathize with the company. Those people point to the fact that reductions have been made in the wages of workmen in all industries. This is true to a large extent, but to compensate for this, reductions have been made in the price of most of the commodities manufactured by these people whose wages have been reduced, but no one has heard of reduction in the freight and passenger rates on our railroads.

The fact that J. J. Hill is a strong personal friend of President Cleveland may account for the manner in which the government has come to the relief of the Great Northern road. By representing to the post-office department that the strikers were interfering with the mails, the company invoked the aid of the United States officers to protect their trains, when, as a matter of fact, the men were ready and willing to move the mail.

The company also got a decision from the attorney-general which is in effect that the forcible detaching of even one car from a train carrying mail is an act of violation against the laws of the United States. Under this opinion, should a dining car be captured by road agents and the balance of the train allowed to go to its destination, the company can refuse to carry the mail until the United States has secured that dining car and protected them in the running of it. There is nothing like standing in with the administration, and though Mike Doran may have lost his pull, it is quite clear that Jim Hill still retains his grip.

ARBITRATION.

The very latest reports from the conference committee, now in session with the Great Northern officials at St. Paul, indicates that the suggestion of arbitration made by Governor Nelson will fail, because the majority of the committee do not seem to favor it. We believe that the railroad employes will make a mistake if they refuse to arbitrate the matter.

Diversified Farming.

On Monday afternoon a JOURNAL scribe took a stroll across the river and called at the farm-house of Hon. B. Sampson. In response to numerous invitations to call sometime and look at his stock. After a chat with Mr. S. in as pleasant a home as any farmer (or any other man) could desire, he took us out to his barn wherein are to be found good, commonsense, everyday work-horses, some fancy driving and trotting animals, and two thoroughbred stallions, one a fine blocky bribe about 6 years old, that Mr. S. bought some two years since and calls the Norwegian horse because the ancestors of the horse came here from Norway. The other is a sister to one 3 years old weighing about 1600 and an honor some a specimen of horse flesh as one could wish to see. The barn is roomy and commodious, with plenty of room for his cows and horses, and feed for them and is well ventilated. He keeps cows enough for what dairy supplies he needs, and sees to sell when the market warrants and calculates also to have what beef he needs. He also has a few sheep to supply mutton for family use. He has a large yard, wherein are to be seen some 60 fine hogs and commodious pens for various uses. In one are to be seen a number of brood sows, with young pigs ranging from one to six weeks old. In another we see a system of pens and troughs, arranged around a central room in which is to be found facilities for cooking food for the hogs in the winter time. Outside is the yard in a trough so arranged that the hogs can get a sufficient supply of pure artesian water, both winter and summer, and to the end that he never feeds his hogs upon sour swill Mr. S. attributes his success as a hog-raiser. His hogs are nearly all pure Yorkshires, which he considers the best for this country as they are extremely easy keepers,' requiring little besides grass in summer. In one corner of the yard is a small slaughter house, conveniently arranged for the purpose for which it is designed. In the smoke and meat house we saw on outleing quite a lot of smoked meats and he informed us that he had several barrels of salt pork in his cellar. Built into the side hill is a house that in the winter as was to store potatoes, in, which never freezes and which would be a fine place to keep beets and turnips for milch cows in the winter. He has a fine hen house with a stove in it where he can, in the severest of winter weather, keep his hens as warm as they need to be at small cost and said he: "the fresh eggs I get all winter amply repays me for all the expense and trouble I am at and I never have young chicks any season of the year I like." Besides putting down his year's supply of pork, selling a number of hogs to the laboring men fall, and a good fat shoat or two now and then during the winter, he has now on hand some 40 brood sows, and 20 fat hogs of which latter will work in right handy for the markets during the coming summer. Mr. Sampson while not doing much boasting about it is setting an example to Polk county farmers that many of them might follow to advantage, and says he does not farming pay as well as does any business in this country. Some may be on idea that all this display represents an outlay of cash that the ordinary farmer cannot command, but outside of the elegant farmhouse and the fine barn everything else bears evidence of the homemade—the product of labor and such material as the ordinary farmer can command, supplemented however by painstaking care and foresthought to provide sufficient food and proper care. This only point in which Mr. S. has differed from the ordinary farmer has been in the fact that a few years ago when so many were breaking their necks in the effort to get out of hogs, Mr. S. quietly stocked up and is now reaping the benefits of his forethought by having plenty of pork also plenty of healthy thrifty pigs to sell.

Euclid Items.

Euclid, April 25, 1894.

Dr. Chapin took the train for Warren this morning.

E. C. Murney took in the sights at the county seat Monday last.

Chas. Teal, Sr., drove to Grand Forks Tuesday.

Seed wheat, oats and barley are moving out lively these days.

Dave Huggard drove up from Crookston to-day. He says the roads are very bad.

Mr. Kelso of Hallock came down Tuesday to look after his farming business.

All the farmers have started seeding in this vicinity, and are going over the land rapidly.

J. R. Crum who has been here the past week returned to his home at Donaldson Monday.

Dr. Chapin feels rather proud over his new trotting stock and says he will take the land now when out driving.

H. C. Misner's store is beginning to notice that Jim Hill is not carrying any freight, as goods are going out very lively and not any coming in.

The party that went out to the cemetery Tuesday evening to sow some grass seed, struck it at the right time as a nice rain fell after their return. It is said that the cemetery will be decorated with some nice shade trees, which will make a wonderful improvement.

Valuable Waste.

"Refiners of nitrate of silver for the use of photographers," said one of the profession, "have agents traveling constantly about the country collecting the waste clippings of sensitized paper that accumulate in every photograph gallery. They buy all they can find and pay for it by the ounce, allowing the photographer a good round price for his waste. The waste is shipped to the refiners, where the nitrate in the paper is separated from it by chemical processes and prepared for market again. This refined nitrate is as good as it was originally and is sold for just as much. The refiners, of course, make a big profit out of the waste, and the photographer is able to get a good supply of material for the scraps that would otherwise be of no use to him.

"When one thinks of the great number of photograph galleries and studios in the country and the fact that the waste paper of them all is closely gathered by the refiners at a price that will average $1 a pound, he may get some idea of the proportions of a business that is utterly unknown outside of the persons directly interested. Not only the scraps of silver sensitized paper, but most of the paper treated with solutions of gold are eagerly sought by the refiners, and the photographer is always very glad to exchange his accumulation of, to him, worthless waste for a neat stock of valuable nitrate."—New York Sun.

The Clever Brahmas.

Speaking of the great power the Brahmans in India possess in localizing thought, Purushotam Aor Telang said the other day: "We would consider a game of chess as played in this country mere child's play. As ordinary Brahmans chess player could carry on three or four games at a time without inconvenience. The usual games played by the Brahmans consists in enchanting with one pawn, designated when the play begins. I have seen a man perform a long problem in multiplication and division, at the same time noting the various scenes and discussions going on about him in the room. I have seen a man compose a triplo acrostic in Sanskrit in a given matter, at the same time having three well versed men trying to overthrow him in his argument on religion."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Got Even With the Preacher.

A lawyer of this city tells a story of how he got even with a preacher. It was on the occasion of his second marriage. After cancelling the ceremony the minister took advantage of the privileges accorded him by custom of saluting the bride. While so engaged the groom suddenly imprinted a resounding kiss on the cheek of the minister's wife, who was standing immediately behind the wedding party.

The lady was indignant, and the minister asked for an explanation.

"Why, sir," said the groom, "I understood the opinion that it was a poor rule that would not work both ways and that he had as much right to kiss my preacher's wife as the former had to kiss the bride.—Louisville Post.

Her Scheme Failed.

The latest instances of crime bringing its own punishment comes, on the authority of Dr. Leonard Ghirgini, from Italy. An Italian woman had a husband, and the husband had the dropsy. But the dropsy did not work quickly enough. The woman put a toad into her husband's wine to poison him. But the poison which the toad's skin secretes has an active principle—physyin —which much resembles digitalis, which is the best possible remedy for dropsy pending on heart disease. So, instead of killing her husband, she restored him to health.—San Francisco Argonaut.

ADITIONAL LOCAL.

Miss May Cornell is visiting friends at Fertile.

Miss Hattie Gordon of Minneapolis is the guest of Mrs. W. E. Smith.

Eugene, the seven year old daughter of Chris Sathre, is reported to be very sick.

A number of Indians have been seen in their canoes away up the river.

A. Bjornson, of Grand Forks, visited with Frank Kermott last Sunday.

Miss S. M. Cornelius has gone up to St. Hilaire where she has engaged to teach a term of school.

Geo. Whitcomb of Alexandria is in the city this week. George is as lively and happy as ever.

Gay Halvorson has accepted the position of bookkeeper and law clerk in the office of Halvor Steenerson.

Beautiful sunshiny weather on Saturday and Sunday, had the effect of drying up the moisture rapidly.

Miss Mary Cornelius who has been in very poor health during the winter was visiting friends in the city Tuesday.

On Monday a sturgeon weighing 70 pounds was taken from the river, and on Wednesday one weighing 105 pounds was taken.

There will be a special meeting of the G. A. R. to-morrow (Friday) evening at the post hall, to make arrangements for the observance of Decoration day.

One good point in favor of flax raising is in the fact that it may be sowed very much later than wheat or oats. Wheat sowed after the middle of May is or not as apt to do as well as when sown in April. Flax will do up to June 1st.

Rev. Squier went down to Detroit Monday on business connected with the Detroit Lake assembly. From Detroit he goes to Staples, where he is booked to deliver three of his lectures on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings.

The adjusters for the insurance companies in the Alderman, Sylvester & Risech fire case finished their business so far as the stock is concerned on Saturday. They awarded the company $500 damage on stock which is about the fair thing.

M. Malone's barn in Jerome's addition came near going into the river on Sunday, and Tom Harris had to go out and set for to get it up on solid ground again. It had been built on the bank of the river and the logs had knocked the piling from them on one end of it.

W. A. Marin, who was in the city on Saturday to do a little trading says in relation to flax that he always has it on the farm and mixes it with feed to patch a certain class of the year when farm animals need relaxing foods. Expects to have plenty to sell next fall.

Dr. Dunlop was sent for to go to the Lockhart farm on Thursday last to attend to a man named Fred Walker, who had fallen a distance of 10 feet in a barn, striking upon his head and shoulders. The man never recovered consciousness and died sometime after the doctor left him in the evening. The coroner went and returned on a hundcar, quite a severe trip for that kind of a day.

Wm. Marin went up to Thief River Falls Friday, and started down the river with a sail boat which he had left up there during the winter. Irm C. Richardson accompanied him as first mate, and when St. Hilaire was reached C. G. Rapp was taken aboard as second mate. The party left St. Hilaire Sunday morning at 7 o'clock, reaching Crookston at 10 o'clock Sunday night—a pretty swift trip. Marin says he disposes of the boat and failing in this he will take it out on Maple Lake for the summer. It is 20 feet long, a splendid sailer, and warranted not to upset.

Mrs. O. C. Berglund died at the residence of her husband, in the town of Fairdale on Saturday at 5 o'clock p. m., of consumption. Mrs. Berglund was a husband and six children to mourn the loss of a faithful wife and a good mother—a loss that this world can ever make up. She was a sister to John O. Jure, a former merchant of this city, who died some years since, and she leaves one brother and five sisters. Her mother, who had been with her for some time, left for her home at Krogness, Clay county a few days since. The funeral obsequies take place this afternoon at Syaod church, on Broadway, at 1 o'clock.

The food mother cannot be too vigilant in guarding against an attack of croup, or in curing a croup or cold upon their little ones. They may be the fore-runners of more serious ailments. Be prompt in giving Hallet's Sure Cure Cough Syrup, and this important step if taken in time, may save you much worry, perhaps a doctor bill and possible the life of a little one. "Only the Scars Remain,"

Says Henry Hudson, of the James Smith Woolen Machinery Co., Philadelphia, Pa., who certifies as follows:

"Among the many unsolicited testimonials which I see in regard to one or another patent medicine, performing wonderful cures, cleansing the blood, etc., none impress me more than my own case. Twenty years ago I broke out, at the age of 18 years, I had swellings come on my legs, which broke and became running sores. Our family physician could do me no good, and it was feared that the bones would be affected. At last, my good old to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I took three bottles, the sores healed, and I have not been troubled since. Only the scars remain, and the memory of the past, to remind me of the good Ayer's Sarsaparilla has done me. I now weigh two hundred and forty pounds, and am in the best of health. I have been on the road for the past twelve years, have advised hundreds to use Sarsaparilla advertised in all parts of the United States, and always take pleasure in telling what good it did for me."

Mother Urged Me

TO BE ARBITRATED.

GREAT NORTHERN STRIKE LIKELY TO BE SETTLED.

Governor Nelson Suggests Such a Course and President Hill Replies That He Is Ready to Adopt It in Case the Men Are Willing—Extracts From the Correspondence.

ST. PAUL, April 24.—There is little doubt that whatever difference exists between the Great Northern and its employes will be settled by arbitration, and contending labor organizations can settle the question of supremacy as they please so long as no other interests than their own are made to suffer.

For some time past Governor Nelson of Minnesota, in which state the Great Northern took its original charter, has been receiving appeals from citizens who are suffering from the strike to do something to have traffic resumed. The governor received a visit from Messrs. Debs and Howard of the American Railway union at noon and shortly afterward sent a letter to President Hill of the Great Northern asking whether he was not possible by some plan of arbitration to adjust and settle the controversy involved in this strike, and to suggest to you that earnest efforts be made in this direction as speedily as possible and in such a manner as to avoid further delay and interruption to public business and loss to all concerned."

Reply of President Hill.

"Dr. Hill immediately sent a reply to governor. After reciting the manner in which the strike was brought about he says:

"To meet the suggestion contained in your letter that earnest efforts be made to adjust and settle the strike, even if the dispute has to be referred to arbitration, this company is willing to leave to a board of three disinterested men, who have had much experience in the railway service, the question of rates of pay to its various classes of employes, and in order to prevent further loss and inconvenience to the public, to the men themselves and to the company, it shall be provided as a condition of arbitration that the men will without delay return to their work, and the company's business with the public shall be at once resumed. This will enable the men, in their own time and manner, to select their representatives who will represent any and every class of employes before the board of arbitration, and the board of arbitrators can hear them as soon as they are ready to be heard. The members of the board of arbitration to be named as follows: One by the men on the company's pay rolls or their representatives; one to be named by the company; and in case the two so chosen do not agree on the third member, the Hon. E. Nelson or Judge A. B. Thomas, or both judges together, shall name the third member of such board. The finding of the board to take effect as to rates of pay on the date when work is resumed."

President Debs of the American Railway union, also sent a letter to the governor stating that he would use all possible means to reach a amicable agreement.

Debs Interviewed.

After the publication of the correspondence between Governor Nelson and Mr. Hill, Mr. Debs was interviewed. He said:

"While Mr. Hill practically states all the grounds on which arbitration should be carried on, there is no disposition on my part to block its progress. We will have a committee of well-headed men who will look at all sides of the question.

"What about the men returning to work, as requested by President Hill?"

"My opinion is that as soon as arbitration has been agreed upon everything should assume its normal condition and traffic resume."

"Will the men return?"

"I would advise them to do so if called upon. But, inasmuch as the conference is close at hand, I prefer not to say very much about that. The men will be at hand in the morning, and they can settle the matter for themselves."

STRIKERS ENJOINED.

The Great Northern Invokes the Aid of the Federal Courts.

ST. PAUL, April 18.—The Great Northern has invoked the aid of the United States courts to protect its interstate commerce and the transmission of the mails. United States Marshal J. Adam Bede appointed 11 extra deputy marshals during the afternoon to assist the four regular deputies of his office in serving on the employes of the Great Northern Railway company an injunction issued by Judge Walter H. Sanborn of the United States circuit court, which restrains the employes from interfering with the property of the road. Nine of the deputies were sent out on the St. Cloud branch of the road, and cover the towns of St. Cloud, Barnesville and Crookston. The other six deputies will take in Breckenridge and Willmar. The deputies are loaded with printed copies of the order, and were instructed to serve the notices on all employes who might be found interfering with the terms of the injunction. They will cover the towns mentioned, as it is thought the majority of the men are congregating there. They will also cover other towns on the divisions named. The deputies are not empowered to arrest any of the men, but merely to serve the notices as a civil proceeding.

WILSON WRATHY.

The North Dakota Congressman Wants Judge Sanborn Impeached.

WASHINGTON, April 19.—Representative Johnson of North Dakota, whose state is so greatly effected by the strike on the Great Northern railroad, was at the postoffice department and the department of justice during the day in the interest of his constituents. He says that the postmaster general will not accede to the request of the railroad company, but will insist that mail cars be run whether passenger or other cars are run or not. Mr. Johnson says that the railroad company insists that it cannot be compelled to run its trains for mail unless it takes passengers and express also. Mr. Johnson was at the department of justice to see if the inconvenience that would be caused the people by Judge Sanborn's order could not be avoided.

"I have thrown myself wholly on the side of the strikers," said Mr. Johnson. "I am against the railroad and I believe the strikers are right. I have prepared a resolution of impeachment against Judge Seaborn and will introduce it as soon as I can obtain a copy of his order, so that I will know officially what it was."

AT ST. CLOUD.

Several Strike Leaders Placed Under Arrest.

ST. CLOUD, Minn., April 21.—No. 3 regular afternoon train from the west, arrived at 3:45, loaded with express and baggage. It started for St. Paul via Osseo, guarded out of the yard by marshals. Arrests are being made with no trouble thus far. United States Marshal Bede and 40 deputies arrived here at 9:15. He has warrants for 10. They will be taken to St. Paul without resistance, as the strikers have passed resolutions to that effect. Deputies will assist in making up trains and getting them out. It is not probable that trouble will ensue, although the strikers refuse to obey orders from superiors. A meeting of the Stonecutters' and Cigarmakers' unions is in progress. Their sympathy is with the strikers.

Arrests Being Made.

Marshal Bede will leave here with 10 deputies and Strikers Foster, McLaughlin, Boerdiran, Egbert, two Olsons and two others at 8 p. m. Other arrests will follow as fast as the men can be located. Bede being called, said they came as representatives of the law and to do their duty to their country where every men can vote and where every laborer's vote counts as much as an Hills. There was no cause for violence. The presence of the marshals seems to have the desired effect. A citizens' meeting has been called for this morning to assist in quelling the strike. Bede stated that 30 deputies would remain here and 75 more in case it was necessary to keep things moving.

No More Interference.

ST. CLOUD, Minn., April 24.—The situation is unchanged here. No interference is being made with passenger or express business but the men insist that no freight business can move. The company is making no attempt to do anything in this line. The situation here is such that business men are more hopeful for a speedy adjustment of difference.

WAS CAUGHT IN THE MOUNTAINS

Superintendent Van Cleve a Week In Reaching Seattle.

SEATTLE, Wash., April 21.—Superintendent Van Cleve and Assistant Superintendent Tew of the Cascade division, have arrived in this city after being imprisoned in the mountains by the strike for the last week. They crossed the Cascades and traveled 75 miles on a velocipede, then fired up an engine and ran it themselves to Snohomish, where they took a Lake Shore train. They were not disturbed on the way.

Their mission here was to get news of the strike, but as all wires are in possession of the strikers they could not communicate with St. Paul. Mr. Van Cleve says positively that the company has no intention of importing men, and that the strike was a complete surprise to him, as no intimation had been made to him of a demand by the employes.

STILL IN ABEYANCE.

Debs Favors Restoration of Wages but Concede Delay.

TACOMA, Wash., April 24.—When asked by wire by the local managers of the American Railway union if he favored restoration of the Northern Pacific schedules end wages, President Debs replied from St. Paul: "I strongly favor restoration, but to-day this is dangerous and must be avoided." The Pacific division employes of the Northern Pacific then resolved that all of the other divisions favored striking if the schedules were not restored. The matter is still in abeyance here.

TROUBLE AT WILLMAR.

The Strikers Seize a Train and Overpower the Deputies.

ST. PAUL, April 23.—The strikers seized a train at Willmar Saturday, overpowering the deputies. The latter, however, returned to the attack and knocked out their train and took several prisoners. The train then returned to this city.

Mills Must Shut Down.

WEST SUPERIOR, Wis., April 23.—The trouble on the Eastern Minnesota growing out of the Great Northern strike will result in closing several of the large flour mills. The Freeman, 3,000 barrels, has shut down.

Workingmen Protest.

WASHINGTON, April 23.—More than 1,000 workingmen from Philadelphia and New Jersey marched down Pennsylvania avenue during the day to emphasize their protest against the Wilson tariff bill. Men and women were in line marching four abreast with the American flag and took several banners displaying mottoes opposed to the Wilson bill.

The Club Wins.

NEW ORLEANS, April 25.—The supreme court has decided the matter of the State vs. the Olympic club. The court affirmed the decision of the lower court, which was by a majority vote of a jury in favor of the club. The case has been pending for months and the decision will permit a resumption of glove contests in New Orleans.

IT IS REED'S RULE.

THE QUORUM COUNTING MEASURE ADOPTED BY THE HOUSE

It Is Practically the Same as That Used by Mr. Reed—Many Democrats Opposed It, But Republicans Voted For It—Secures Agreement to Vote on the Tariff Bill by Paragraphs on Tuesday.

WASHINGTON, April 17.—The quorum-counting rule adopted by the house late yesterday afternoon by an overwhelming vote is, for all practical purposes, the same as that which ex-Speaker Reed of Maine inaugurated during the Fifty-first congress, and which won for him a world-wide reputation.

Neither undue excitement nor tumultuous scenes marked the crushing of the old legislative barriers. Mr. Reed and the Republicans generally were in a delightful humor over the victory they had accomplished. Those who expected Mr. Reed would taunt and gibe his political adversaries with their alleged inconsistency were disappointed. Only 15 minutes on a side were allowed for debate, and Mr. Reed, instead of consuming that with an arraignment of the Democrats, good naturedly distributed most of it to Democrats who desired and when his time was exhausted he jocularly asked for more time to dole out among his friends on the other side —Messrs. Bryan, Cummings, Wheeler, Kilgore and Russell being the Democrats who were thus given an opportunity to protest against the adoption of the rule. When the vote was taken 47 Democrats voted against it, but every Republican voted for it and it carried by a vote of 212 to 47. The Populists did not vote on the proposition. The adoption of this rule, taken in conjunction with the decision to enforce the old law of 1940, to dock the salaries of members absent save on account of sickness, will, it is thought, put an end forever

To Factionary Obstructions.

The enforcement of that law will keep members at their post of duty, and the rule will prevent them from refusing to participate in legislation when they are present. After the adoption of the rule it only required a few minutes to straighten out the parliamentary tangle which the house has been in for many days and the house then quietly proceeded with the consideration of the consular and diplomatic bill. Mr. Hitt made a strong speech, arraigning the foreign policy of the administration, in the course of which he severely censured the president for appointing Van Allen as minister to Italy as a reward for his $50,000 political contribution.

REACHED AN AGREEMENT.

The Tariff Bill Will Be Taken Up by Paragraphs Next Tuesday.

WASHINGTON, April 17.—The 'senate spent an hour after the morning business had been disposed of in coming to an agreement regarding consideration of the tariff bill. It was finally agreed to continue debate until next Tuesday, when the bill will be taken up by paragraphs, Senator Hill having the right to move to take up the free list first, and consider it if sustained by the senate. The senate then went into executive session. After 15 minutes the senate resumed its open session.

MR. REED NOT COMING.

The Maine Statesman Unable to Address Minnesota Republicans.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—Minnesota Republicans will not have an opportunity to hear Thomas Reed this season. This announcement will carry disappointment to those who heard Major McKinley and wanted an opportunity to compare the two men and to thousands of others who were unable to hear the apostle of protection. Mr. Reed had been invited to address the Republicans of Minneapolis in July. He informed a correspondent that while it would be a great personal pleasure to him to accept the invitation and visit the state and people of whom he had so pleasant a recollection since the last Republican national convention, it would be impossible for him to do so at the present time. He said that at present it was impossible to engage in public, as it might transpire here from day to day, and his duty was here. Furthermore, he was but one of many prominent invitations he had received, and he had been obliged to decline them all and even cancel some which he had accepted.

Hall Was Paid to Be Whipped.

KANSAS CITY, April 21.—"Colonel" Hopkins, the theatrical manager and backer of pugilists, gives to a local paper a sensational interview about the Fitzsimmons-Hall fight at New Orleans. According to him, Hall was paid to get his nose smashed and thereby disqualified. He was on to the scheme, made a pot of gold out of it, while Mitchell's friend, Squire Abingdon, was done.

Mello's Surrender Confirmed.

WASHINGTON, April 19.—Secretary Gresham has received a brief telegram from Minister Thompson at Rio Janeiro announcing the report of the sinking of the Aquidaban by a government torpedo boat; the surrender of Mello and 1,000 men with his ships to the Argentine government at Buenos Ayres and announcing that the rebellion is ended.

To Repeal the "Docking" Law.

WASHINGTON, April 19.—Representative Grosvenor of Ohio has introduced a bill to repeal the old law docking the sergeants-at-arms to "dock" the salaries of absent members. Mr. Grosvenor says the law never can be enforced and it is better to repeal than violate it.

Planted a Liberty Tree.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 19.—Planting a liberty tree in Golden Gate park in assembled from the graves of patriots was celebrated by the Daughters of the American Revolution. The oration was by General W. H. L. Barnes and a patriotic poem by Mrs. J. French.

OUR GALLANT TARS.

A CUSTOM THAT WILL ENDURE AS LONG AS THE NAVY ENDURES.

Drinking the Toast to "Sweethearts and Wives" Every Saturday Night—It Makes the Men In the Navy Better, Truer, Nobler and Braver.

The people of this country are very fond of their naval officers, so far as they know them. It would be a good deal better for the country if they were better known, for among them are to be found es large a percentage of fine, brainy, lovable and well bred men as in any of the familiar professions.

There is not much sentimentality in the navy, but there is a deal of sentiment, which is a vastly different thing. Certain cynical young women who have met officers and who have noticed how attentive they are sometimes think that this is merely a "dainty, sham devotion," bestowed upon young women whom they meet at every port they touch. But this is not true. There is more genuine chivalry among the officers of the United States navy than is to be found among any class of men on shore.

It is one of the conventions of the navy to place women upon a pedestal, and there is no finer convention in the world. It may be because that of so much of their time they are denied the delight of seeing women. But they never forget them.

Every Saturday night in every United States warship afloat there takes place a ceremony so beautiful, so exquisite, that it seems to have escaped from the land of chivalry and wandered into American life. There, flattered and amazed at its welcome, it has remained ever since and made the men in the navy better, truer, nobler and braver, for it must be confessed that the officers are, first of all, splendidly American.

When a ship is under way, there is no woman aboard her. She has no place there. Maybe each man carries an image of one in his thoughts during his watches on deck. Of these things he does not speak. But once each week he comes forth boldly with his fellows and reverently sends greeting from across the seas to her. From the China sea, from stormy Cape Horn, from the peaceful Mediterranean comes the message,

"Sweethearts and wives!" That was ever and always will be the sailor's toast. And when it is given aboard Uncle Sam's ships it is a tribute to the sweetness, the purity, the beauty of American womanhood. There are men who have drunk that toast every Saturday night for more than 40 years. It is never old to them. The officers' mess would as soon think of having unnoticed an important disciplinary regulation as passing Saturday night without this ceremony. It does not matter whether the ship is on the high seas, or anchored in a foreign port, or lying at the dock in the Brooklyn navy yard. So long as her men are aboard they drink the toast. It is a custom as old as the navy. It will endure as long as the navy endures.

When the supply of wine is running short during a long cruise, the officers deny themselves during the week that they may have it for this toast on Saturday nights.

The servants are well trained. They have the champagne nicely chilled and open it almost without orders. After the dinner is finished the executive officer arises. Very likely there is gray in his hair. His face is reddened by weather and seamed by years, for men who reach position cannot be young. But his heart is still young. They have dined well, and the content of well filled stomachs radiates on their faces. But when the lieutenant commander rises they are still. He stands straight with his head upraised, the champagne bubbling daintily.

"Gentlemen, are your glasses charged?" There is not one which is empty. The officers rise and bow their heads in answer.

"I give you" (the lieutenant commander speaks earnestly, and there is a soft glimmer in his eyes)—"I give you sweethearts and wives. God bless them!"

"Sweethearts and wives—God bless them!" comes in chorus from the officers. Then they drink, and if there runs down their opinal cords a little thrill, and if their eyes grow moist and their hands shake a bit it is a tribute to themselves and to American womanhood to whom this toast is drunk. With something in their breasts throbbing like the great engines, and the swish and gurgle of the waters dulling their ears, there is once more a dream, a home with a soft voiced woman and the prattle of a child, or a slender, girlish figure bending her head to hide the love light in her eyes. On Saturday night the officer at sea feels that he is very near home.

Every one knows that naval officers are famous for the attractions which they have for the fair. This may show that it isn't the uniform alone which is the magnet.—New York World.

The Forger.

Sir John Evans says, in Longman's Magazine, "that not even the keenest antiquary is proof against the forger and confesses that not only has he himself purchased forgeries, but has published accounts of them as if they had been genuine—accounts which any amount of evidence will not always fail to establish. Counterfeits and forgeries abound in every department of archæology. Spurious inscriptions, coins, bronzes, pottery, glass, enamels, ivories, coins, weapons, implements and armaments have each and all been foisted on collectors at different times and in various countries."

A Modern Hero.

Mme. M——, a very talented pianiste, when sitting next to Colonel Ramollot at the dinner table, asked him in a winning tone of voice:

"Are you fond of music, colonel?"

"Madame," said the warrior, rolling a savage pair of eyes, "I am not afraid of it!"—Paris Rappel.

Lonnie West,
Mountain, North Dakota.

"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:
"My little boy has been troubled with catarrh from his infancy. After trying several remedies without any benefit, I concluded to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial. When I commenced giving the Sarsaparilla to Lonnie he was three years old and weighed only 22 pounds. He had not grown any for over a year and was just able to walk around. He had taken only one bottle of Cure three times daily for over an month when he has taken only 3 bottles and he is as well and healthy looking boy as can be found in North Dakota. He has grown considerable and has

Wednesday, April 18.

The house devoted the entire day to debate on the consular and deplomatic appropriation bill.

At the conclusion of the morning hour in the senate the tariff bill was taken up and Mr. Morrill of Vermont spoke against the bill. He was followed by Mr. Turpie of Indiana and Messrs. Cameron and Quay of Pensaylvania.

Thursday, April 19.

The day in the senate was almost entirely consumed by a speech against the pending tariff bill by Senator Perkins of California.

The house made very slow progress with the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. Almost the entire time was devoted to threshing over the old straw in the Hawaiian controversy. The text used as a basis for the debate—a motion to cut off the salary of the Hawaiian minister—was defeated when the vote was taken without division. About o'clock Mr. Dockery moved a recess until 8 o'clock, the motion was carried by a small majority and the house soon afterward adjourned.

Friday, April 20.

The proceedings in the house were of an unin teresting nature and practically no business was transacted. Three unimportant bills were passed.

The discussion of the Peffer resolution for the reception of the Coxey army occupied the attention of the senate until 1 o'clock. The tariff will then be taken up and addresses made by Senators Gallinger and Dolph.

Saturday, April 21.

At the conclusion of the morning hour the house resumed consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill in committee of the whole. At the end of an hour the committee rose and the remainder of the day was devoted to eulogies upon the late Senator Gibson of Louisiana.

The Yellowstone park bill occupied the morning hour in the senate. The tariff bill was then taken up and Senator Dolph proceeded with his speech.

Monday, April 23.

The house devoted the entire day to business from the committee on the District of Columbia and the senate listened to a speech against the Wilson bill by Senator Washburn of Minnesota.

NO. 10 DOWNING STREET.

The Historic London House Occupied by British Prime Ministers.

An official residence is provided by the government for the prime minister of England, and 10 Downing street, where it is located, is a prominent landmark in English administrative and political history. The house stands on the site of the famous cockpit made by Henry VIII when he took the Whitehall palace from Wolsey and considerably enlarged its already grand proportions.

Sir George Downing built the street about the year 1690, and his descendants sold the substantial brick buildings to people of high rank. Of these only three now remain. No. 10 has been the residence of the premiers since George II conferred it upon Robert Walpole and his successors in office forever. No. 11 is the official residence of the chancellor of the exchequer, and No. 12, part of the colonial office, is now used by the whips of the government.

Generations have come and gone since the foundations of these three old fashioned houses were laid, and they are now overshadowed by the stately pile of offices opposite, but the glamour of historic memories still lights them for the imaginative mind. In Addison's time No. 10 was a famous residence. Every time I when went over from Hanover to England settled his Hanoverian minister in it, and George II, as stated above, gave it to Robert Walpole. All the prime ministers of the present century have been familiar with it. Gladstone occupied it during his four terms in office, and Lord Rosebery is now the official head of the household.

The decoration of the interior is in the style of the time of George I and was done at the suggestion of Lord Beaconsfield prior to taking up his residence in the house for his second administration. The solid cabinet constructed in the ground floor is a room of splendid proportions. Mr. Gladstone had it fitted up as an office for his secretaries and held his cabinet meetings in a smaller room on the floor above—the historic office of the prime minister.

Adjoining this is a small but comfortable room, which was used by Mr. Gladstone as his study. All other articles of furniture in Mr. Gladstone's time was an old oak pedestal writing table, which was reserved exclusively for his literary work. His papers were always methodically arranged upon it, and nothing irritated him more than to have them disarranged. The Grand Old Man is a methodical person in such matters and is said to know so well where he lays a thing down that he can find it in the dark.

A Future For Him.

"Things are pretty slow now," said the czar to the minister of police.

"Yes, your majesty, I know of but one matter which is likely to bring relief to your attention. It is the case of a man who threw a bomb at your majesty and broke a window a block away. He wants to be released."

"He expects a great deal."

"He says he will reform. He thinks he can go to America and get a place as a baseball player and lead a better life."—Washington Star.

CHAPTER XXII.

FAILURE AND PERSEVERANCE.

Next day, for, as I think I have remarked, I observed the seasons of day and night, I made another and more determined exploration of the seals' tunnel. I got into my first blowhole without difficulty, though at the cost of a bad cut on my right ankle, which pained me a good deal and which no doubt bled profusely. Arrived here, I felt about for the ledge on which I had stood the day before. The tide was higher now and the water covered it; so I clambered to it with greater ease. I first made fast my cord to the stick on which it was wound to a projection of the rock, and afterward moving along the ledge felt about in the dark with my hands. The tide was not yet at its lowest, nor would it be for some time, and of course my efforts to thread the cor ionation of the tunnel would be best made between the water at its lowest and for the reasons that I have already mentioned. In the meantime I desired to explore the cave as well as I could. It was just possible that the continuation of the tunnel might be at this point overhead or rather overrock. At all events I determined to utilize the time at my disposal by groping about the cave. Fortunately I had brought with me going round a corner of rock, and stretching it out and away from my body, but still in a forward direction, and feeling there but empty space. Scrambling into this empty space, I was soon satisfied that I was either in the continuation of the seals' tunnel or that the cave was provided in this place with a pocket of unknown dimensions. Though beset by heut upon exploration. I determined not to travel beyond the sound of the water lest I should lose my way in the darkness. The day after I slid down from Curry's Window I had had in the great cavern a horrible experience of that kind which was a lesson to me. The sound of the water, however, reached a great way here, owing to the reverberation of the hollow roof. To any one else, no doubt, the huge sucking noises, as of some great monster drinking, and the sullen dismal echoes of the fizz and reflux of the water, would have been very horrible and impressive. But I was now too steeled to suffering and horrors to take more than a utilitarian view of those noises. I kept to that side of the pocket by which I had first entered it and penetrated some 20 yards without coming to the end or meeting with anything more material than a piece of seaweed and a good deal of rotten drift timber. "I know where to get fuel," I said to myself, "should any storehouse in the big cavern ever give out." All this time I kept listening for the flopping sound which my ear would make if this were their avenue to the sea. Hearing nothing of the kind, my hope that this might be the tunnel subsided. Nevertheless I determined on some future occasion to explore this pocket or whatever it might be more thoroughly. Returning to its entrance, I slid into the water, taking my clew with me, swam to the point where, on the occasion of my last visit, I seemed to have found the continuation of the tunnel, and dived. I went straight down, but in front of me and on my left hand found nothing but rock; then, turning to the right, discovered what seemed to be the tunnel, certainly some opening of considerable dimensions. All this moment something soft, yet solid and seemingly alive, pushed against my breast and throat. I got so frightened that in my terror I dropped the clew and sucked in a quantity of water. Recovering my self control, I got to the surface as quickly as I could. Fortunately I was only at the mouth of the tunnel. Had I been in the interior when this happened, I would almost certainly have been drowned, so frightened was I by this mysterious collision. Hardly had I got to the surface when I guessed the cause of my alarm. It was certainly one of my seals. Presently I heard the well known cry, and the poor beast pressed up against me in the dark. It was a female seal who was very fond of me, you see. I used to call her the Plaintiff. Though my terror was relieved, I felt myself a mes ual to the task of any further exploration of the tunnel just then. Accordingly, feeling my way round the cave till I came to the ledge, which was near the entrance of the first portion of the tunnel, I dived and passed home without further accident and succeeded in drawing back my clew, which I feared might have been fast somewhere. Once I my self that, owing, I suppose, to the original bent of my temperament or perhaps to the possession of a fair share of fat, for I might be described as stout rather than thin, I could remain in water longer than any other swimmer of my acquaintance. On the present occasion I was dispirited and out of sorts, but not cold. Yet, having dined, I felt brisk and vigorous again. This day I dined on steaks of turbot. I mention it because it was the only fat fish that my seals brought me during the whole term of my imprisonment. It now occurred to me that if I could make a fire in the cave off the first blowhole it would be of great service to me in my next attempt to reach the continuation of the tunnel there. But how to bring fire thither was certainly a difficulty. I could not bring a burning brand with me swimming under water a distance of 16 yards. That was plain. I now examined that pocket of my cave in which I had found the loose powder originally, though I knew that there could be little or none there, and making that piece of tinder or touch-cloth by which I kindled my first fire I had turned the pocket inside out that the loose grains might fall upon it and so help toward the ignition. In examining this pocket now by the light of my fire I noticed that the bottom of it was quite black. I guessed the cause at once. Some time last winter my jacket had got thoroughly soaked with rain and the bottom of the pocket was saturated in solution of gunpowder. I touched the black lining with the tip of my tongue and recognized its acrid taste. I now saw my way clearly toward the making of a second fire. I cut out the black part of the lining and bestowed it in my purse. It was the first feathern purse I ever owned, bought since I went to college, for my schoolboy days had a netted one with steel rings and little bunch of steel pendants at each end. My father, I remember, never gave in to the feathern clasp purse—he used a netted one, with rings as long as he lived. Then I took a piece of my line, and having doubled the purse bound it round strongly with the cord and made it perfectly water tight. Next day, some two hours before low water, I stripped, took my knife and the doubled up purse in my teeth, the clew also, as usual, in my hand, and dived through the tunnel, came up in the blowhole and clambered into the dry part of that cavern. I placed the purse and knife in a very short time I could safely dive and, having first dried my hands in the crisp seaweed, which was abundant here, proceeded to select the brittlest and most crumbling timber. Such was imbedded everywhere in the seaweed. Then I kept moving about, striking sparks from the rocks with my knife till I found a position which seemed to emit them in a more brilliant manner than the rest. Now I soon learned what an assistance to me in my former attempt of this kind was the loose powder which I was then in a position to sprinkle upon the touchwood. Though the sparks were sometimes so bright as to reveal clearly not only the touchwood but my own hand, and though they seemed to fly right into the rock, they produced no other result than those fleeting illuminations. I believe I was nearly an hour at this exercise and at last gave over, my nerves being thoroughly tired. As I sat reflecting it occurred to me that the cloth would have a better chance of catching fire if I presented its edges to the sparks and also if I were to fray those edges into fluff. "Better still," I thought, "were a good deal of those edges to be burnt off. I will then be sheer two, which, astrategist as it is the solution of gunpowder must catch fire." I did this. Then I struck the rock again with my knife, and at the first spark which went leaping into the tow the latter caught fire, splintering and fizzing up gloriously. I sat by my little heap of crumbling touchwood ready at hand all this time. In short, after a very few minutes I stood with a blazing fire before me in the cave. There was plenty of timber at hand for the feeding of it. The whole cave was brilliantly lighted up—the roof and all the level floor of dark but gleaming water. So much for the cave as was just above the water was nearly quite sound and presented the appearance of an inverted bowl. But after observation of the blowhole, I turned my attention to the pocket. The entrance was not wide, but the cave within expanded into great dimensions. As I knew, however, that this pocket, huge ponch or whatever it might be termed, was not water for me than a blind alley, leading I knew not whither, I postponed its exploration. I was not here to make discoveries, but to make my way out if by God's grace and my own swimming and diving it might in any way be effected. It was now low water, no I judged by the appearance of the ledge. Then, unfastening the cord and fixing it round myself to the protection of the Almighty, I swam across the pool to the place where I had left the entrance of the tunnel, and dived. As I had knots all along the line marking the spaces, I knew quite distinctly with my feet and the movement of the water there, for the tide had turned. Again I dived and continued groping forward to a distance of 14 yards, but still felt the rock above me. But reluctantly I turned back at this point, for I knew that a good half of my power of retaining breath was now exhausted. My return journey, however, was the easier, for I assisted myself by drawing in the line, which was excellent, strong whipcord. Yet even so, I was almost at the farthest limit of my powers when I reached the small blowhole. There I remained for a few minutes, blowing and panting, with my attention to the cup shaped cave where my fire burned was easy. Moreover, I could see before me the reflection of the light in the water, which had upon my mind the effect of a friendly beckoning and welcoming hand. Clambering up on my fire, I sat down beside it, brooding and pondering. It was now plain to me that escape by the seals' tunnel was only possible on one condition—viz, that I should make my life on the chances, they being enormously against success. I knew that in my dive from the second blowhole toward the sea—I had done my very best—gone forward to the last yard, exhausting the full half of my power of holding my breath. True, there might have been a breathing space one yard beyond the point at which I had turned back, but then again there might not be any such blowhole at all between the second of my breathing places and the sea, and from that point to the sea on the assumption that the tunnel ran quite straight there was a distance of more than 100 yards according to the most favorable computation. Were I to dive again from the second blowhole with no intention of returning—only with the intention of pushing forward till I should be drowned or find another breathing-spot, I might make 24 yards, or even by desperate determination and such power as God might graciously give me make even 30 yards. Then, should I meet with no breathing place, I would be miserably smothered and drowned. I knew that if I were to make this desperate stroke for freedom the sooner I delivered it the better, for my physical strength, owing to a diet of fish repeated day after day, was failing. In mind I was still vigorous, but physically I was decidedly weaker than when I entered the cavern. A few days before this I endeavored to move a pebble which the day after my imprisonment I had been able to raise a little, though not so far as to lift it right over. On this second occasion I could only just stir it in its place. After awhile I got up and explored the sea cern, lighting new fires at convenient intervals. It was indeed a great and august chamber of rock, fit to be the temple of some gloomy superstition, but I observed there nothing of the nature of sentence. not even sound timber. This pocket, like the great cavern, had not been visited by the sea for many years. The drift timber there, though abundant enough, crumbled as I handled it. Throwing up the embers of the fire over the blowhole with ashes to keep it alive and returned through the tunnel to my own cave. That evening I dressed long and earnestly over the dreadful problem. The making of steps along the slope up to Curry's Window would be the work of years. If I adopted that other desperate alternative—a despairing, headlong and rushing dive through the tunnel—I would either escape at once or at once die, and so be released from all my troubles. Then it seemed to me that to take such a step with all the chances so enormously against success was like anicide—a crime which I had been brought up to regard as perhaps the most heinous and awful of all crimes. When I awoke in the morning, it seemed to me as if I had somehow made up my mind and come to a determination while I slept. At the time I regarded this as a divine illumination vouchsafed to my prayers for patience and light. Possibly enough, for the human mind is very deceitful, I finally decided against the bolder and more daring course merely from want of courage to put it into execution, and truly the thought of being smothered with salt water in the submarine darkness of the tunnel was quite horrible enough to appall and unman a bolder spirit than mine. Yet indeed I do not believe that I was turned aside finally from the adoption of the more daring and perilous course. I have to observe, however, that from the first I regarded a certain lassitude, inertness and lack of spirit grew upon me, malely caused by my low diet, but I noticed that I gradually began to appear on this particular day, owing to the complete and final frustration of all the high and joyful hopes with which I had so long entertained in connection with the seals' tunnel. There, within a few yards of me, lay the open entrance of a road leading to light, liberty, home and happiness, yet I could not traverse it, so changed was I from my salt water. My poor seals went there freely out and in half a dozen times a day, but I could not, though indeed I tried and did my best. While Charley's brown bread came down to me I was strong. When that failed me I had nothing but fish to eat, I slowly, day by day, grew weak. I did not feel dependency so much as a certain lassitude and a tendency to do nothing but ruminate and half sleep, so that sometimes I gave the task of feeding my fire seemed to require a great effort of will before it could be effected.

CHAPTER XXIII.

MY LAST ATTEMPT AT ESCALADE.

This lassitude, however, came over me slowly and at first imperceptibly. When I made up my mind to try to attempt to rush the tunnel, I was vigorous enough. Accordingly I at once commenced a list which I had always intended, but had put off till it became certain that I had no other way of escape. As the reader may remember, I made no very serious effort in any direction until I had first established such relations with my dumb companions as would insure me a supply of food, for I knew that the mode of hostile escape offered itself which did not involve escape and labor and that the food problem was the first in which I should busy myself. At 9:30 o'clock on this morning I began to cut steps in the incline leading up to Curry's Window, but long after my imprisonment I had secured the rock bore with my knife. It was therefore of this

John Ryding was up from Fertile last Friday to meet with the brethren in the Portier block in the evening. He expects to start on his journey to Norway about May 10th.

The hay supply has held out remarkably well during the siege of bad roads but we are told that there is getting to be a great demand for it in this market. Seldom if ever before was such a long continued siege known in this city.

The owner of "Jessie Green," the flyer that was in the stables of Peterson Bros. & Warninger last season, reports the arrival of a fine horse colt, sired by Ham Nut. Jessie Green is a buckskin, but the colt is a bright bay, as perfect in form as any one could wish to see, and he will be heard from by and by if he lives.

H. C. Scribner: "There is but little barley for sale in this city but by the same token it wouldn't make much difference at present if there were thousands of bushels as it would be utterly impossible to get it out of the city while these roads last. It is good seedy business for two horses to haul a lumber wagon on these roads."

From the orders the JOURNAL has received for flax seed we are led to believe that several thousands of seed could be disposed of here if it could be had on time. Not more than one in a hundred is ready to pay cash for it.

Don't forget that the ladies of the Congregational church society given supper Thursday evening May 3d, and invite one and all to come and partake thereof. All of the delicacies of the season nicely served at a small advance on first cost.

John Wyand: "I fully concur in what neighbor Hixon says about raising timothy as I have been trying it for several years and one year my timothy crop dropped a nice little wad of $2,100 into my pocket-book which worked in mighty handy I can assure you. I never seeded as heavy as he recommends however, usually sowing only four quarts per acre. For a hay crop I shouldn't wonder if a peck of seed would be best."

Su-u-y, but Frank Bivins is stepping high these days ever since the arrival of that little Ham Nut filly at the farm and us for Ed—well, you can't touch him with a ten foot pole, for his mind is already flying over the race track at a 2:20 clip behind that wonderful filly. "It's a bird," they say, and even Doc Warninger is patting himself on the back.

Very few two horse teams get into the city these days but it is no uncommon sight to see a four horse team wallowing through the mud endeavoring to haul a few sacks of feed out to some farm. But as the frost must be pretty well out of the ground it can't take long now for the roads to get into passable condition again. We shall be all the better prepared to appreciate good roads again when we get them.

Hugh Thompson intended to have gone down to Fisher last Tuesday but the strike prevented his going by rail, the fearful condition of the roads prevented his going that way and so he was obliged to wait till something gives way—either the war or the weather is settled. However Fisher is not quite isolated as they manage to get mail out and in via the Northern Pacific road.

It was Lord Bolingbroke who said: "Our natural and real wants are confined to narrow bounds, while those that fancy and custom create are confined to none." In seasons like the present "good old democratic times" how readily such sentiments occur to the average humanity, but how much better would it be for all concerned if the above sentiment had ever been the rule and guide of our lives. It is easy to look back along the track of our lives and discover many and many an item of expense that could have been dispensed with just as well as not, representing in the aggregate a sum that would now drop in exceedingly handy. If the present suffering of things shall serve to inculcate such ideas so firmly that they will be more generally adopted we can see where much will result.

A. N. HIXSON: "I like the stand the JOURNAL has taken upon the question of diversified farming, and the efforts you are making to get us farmers interested in flax this year, as I believe that flax next fall will be good property to have, but I think you could dwell more upon the subject of timothy than you do with very good effect. I know that wheat has been raised for the past few years at a loss by many, but while I certainly in the idea of diversified farming, I am forced to the conclusion that our land is better adapted to wheat than to many other cereals natural to our soil, and while we may diversify to a certain extent, our main dependance is, and will be, on wheat as the great staple. I see one drawback in the fact that farmers continually crop their land, year after year, to wheat, thus exhausting the soil until now they do not get to exceed six or eight bushels per acre. There is no profit in that system even if wheat should grow to one dollar a bushel. Give me our old-time crops, 25 to 30 bushels per acre and I can make big money in wheat at 60 or 65 cents per bushel, and I believe by alternating with timothy properly, our land can be kept up to its original productive capacity. I saw one peck of timothy per acre and can cut enough hay to well repay me for the time my land is thus employed. Do not misunderstand me to say that I am a firm believer in the "all wheat" idea, for I am not, but I do not believe in jumping from all wheat to all flax, just because wheat happens to be at low ebb just now. The present price will force farmers who raise wheat on $80 to $100 and upwards per acre land to change, and what will come back to a living price again. I do not believe in the idea of rushing about from one thing to another, as the habit of some is, but I think a conservative plan the best. Raise all you can of everything your farm is best adapted to, and you will hit it somewhere every time. Aim to produce as farm as possible everything you need to consume on the farm and continue to keep your expenses within your income every time. But by all means don't neglect to alternate with timothy and roots, and land occasionally. You will find that the best way."

Maurice Fee of Andover brought Mrs. E. P. Pierce an ill-paying goose that he had just shot at the farm. Pretty good for a boy's first shot.

Rev. R. H. Battey returned from Minneapolis Tuesday evening, says that the farmers are seeding pretty generally, and gardening is in full bloom.

Farmers about Crookston commenced dragging this week, and some will get a good start seeding. The pleasant days during the early part of the week dried out the land in a wonderful manner.

The newspapers along the Great Northern line that use patents have shown the effects of the high price of them coming out in half sheet form and on brown paper. They take it good-naturedly, however, in most cases.

Chas. Vine and family returned Tuesday from St. Catharines, Ontario, where they have been spending the winter. He has purchased the Carlson meat market, in the Reckitt block, and expects to be right in the swim in a few days.

Every farmer who was wise enough to keep on raising hogs when those useful birds were a drug in this market are now patting themselves on the back for their cleverness. In the spring of '93 pigs were gilted-edged property to have a reasonable number of.

Last Monday, Mrs. Geo. Vine had her week's washing finished and hung out on the line, where it was left over night. In the morning it was found that some skunk thief had taken the best part of it, and an investigation by the police failed to discover any trace of the missing clothes.

The musical department of the Normal College, under the management of Prof. H. W. Mayne, gave another of their popular musical entertainments at the college hall last Monday evening. Besides local talent there was a delegation from Fisher—Misses Brewster, Gleason, Gilbertson and Herrick—who contributed much to the success of the entertainment.

Although the weather was not all that could be wished for an opening display of millinery, the attendance at the fashionable millinery parlors of Miss Veronneau was gratifying, and the hats went off like hot cakes. Many ladies called to admire, and having seen could not withstand the temptation to buy when they ascertained how cheaply those lovely hats could be bought.

Chris. Ingberg was over from Grand Forks this week visiting old friends. Chris enjoyed a siege of typhoid fever last winter and came up smiling serenely. He reports the death of Andrew Nelson, in former resident of Crookston, who died of an apoplectic stroke on Friday last. Mr. Nelson was the pioneer in the marble business in this city, and built up a good trade here. Behind many friends who will regret to learn of his sudden death.

P. H. Wanninger: "I have raised a great deal of flax, and find it more profitable than wheat. I first thoroughly prepare the ground with a pulverizer and a drag until I have worked it up as near like a garden bed as I can, then I put on one-half bushel of seed with a drill, sowing it as shallow as possible. I cut it with a self-binder when it is thoroughly ripened, but do not tie it. I set up like buckwheat, a bundle in a place, and when it is fully dried out I thresh it. I never stack flax, and I always like to see a dry spell in flax harvest, as rain is a mortal enemy to flax and can easily ruin it. I do not, upon the whole, consider flax a more precarious crop to raise than wheat and when properly done it is usually far more profitable. I am surprised that there is not more of it raised in Polk county than there seems to be, especially in the past few years."

During the past winter this little manikin of the Times has been terribly exercised over a sock-and-bull story that he trumped up, wherein one Albert Olson and H. E. Cooke were said to be the principals. Heretofore we have paid little or no attention to his snarlings, as there is nothing in them so far as we are concerned. Now he wants to know if we used a printed form when we bribed the aforesaid Albert Olson. To this we have only to say that H. E. Cooke never hired Albert Olson in any capacity, never had him in our employ, and if McKenzie means to say that we did, he is a liar out of whole cloth. We might retaliate on him by relating his attempted underhand game in the Olds subscription matter, but it is nanecessary, as his methods of dealing are becoming too well known to need further ventilation.

Mrs. I. U. Jennings' millinery opening commences Saturday afternoon, April 28th, where will be on exhibition the latest styles and patterns in the millinery line.

With pleasant weather seeding will soon be in full blast, which will make it about the same time as last year. Many will commence in the mud same as last year, which is not the best policy.

As yet we have not received orders enough to fill a car with flax seed. All who intend to order should be prompt about it as, in order to secure the flax it must be ordered soon.

Low prices are a specialty with me this spring. If style and price will win a large trade I mean to have it. I would cordially invite the ladies to call and see my goods and get prices.
MISS E. VERONNEAU.

The river is full of logs that have come down since the ice went out and the mill will not have to vmit a minute to begin work as soon as it is all ready to commence operations.

The Northern Pacific road has been a very important factor in the commercial well-being of our city since the Great Northern strike blossomed out. It has enjoyed a good run of business too.

Mrs. Marsh went up to Thief River Falls on Friday last to figure on a job of work there. Mr. M. says the prospects are very good for considerable carpenter work during the coming summer.

E. M. Walsh expects to commence the erection of poles and the pinching of wires for his telephone system next month, and by June he will have the system in operation. Every business man should put in a 'phone and help make this enterprise a success.

W. S. Taylor has disposed of his property in this city and will take his departure for the east as soon as he can get around to it, where he intends to reside in the future. Mr. Taylor was book-keeper at the saw mill from the time it started until a year ago, when he resigned and went into the life insurance business.

E. M. Stanton had no sooner dissolved his legal relations with Mr. Stevenson than he formed a new partnership—or we might say took in a new partner. This event occurred sometime on Thursday night and Tom Ryan says: "The boy will be the next democratic president after Cleveland." As the boy has only 35 years or so to wait before he is eligible he will have plenty of time.

Walked to Town.

On Saturday last Peter Cornelius walked from his residence down to his tree-claim adjoining section 9, then taking the Fosston branch walked on the railroad to the N. P. crossing and came in on that railroad. Pete says this is the first time in his long residence in this country that he has ever been obliged to walk to the city on account of the roads being too bad to haul an empty wagon over. And he says he never before saw such a long spell of bad roads in the spring.

Attacks of cramp colic come suddenly and in many instances the sufferer has to bear the excruciating pains till some remedy is sent for and procured. Considering the fact that Hollers Pain Paralyzer is the best and a never failing remedy for the quick relief and cure for all cramps and pains in the stomach and bowels and that a large bottle only costs 50c, it would be money well invested to keep a bottle in the house for the relief and cure of all aches and pains. Nothing cures colic in horses as quick as Haller's Pain Paralyzer. For sale by F. L. Durand.

STRIKE SETTLED.

The Great Northern Strike Satisfactorily Settled by Arbitration.

About Seventy-Five Per Cent of the Last Reduction Restored.

A Committee of Twin City Business Men Act as Arbitrators.

The great railroad strike was declared off Wednesday morning, and trains will soon be running as usual. The strikers and President Hill having decided to leave the matter to a committee selected by the commercial clubs of the Twin Cities, a settlement has been arrived at which seems to be satisfactory to both parties in interest. Each side argued the question before the committee, and after considerable deliberation the following report was submitted and adopted:

"Whereas, at a joint meeting held this day between the management of the Great Northern railway, its employes and the committee of arbitration, at least 90 per cent. of the differences in wages in controversy were amicably settled between the company and its employes.

"Now, after hearing the statements submitted by the parties in interest, we find as a result of our deliberations that 75 per cent. of the reduction in wages made since August 1st, 1893, of all classes of men whose claims were submitted to us, should be restored."

Wants a Divorce.

A divorce case from Fertile will be tried at the next term of court. The title of the action is Olga Butz vs. Martin Butts. Olga claims that her husband ill-treats her and refuses to support her, notwithstanding the fact that he has sufficient property to do so. The defendant alleges that he is physically incapacitated for work; that he has never abused her, and that she has little or no property to raise money on. H. Stevenson will appear for plaintiff, and Montague & Backlen for defendant.

Hicks' Predictions.

If we may rely on Hicks' predictions for May, there will not be much chance for sociability with us. "An equinox of mercury is ce.tral on the 3d, and will cause cloudiness and tendency to drizzle. In the extreme north sleet need not prove a surprise; during the 5th and 7th re-actionary storms will pass over the country, being central about the time of the new moon on the 5th. From 10th to 14th is the next regular period of change and storm; heavy rains may be expected about the 11th 12th and 13th, during which time a series of daily storms need not be unlooked for. Secondary storms will appear about the 17th and 18th. About the 27th and 28th, will be central the last disturbance for May. In the nature of things, May must bring more or less violence."

Euclid Items.

EUCLID, May 1, 1894.

Prof. F. H. Gaskell spent part of Saturday in Red Lake Falls.

Rev. J. B. Astgrood drove to Red Lake Falls Sunday and delivered a sermon in the evening, returning on Monday.

Mr. Cobb, who will have charge of Dr. Chapin's drug store at Warren, walked up from Crookston Tuesday on account of the strike.

Section foreman, John Hinson, is having his annual clean-up around the section house and yards of the Great Northern.

Another bag was celebrated by the Euclid school this year by planting a large number of trees in the school grounds. Each pupil has his own tree to look after, and they are receiving a good deal of attention.

The Euclid Odd Fellows, their wives and friends who attended the celebration at Crookston last week, report having had a good time and that the occasion was one long to be remembered in Crookston and vicinity.

A. H. Pitkin's hot bed is just getting there—or rather the plants in the bed are. He is a practical gardener and we are getting all the points we can without letting him know anything about it.

Mrs. I. W. C. Misner, with her family, expects to start in about two weeks for Pound du Woods, Wis., where they will make their future home. Right years residence in Euclid has endeared her to her many friends, who will be greatly grieved at her going so far away.

It is very fortunate for H. C. Misner that the strike is over, as his store is sadly in need of many of the staples in nearly every line of goods. He had just ordered some goods over the N. P. to South Euclid.

M. P. Losey has sold the building he recently purchased of Mr. C. E. Sawyer to Tracy McCracken, who will move it out on his farm northeast of town. The McCracken Bros. are building very extensively this spring.

Seeding has been crowded at a great rate the past week and fully a third of the seed is now in. Many will finish seeding this year as early as they commenced last year. Much of the early sown is now up and looking green and nice.

Henry M. Stuhr took a well earned lay off Saturday, and boarded a N. P. train for Red Lake Falls, returning Tuesday morning. He spent Sunday and Monday with his sisters, the balance of the time visiting friends and looking over the town. He returns with renewed confidence in the future of Euclid.

Miss Daisy and Master Leslie Fargo were up from Crookston visiting their parents out on the Independent.

Assessor, Peter Stuhr, and M. P. Losey visited the assessors'l meeting at the court house Saturday last. Euclid shows her appreciation of a good assessor by re-electing him. That's Euclid, every time.

H. C. Misner received a letter from Mr. George Easley at Memphis, Tenn., who was on board the boat "City of New Orleans" bound for St. Paul, and if the strike keeps up he will bring the ship right along with him.

Our village blacksmith Mr. E. C. Murney is kept very busy these days, keeping everything in running shape for the farmers.

Dr. Chapin spends his thorough-bred colt every fine day. It is one of Star Bashaw's speediest colts.

Our seeds are all new and carefully selected. When you need some give us a call.

I. O. O. F. ANNIVERSARY.

The Crookston Lodge Celebrate the Seventy-Fifth Anniversary of Oddfellowship.

Street Parade in Afternoon, Speeches, Singing and Banqueting in the Evening.

A Celebration in Every Way Worthy of the Occasion—A Large Attendance.

The seventy-fifth anniversary of the founding of Odd Fellowship in America was celebrated by the Crookston lodge last Thursday in a manner befitting the occasion.

Invitations had been sent to surrounding lodges to attend, but owing to the uncertainty of trains there was not as large an attendance from outside as there would otherwise have been.

During the afternoon a procession was formed, and, headed by the Crookston band, paraded the principal streets of the city. The band made a fine appearance, and many compliments were heard on their excellent turn-out. A billy-goat—led by two boys—was quite an important part of the parade, and though he kept very quiet, he nevertheless made himself felt by the denseness of the atmosphere which surrounded him.

In the evening the Odd Fellows, their wives, their sweethearts and their friends began to assemble in the I. O. O. F. rooms, until at 8:30 over 600 had gathered to witness the exercises and take part in the banquet and ball.

The exercises began with the singing of the opening ode of the lodge, after which Noble Grand, Frank Gravel, who acted as chairman, made a neat little speech of welcome. Frank is a model presiding officer and performed his duties with the grace of a Chesterfield. On his right was the district deputy grand master of the Reskaking, Mr. C. A. Wyatt.

A male quartet—Messrs. Darnell, Lanctot, Leick and Rood—then sang, with splendid harmony, a greeting glee.

J. V. E. Wyatt next delivered an address on Odd Fellowship, giving a history of the order from the organization of the first lodge in America on the 26th day of April, 1819, by Thos. Wildey, up to the present time, when there are over 700,000 members enrolled. Mr. Wyatt gave a very exhaustive address on this subject, showing that he had devoted some time to the gathering of statistics and had thoroughly familiarized himself with them. He is a very enthusiastic Odd Fellow, and is never happier than when engaged in society work.

The next number was a solo by Miss Martha Manch, whose singing is always appreciated.

After this came an address by Mrs. C. A. Wyatt, who gave the audience considerable information regarding the order of Rebekahs. Her address was a credit to her and the order she represents. It was scholarly, able and complete, full of beautiful sentiments, clothed in the choicest of language.

Next came a quartet by Meadames Van Arman, Stevens and Adams, and Miss Hancock, whose singing called for an encore, which was responded to. These ladies have become very popular among music-loving people here.

The proceedings at this point took a somewhat different turn by the introduction of a little humor by Ed. George, who was down on the program for a speech. After tickling up the audience a little in his happy way, he got serious, and paid a glowing tribute to the order, of which, he said, he was proud to be a member.

A solo by Miss Dollie Bunnell, "When the Heart is Young," was well received, and called out an encore, to which she sang, "Maybe You Will, But I Doubt It." Miss Bunnell has a sweet, clear voice, and sings in an easy, graceful manner.

A. R. Holston was then introduced to the audience as the "Bill Nye of our lodge," and before he got through he demonstrated that the title was not a misnomer. He said, among other things, that he knew he was homely, but he didn't know that he was as homely as Nye.

A male quartet piano solo by Mrs. Nellie Johnstone, concluded the program, and the chairman then announced an extra number, which was an address from J. F. Creamer, the district deputy grand master. This gentleman said that the first speakers had covered the ground thoroughly on Odd Fellowship, and Brother Holston hadn't left him even a story to tell. But he nevertheless gave the audience many good ideas, taking for his subject "The Benefits of Odd-Fellowship."

This concluded the exercises, and the company adjourned to the dining room, where lunch was served, and it was not until 2 o'clock that dancing began.

The Odd Fellows are justly proud of their celebration, and their motto of "Friendship, Love and Truth," has gained a strong place in the heart and the people of Crookston.

Moths.

Dr. Aldricks of Kentucky is an enthusiastic entomologist. When asked for some information on the subject he has made a specialty of, he said: "To study the habits of the moth family you must live and grow up with them. The finest varities fly by night, and it is with some difficulty that they are captured. The usual way is to go out with a hand net and a pot of stale beer, sweetened with a quantity of molasses or sugar. A dash of this mixture on the bark of the tree, whose leaves the moths feed upon, is the bait which lures them to death. As soon as they light the net is sprung over them, and later on they are subjugated by being dropped in an etherized jar, after which they are carefully mounted and labeled. I have a home built especially for their propagation and filled with leaves of their favorite tree. With the caterpillars according to the right and kind of food spend many a night watching their habits from a rude cot in one corner of the building. It is quite a profitable business, besides being unusually instructive. Some of the largest varieties are the size of a humming bird, and the rarest kinds, when properly mounted, easily bring $25. The Smithsonian Institution at Washington before the fire of several years ago, had one of the finest entomological collections in the world."—Philadelphia Press.

The Color of Animals.

There is a connection between the color and character of animals. Although much of the subject is veiled in considerable obscurity, as a general rule it may be stated that vivid, conspicuous coloring accompanies strength, courage and often ferocity. The black or red hair and the ruddy skin indicate carbon or iron somewhat in excess, a sanguine temperament, rapidity of thought and action and courage frequently bordering on rashness. In the brain creation it is rather character that has modified color in the course of the survival of the fittest. The timid animal, hird or fish possessing the most neutral coloring lived longest and left most offspring, so gradually the conspicuous members of the family were eliminated. This neutral coloring as well as color that changes for protective purposes is the external characteristic of shyness and timidity, alertness of sense, keenness of vision and scent and swiftness rather than strength of limb.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Primitive Names.

The conternation which some botanists have raised in pressing the duty of abandoning many universally accepted plant names and adopting for general use more primitive ones is spreading to other departments of learning. It is found that the whole English language is in the same unfortunate condition as the language of botany. It is proposed to abandon "thinks," "walks," "listens," "freezes," etc., for "thinketh," "walketh," "listeneth," "freezeth," etc., as having a much prior claim to our regard.—Mechan's Monthly.

Muscular Exercise.

Dick (feeling of Tom's biceps)—My, what an arm! Do you frequent the gymnasium?

Tom—Gymnasium nothing! I read all the papers, dailies and weeklies. Just try it for a week or two yourself. The amount of burning over it gives a fellow to follow the different articles from one page to another beats all the gymnasiums in Christendom for exercise.—Boston Transcript.

COXEYITES HERE.

A Few Misguided Admirers of Coxey Pass Through the City.

They Parade the Streets, Make a Speech and Get a Few Recruits.

Liberati and His Concert Company at the M. E. Church To-Night.

Right In It.

Crookston is usually right in line with the best there is going, and while we cannot boast of having a real, genuine, live Coxey army of our very own, we had a bit of the imported article that marched into our city on Tuesday at about 10 o'clock from Grand Forks. The weary wanderers halted in the vicinity of the Great Northern depot and their spokesman inquired for the chief of police. When Louis showed up he was asked if the squad might stop three or four days in the city and recruit their ranks. The chief took the leader to Mayor Crumb and said: "Mr. Mayor, this is a leader of a Coxey army who desires to march."

"All right," said the mayor, "let 'em march right along." The "leader" went back to his "army" and soon the report went 'round that the right of free speech had been denied them, and some little excitement grew out of it. The "army" stood in line a few minutes and the leader announced that he had means sufficient to take a hundred men to Washington, and called for recruits. Soon the "army" took up the line of march and crossing the Great Northern bridge went into camp on the yon side of the river. In the afternoon they marched back and marched around two blocks, 14 strong, had a little talk near the depot and again went into camp. During the afternoon they industriously canvassed the city for money contributions, took supper at the Montreal House, and at 7:30 in the evening marched up town, had a speech on the school house grounds, then re-crossed the bridge where they had singing and dancing until about 9:30. Our people, while willing to hear what they have to say, don't seem to be inclined to be carried away with the new doctrine—at least not as far away as Washington.

The Liberati Concert.

Those who attend the Liberati concert at the First M. E. church this (Thursday) evening, will have the opportunity of listening to one of the highest grade concert companies traveling. Signor Liberati, cornet virtuoso; Miss Addie L. Laird, prima donna contralto; Miss Ottalie Mansager, pianist; W. J. Henshaw, tenor.

The price of admission has been put down to 50 cents, and to hear any one number on the program will be worth more than that to any lover of good music.

ARTISANS' HOMES.

GLASGOW HAS IMPROVED SOME OF ITS POOR DISTRICTS.

The Influence of Municipal Tenements In Brightening Human Life — Clean and Comfortable Dwellings Furnished to the Poor at Reasonable Rentals.

Municipalities are not necessarily wiser than other corporate bodies. Glasgow has by no means solved the human problem. But she has made some notable experiments in the direction of brightening human life. But, with less than half a dozen blocks of municipal tenements, she is still far from pointing the way to a healthy condition. She is also far from having become a socialistic city. She had the opportunity to make experiments in the most wretched of her districts. The experiments have succeeded, and private enterprise here, as elsewhere, has made similar experiments and with similar success.

The municipal tenements or artisans' dwellings, as they are variously called, consist of blocks of flats on either side of the Saltmarket. The buildings are four stories in height. The ground floors are occupied by shops. The houses are usually arranged so that on two floors there are three tenements, a tenement of two rooms being on each side of the staircase and a tenement of one room between them. There are also several flats of three rooms each. The tenement of one room is 14 by 13 feet. It is fitted with a bed closet, which is expected to answer the purpose of a second room, a scullery, a large press or cupboard, a commodious dresser and a kitchen range. Such an apartment rents for $40 a year.

The two roomed flat has a small lobby fitted with a press, or closet. On one side of the lobby is the living room, which is completely furnished as a kitchen. A scullery adjoins. There is also a bed alcove in the room. On the other side of the lobby and on the front of the house is the sitting room, to which is also attached a bed closet. Such a flat rents for $46.50 per annum. The three roomed flats rent for $80 a year. Gas is supplied by the city at the usual rate of 60 cents per 1,000 feet. There is a laundry at the top of the house for the use of the tenants. These artisans' dwellings are constructed in the most substantial manner. The stairs are stone, and the stairway walls are tiles or glazed brick, which is easily kept clean.

It has long been objected that these dwellings do not meet the necessities of the poorest class of laborers. The rents were too high for men who work in the streets or on the docks and other kinds of unskilled labor. Glasgow had to consider whether it were possible for the municipality to reach these men in any way. If it had been a question of letting rooms to single men, the arrangement could have been easily enough. But the difficulty was to devise homes for large families, and it usually happens that in this part of the world the poorer the man the larger is his family. Houses could be built, of course, but could the poorest class of laborers afford to pay a rent which would return to the municipality an interest of 2, 3 or 4 per cent on its investment? Could the municipality compete in that respect with the owners of rookeries, where families live in single apartments? Much deliberation was given to the subject. It was found that the municipality could put up a block of substantial buildings to meet the wants of the class hitherto left untouched, but that it would not be practicable to provide anything more than what are called "one roomed houses"—that is to say, one room to a family. To be sure, the rooms could be divided by a partition reaching within two or four feet of the ceiling, the sleeping quarter being thus separated from the cooking quarter.

It was finally decided that a block of single room tenements should be constructed. A place was cleared at the rear of a block of artisans' dwellings, and a plain building of three stories was erected, with four single room tenements on each floor, two in the front and two behind. These were let at rents well within the means of unskilled laborers. The building was opened, and in a day it was filled ever since. The experiment is financially successful, but in other respects there is little to be said for it. Of course the apartments are larger, lighter, healthier, better built than any single room tenements in the old rookeries. Nevertheless the objections to the herding of a family in one room are not thereby removed. They are merely minimized and in a very slight degree. It is not by any means demonstrated that a municipality is justified in doing anything to perpetuate the single room tenement system for families.

The construction of Glasgow's municipal tenement houses, whether of the better class or of the poorer, is admirable. The stairways, being built entirely of masonry, are consequently fireproof. The stairs themselves and the hall floors are of stone, and the walls of the halls are faced with glazed tiles or glazed bricks, as the case may be, and, as I have said, are easily kept clean.

A very large amount of work yet remains to be done on the municipal estate which comes under the administration of the improvement trust. Old houses are still being torn down, and crowded areas are being cleared away. Of course all this is a very expensive business. But it is being gradually carried on so that the cost may not fall excessively on any single year.—Glasgow Cor. Boston Herald.

A Duke Rebuked.

When commanding the Galatea some years ago, the Duke of Edinburgh called in plain clothes on an admiral, who rebuked him with the stiff greeting, "I should have been very happy to receive your royal highness on any other occasion, but unhappily at this moment I am expecting a visit from the captain of the Galatea." The duke went back to his ship and put on his uniform.—San Francisco Argonaut.

SENATOR MILLS AS A DODGER.

He Avoided the Workingmen When They Visited Washington.

Many workingmen are hurrying on to Washington. They represent hundreds of thousands of their fellow citizens. Some of them are paying their own way. Others are having their expenses met by the workmen who send them. These men from first to last are independent. They are Republicans and Democrats. They ask no favor. They are honest, industrious and patriotic Americans. While they seek no favors, they do demand justice and their rights as citizens of the republic.

They have been told that the Democrats are their friends. Democratic orators have groaned for labor. Democratic editors have shrieked from and robbery. A Democratic candidate for the presidency has rumbled most dismally. Workingmen have therefore believed that they were welcome to Washington. Consequently they have gone.

What have they found? An atmosphere too cold to measure. They are not welcome. On the contrary, they have been put off, put out, avoided and almost ordered. Mills has dodged them. Mr. Mills has always been their friend! He has almost wept over their wrongs—their wrongs by which they have had regular employment and living wages. They have had houses over their heads and meat on their tables. Their little children have had clothing and schooling. Their wives have had bonnets and silk dresses. But Mills wept.

At this day, however, when these very workmen have neither employment nor pay, Mills hides himself when they approach. He doesn't want to hear them. He doesn't, and by, as some uncertain period in the future, shoes will be cheaper, coats will come down, flour will be almost as cheap as dirt, and there will be as plenty as snow in the winter time Prognostications, no matter how beautiful and magnificent, do not appease a hungry man's appetite, nor can they warm a little child that is cold.

Thus and therefore Mills keeps well out of the way. He does not want to hear the plea of labor. He does not want to be turned backward to his former groans and promises. He is determined to stand by the Wilson bill. However, he was caught the other day. A committee followed until they cornered him. They were men of labor. They had travelled many miles. Under their arms they carried specimens of their skill and industry. They had pieces of American carpet and of American flannels, skeins of American yarn and an assortment of American tablecloths.

Likewise they had some facts as to wages. For instance: When they worked before the McKinley law was threatened, their wages were two and a half times greater than were the wages paid for the same kind of work in England. They wanted to show Mills their carpets and yarns and to tell him their facts. But he would neither see nor listen. He hadn't time. Further than that, he was tired and unchangeable. He believed in free trade, absolute, unequivocal. The workmen could not be heard. He did not think they ought to be heard. Moreover, he had no personal desire that they should be heard.—Cleveland Leader.

Sad Prophecy Fulfilled.

James G. Blaine once used theseremarkable words: "I love my country more my countrymen. I am an American, and I rejoice every day of my life that I am. I enjoy the general prosperity of my country and know that the workingmen of this land are the best paid, the best fed and the best clothed of any laborers on the face of the earth. Many of them have homes of their own. They are surrounded by all the comforts and many of the luxuries of life.

"I shudder, however, at the thought that the time must come when all this will be changed, when the general prosperity of the country will be destroyed, when the great body of workingmen in this land who are now so prosperous will bear their wives and children cry for bread; that the day must come when the great factories and manufactories of this land will shut down, and where there is now life and activity there will be the silence of the tomb. And the reason why this must be is this: The great southern wing of the Democratic party are determined to establish the doctrine of free trade in this land. They will be assisted by their northern allies. The fight is now on. There is a great body of visionary but educated men who are employed day by day in writing free trade essays and arguments in favor of that doctrine, which find their way into every newspaper in this land.

"The great body of our people have never experienced themselves the sufferings which always result when the protective principles are laid aside. Fulsome and excited by the wild statements of these writers and the demagogic appeals of Democratic speakers, the result will be that in the very near future these forces which are now working will be strong enough to defeat at the polls the party advocating the doctrines of protection. I must inevitably follow that uncertainty and doubt will ensue. The business men of the country, fearing the destruction of the principle of protection, will decline to engage in business. Consequently mills will shut down, and the workingmen will be thrown out of employment.

"The people will then see, as they have never seen before, that they cannot be prosperous and have work while this principle is threatened. In the midst of their suffering they will learn that the only way they can be prosperous and happy is to vote for the party that has built up the industries by which they have gained a livelihood, because they will then see clearly that when the manufactory is shut down there is no demand for the only thing which they have to sell, and that is their labor."

THE ENGLISH IDEA.

AN UNDERCURRENT OF ANXIETY TO SECURE OUR TRADE.

Interesting Comments From the British Press That Show How They Want to Sell Their Goods—Cheap Labor Has American Factories Mean Riches For England.

Exports to the United States have not been going out quite so freely as otherwise might have been anticipated, and if the new tariff bill is accepted by the senate a large increase in tonnage is most probable.—Morning, England.

The (Wilson) bill would reduce the duties in many cases if it became law, and intending exporters to the States are therefore holding back all the goods they can in order to escape the McKinley duties, should these be ultimately repealed.—East Anglian (Ipswich) Times.

It will be a bad lookout for Welsh tin workers if America ever succeeds in making enough tin plates to meet its own consumption. It will be still worse if America can manufacture more than sufficient for its own wants, for that will mean competition with Wales in markets now its own.—Western Mail, Cardiff, Wales.

There is at present going through the United States congress a measure which ought to prove of vast importance to Irish trade, but especially to the woolen industry in this country. The time to be in the field is not when the new tariff has been in operation some time, but on the first day that it comes into play. Our English and Scotch and other woolen makers will make a rush for possession. —Dublin Telegram.

The Americans will settle their tariff with an eye to their own interests and not to ours. As free traders we may think the two identical, but the Americans are a long way from seeing matters in the same light. British manufacturers should not let any chances slip them of utilizing to the best any opportunities for increased trade with the States a reformed tariff may one day afford them. But they must not expect too much lightly to a reopening of an undoubtedly free market.—London Commerce.

The tentative but unofficial cues of the gravs evils which afflict the body politic in the United States, and which, in spite of the immense natural resources of the republic, have evolved there a social problem at least as formidable and urgent as any which confronts the crowded states of the old world, will never be accomplished until the people have got rid of the mere professional politicians who have been allowed to usurp the management of their affairs.—Glasgow Herald.

In the Swansea and Llanelly district, which is by far the largest tin plate producing one in Wales, the news that the tariff bill had been passed by such a large majority was welcomed as the most unmistakable demonstrations of satisfaction. At this moment, when the industry is in such a depressed state, nothing could be better than this from America, for with a reduction to nearly the old tariff rate the old prosperous and palmy state of the industry may be looked to in the near future.—Western Mail, Cardiff, Wales.

The depression during the last two years in Wales has been felt so keenly that we can forgive the great rejoicing over the failure of the trade in the States, although Llanelly and Swansea people who are rejoicing at the failure of some of our employers who invested some of their capital in the States would do well to remember that had they been successful a goodly number were preparing quietly to follow their example and are now patriotic only owing to the force of circumstances.—Western Mail, Cardiff, Wales.

We must expect that the Wilson tariff bill will be keenly fought at every stage, and that plausible reasons will be found for not allowing it to interfere too summarily with vested rights and interests which have grown up under the McKinley tariff. In such a state of affairs as this and with so doubtful a future before them it will be well for our iron merchants and manufacturers not to expect too much from the Wilson tariff bill and not to be overforward in making preparation for changes which it may or may not affect.—London Times.

The writer in The Industrial World would have been more in place had he left his indignation against the telegram which a short time ago was circulated would be sent to President Cleveland by the tin platers, thanking him for his efforts in repealing the McKinley bill, which, on the face of it, was a glaring indiscretion and would lead the American party to believe that President Cleveland was subsidized by South Wales tin platers. The indignation at now that the immense popularity of President Cleveland will insure his election for another term, and especially as the tariff is now arranged on the lines already laid down, and if President Cleveland or the Democratic party as a leader of the same pronounced opinions as Cleveland retain power after the next election we can count upon a long run of trade here for seven or eight years.—Western Mail, Cardiff, Wales.

President Cleveland's policy while it does not go so far in the direction of free trade as it might do, yet makes changes of vast importance, which must have a highly beneficial effect, and in many respects it goes further than many people in this country anticipated. The bill has yet to pass through the senate, and it is likely there to meet with more or less strenuous opposition. The new duties dealing with income tax will in particular be unwelcome to that house. Whatever may be done with regard to this portion of the bill, however, it is practically certain that the senate will have to pass the tariff portion into law, even if some modifications are introduced. A fiscal reform which does have an immense influence and impetus upon the trade both of America and this country is therefore assured.—Leeds (England) Express.

THREE LIVES.

(Written for THE MESSAGE by Mrs. E. M. Stanley.)

A maiden stands by the window,
Watching the clouds drift by;
—Those shifting, pearl-gray masses
That traverse the evening sky.
With crimson and gold they are crested
Like rocks from the Mystic Sea;
They covered with fanny whiteness
By the fleecy spray so free.
And the maiden's lips are parted
By a faint and dreamy smile,
Her heart is stirred to music,
Watching the clouds the while.

To her, the clouds are the ocean,
'Mid on it, a ship rides high.
Her lover toils on its lower deck
And the good winds speed them by.
She sees him in fancy standing
With his face turned toward her own,
And hears the same old story
He whispered on leaving home.
She knows that his heart is constant,
And she counts the days that hide
Till he stands at her side once more,
And calls her his own true bride.

A mother stands by the window
With a wee babe in her arms.
Watching the self same structure
With all its gilded charms.
She reads, in its depths, the future
Of her prattling baby boy;
And her pale, thin cheek grows rosy.
And her eye speaks fear and joy.
Fear! for life's sea is stormy!
Joy! for a mother's breast
Is not doubt that, from out life's treasures,
Her boy shall win the best.

And grandma sits by the window,
In her dear old easy chair,
And the last bright rays of sunset
Fall on her silvered hair.
Her withered hands on the bible,
Her glasses on her brow,
And her dim eyes, raised to heaven
Are in the drifting cloud. And now
A sweet smile lights her features,
For she sees in this structure grand,
A sun kissed, pearly portal—
The gate to the promised land.

COXEY STOPPED.

Washington Police Refuse to Let the Commonwealers Into the Capitol Grounds.

Story of the March Up Pennsylvania Avenue and Its Very Sudden Termination.

Coxey Not Arrested, But He Was Marched Back to His Carriage by the Police.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—The commonweal army was astir early upon Brightwood heights, with preparations for the great procession to the Capitol. There was an early breakfast of eggs, coffee and bread; tents were struck and packed into wagons and the whole army was aligned before 9 o'clock. All the men carried staves on which fluttered white flags with the motto "Peace on earth; good will toward men, but death to interest on bonds."

There was much marching and countermarching on the grounds, prancing of stallions and hauling of the commissary wagons into line. The men had passed a cold night, most of them sleeping on the ground. Before the start, Carl Browne formed the men into a hollow square, and put them through a most remarkable drill.

The staves were handled like guns and when Browne shouted "gloria and peace" they cheered three times, stirringly, and waved their sticks in the air. These evolutions were performed by the main body of the army.

Browne harangued the men in his customary street fakir strain, telling them that they had received permission to march to the capitol grounds, where they must disband and enter as individual citizens.

"Whether or not we will be permitted to speak, I cannot say," he added, "but you must be careful to preserve the peace. Then we will re-form and march to our new camp nearby, which has been provided. This demonstration will be more powerful than force, than guns, or than bombs," and the ragged army at this cheered wildly. "Then Browne went on: "The people said that we would not march up Pennsylvania avenue when we reached here. Yet the police department informed Brother Coxey that we could march."

Meanwhile down in the city there was nothing to indicate that the city of processions was eager to view the greatest parade that had ever tramped the asphalt of Pennsylvania avenue. It takes brass buttons and bands and many of them to stir a Washington crowd, and Coxey's discontent fifers and drummers could not cause even the vagrant negro population to get down town before band. When the army was ready and out of Brightwood driving park it started for town. As the cavalcade wound its way down through the mile stretch of woods to the city it was ever conceived in a dream. Nine mounted police rode on ahead, clearing the way. Then came Carl Browne in his buckskin suit, mounted on his big gray Percheron stallion and waving a small flag. Next was a creamy white, prancing circus steed, the feature of the whole parade, bearing Miss Mamie Coxey, in the role of the goddess of peace. She was a slender, really handsome girl of 17 years, with long golden hair drifting down her back. She wore a pure white riding habit, which streamed after her as the tall horse on which she had been perched pranced to the music of the band. Her head was covered by a little rimless, blue cap, and she shaded her face by a tiny parasol. Altogether she was a picture of such unusual beauty that a greeted the unexpected appearance all along the line. The Goddess of Peace was followed by Oklahoma Sam, the cowboy, on another big stallion, then came Boy Kirk and three other marshals. Thatcher the bugler rode next, emitting frequent blasts from his cornet, and followed by the big flapping American flag, carried by a stalwart waiter. Next the commonweal army band of six pieces, mostly brass drums and cymbals, pounding determinedly in an attempt at "Marching Through Georgia."

Spectaneous Cheer

Mr. Coxey and his wife and 9-year-old baby came next in a carriage, and then the army itself.

There was little of actual interest in the march up to Pennsylvania avenue. When the head of the procession reached the east front of the capitol a solid front of policemen was encountered. They stretched from curb to curb, making progress toward the capitol impossible. The crowd was great and pressed closely upon the police. Coxey and slipped unobserved through the straggling mass and before anyone knew it was boarding up the east front entrance to the capitol. He was up to the tenth step before he was recognized. Then the officers closed in above him, and his further passage was impossible. The great crowd now recognized him and a shout went up from every corner of the vast assemblage. Coxey turned to the crowd and raised his hat. He was deathly pale. Captain Gardan of the capitol police stepped to one side of him, and Lieutenant Kelly of the city police was at his other arm. The police formed solidly about him. The crowd below was kept back by menacing clubs.

"What do you want to do here?" asked Captain Gardan.

"I wish to make an address," responded General Coxey, his voice showing intense emotion.

"But you cannot do that," said Captain Gardan, quietly but firmly.

The officers then moved Coxey down the steps and back to his carriage. There was no formal arrest. Browne was more aggressive, however, and was placed under arrest, as was also George Washington Jones.

IN A HAUNTED HOUSE.

Rosina Vokes' Story of Her Family's Isolation in Crowded London.

In everyday talk Rosina Vokes was altogether and bewitchingly the Rosina we know across the footlights—the same big, honest eyes, the same deadly staccato speech, the same tossing of that flaxy frame of shining hair, and the same ter of her speech was quite as fine or sense as any lines her playwrights ever set down for her speaking. It is a pity she never told across the footlights for all the world to hear the story she once told to a fireside few. The Vokes family, she said, had returned to London from a provincial tour, and intending to remain for the season decided to hire a house in preference to taking lodgings. They looked upon it as miraculous luck to find a house in an eminently agreeable neighborhood at a phenomenally low rent. They soon found out the reason. A particularly shocking murder had been committed in the house a few years before, and since then it had stood unoccupied, its evil reputation intensifying with every night its dark windows gloomed upon the cheerful street.

"But it was a lovely, comfortable house," said Rosina, "and we didn't mind a bit—in fact, to my thought it rather distinguished than otherwise, and, as for spooks, we'd all played 'em too often in dramatic pantomimes to hold 'em in any especial awe. Besides we were not any—nothing. I give you my word, more famous than a black beetle ever crossed our paths in that magnificent house. But all that a mere uncomfortable three months our happy go lucky family were spent. The neighbors knew us by name and name and banged it. They took the attitude that any one willing to live in a murder stained house was simply an accessory after the fact. My dears, never shall I forget the first morning I called on the local butcher with a plea for chops. 'Send them to 343 —— street,' piped I cheerily. The butcher turned darkly pale. He edged behind his block. He glowered at me over it, 'Tires forty-three, you said, mum?' he gasped. 'Mac alive, yes!' said I. "We live there, and we're not ghosts, or we shouldn't need chops!'

"Well, the long and short of it was we could get nothing—sent that wasn't returned at high noon, and then the butcher's boy had n way of firing up the things from the bottom of the step— didn't venture to come within grabbing distance of the door apparently. That was hard on the provisions, especially the eggs. No milkman would deliver milk in the gray of the morning, not he! We had subsequently to bring it home in a can. When the water pipes burst, we had to sop 'em up with our stockings, while the boys scorned London for a plumber rash enough to cross our fated threshold. We lived like Robinson Crusoes on a densely populated island. It was borne in upon us at last that it was a pity so much wholesome terror should go to waste. So the last days of our stay there we took to burning blue lights at midnight in the area window and emitting hollow groans from the front cellar. I fancy our landlord reaped the results of this light minded conduct. We never inquired."—Boston Transcript.

Shakespeare's Cats.

Shakespeare makes frequent references to the cat in his plays. Lady Macbeth taunts her husband when he hangs back from the murder with:

Letting I dare not wait upon I would,
Like the poor cat i' the adage.

alluding to that animal's fondness for fish—"Wust cat's reverse to fish"—but its unwillingness to wet its feet in catching them.

Falstaff seizes upon another feature of the animal's character, as detested by all wakeful sleepers in taverns: "Shallow! I am as melancholy as a gib cat!" When Mercutio leaves for a fray with Tybalt he accosts him: "Good king of cats, I would have nothing but one of your nine lives. That I mean to make bold withal, and, as you shall use me hereafter, dry beat the rest of the eight," and thereupon receives that celebrated "scratch" which was "not so deep as a well nor so wide as a church door."—New York Sun.

Robert Louis Stevenson's Home.

"Vaillima," which in Samoan for "fine waters," is the name which the Stevensons have given to their beautiful home in Apia. Four miles from the beach and 600 feet above the sea level a clearing was made among the trees, and the house, a rambling two story structure, painted dark gray and with a red roof, with broad verandas and comfortable porches encircls both stories of the house, and from the upper, looking northward, can be seen the "fine waters" of the Pacific. At the back are the green slopes of the Apian mountains. There is no driving to "Vailima" from the town, the house being accessible only to foot passengers or to those mounted on the sure footed native horses.—Ladies' Home Journal.

When There Were No Plumbers.

Lord Fountainhall, in 1674, says that there are no plumbers in Scotland, because there is no need for them. Happy simplicity of our ancestors! Now every man should in his own and family's because there is no need for them. Happy simplicity of our ancestors! Now every man should in his own and family's house learn a handy trade, and no man should be allowed to marry till he has passed an examination in plain and fancy plumbing. Few know what to do if the pipes are a frozen or if the gas meter is frozen. If you are practicing with a pistol, however, and casually miss a gas pipe, we do know what to do. Exhibit soup! Fill up the orifice with soup. This accident, it must be admitted, has frequent than n sudden flood.—Saturday Review.

A Clinching Argument.

The healthfulness or the reverse of corsets seems finally to be settled. They have been found on the mummies of Egyptian princesses of the royal family. These corseted mummies, it is interesting to note, are all dead. What more need be said? The dress reformers appear to be justified in denouncing corsets.—Boston Transcript.

WATCH DISEASES.

SOMETHING LIKE THOSE OF THE HUMAN MECHANISM.

A Jeweler Calls the Ailments of a Watch Consumption, Rheumatism and Heart Failure and Explains the Analysis In Each Case.

"That's the twenty-third today— we're going to have an electric storm," remarked a down town jeweler as he was handed a watch having a broken mainspring for repair.

"How do you make that out?" inquired the customer.

"Why, by the number of broken mainsprings, to be sure," was the reply. "There is a regular epidemic to which watches are subject, much as humanity is to smallpox and measles. It is produced by certain electric conditions of the atmosphere. The mainspring becomes magnetized and more brittle, and a slight shock will break it. Occasionally it will snap with no apparent cause whatever. I have had it happen to watches lying in the showcase or upon the rack there. You know, of course, that such atmospheric conditions frequently disturb telegraph and telephone lines and even prevent communication. That might be expected, as they are operated by electricity, but the effect on watches is singular. Frequently even a severe thunderstorm will produce it, but an auroral display, which seems to be an electrical disturbance, is sure to result in many broken watch springs, and no better term could be applied to the trouble than epidemic.

"No, there is no reliable protection against it, though many things have been tried and many thousands of dollars have been spent. Attempts have been made to temper the springs by electricity, a sort of inoculation against the disease. Then a small plate or disk of soft iron placed within the case to absorb the magnetism, a disinfectant, so to speak, has given some good results.

"Do you know," he continued in a discursive tone, "that a watch is similar in many ways to a human being? It has its diseases and decays, its epidemics, old age and finally dissolution. Yes, and each watch has its individuality and special characteristics, and the finer the watch the stronger this personality, if it can be so called, exactly as culture develops and strengthens the individual character among mankind.

"Now, in this epidemic this watch feels the atmospheric conditions as you do before a thunderstorm, only more acutely, as does a gouty or rheumatic person, being specially susceptible to such influence, and, perhaps having an inherent weakness at one point in the mainspring that snaps, fractures n vital organ. 'Heart failure' it might be termed, for the mainspring of the watch is its heart, its driving force. True, we can replace the mainspring, which cannot be said for the human heart, but there is no telling how soon surgery will attain that result.

"Then there's the hairspring of the watch, equivalent to its brain. It is affected by proximity to a strong localized electric force—for instance, the generator or dynamo of an electric plant. It becomes magnetized and stops —a sort of paralysis. The nonmagnetic watches have hairsprings made of n composition metal, tin, zinc and other varieties. The soft iron plate and disk mentioned before gives protection to the hairspring as well as the mainspring by absorbing the magnetism. A few years since a number of railroad companies had these iron disks shipped to the watches of unany of their employees, int they are by no means a complete disinfectant.

"The lever of a watch also is subject to electric influences, and when 'polarized, having a forked end, it becomes a regular horseshoe magnet and first retards, then stops the hairspring—a sort of spinal meningitis, you see.

"The jewels and bearings are its joints and processes and are subject to sprains and dislocations as well as inflammation or too much friction. Any severe shock may result in a sprain or even dislocation to these joints. The latter will stop it and probably have immediate attention, while the sprain may remain annoticed, but will render its movement irregnlar and eventually cause far greater injury from the frequent breaking of the joints. At sea on the approach of a storm the ship's chronometers of vital ships are always carried, are 'put to bed,' as it is called, being packed in pillows to prevent injury by sudden jar from the ship's violent motion. A few minutes' error in the time of making observations might throw a vessel many miles out of its course.

"Then n watch has a kind of rheumatism. The oil with which the pivots are lubricated dries and forms corrnsion, which irritates and cuts the pinions and bearings, creating friction or inflammation.

"Just as a watch, like itlinguness to humanity, is its most frequent, disagreeable and least dangerous ailment. It comes from all sorts of things—small fibers from the pocket, fine dust, perspirable matter from many sources, work through into the case and seriously disturb, retard and finally prevent motion altogether. The system becomes clogged, and a thorough cleaning out is the only corrective. In both these latter diseases atmospheric conditions materially influence the patient's condition. A dry, dusty weather hastening the development and rendering the attack more acute. Rest or consumption is a death by to a watch as to humanity, and after it reaches a certain stage is incurable. Once in the system its effects are never wholly eradicated, and a warm, moist atmosphere may at any time induce a return of the disease."—Chicago Tribune.

R. A. Smith, democrat, was elected mayor of St. Paul Tuesday by a small plurality.

C. C. Merritt, one of the Merritt Bros., of Duluth, died at his home in that city on Friday of last week. His death is said to be the result of financial troubles in connection with the late Rockefellow deal.

The arrest of Coxey and his lieutenants at Washington, and the prompt dispersing of the "army" from the national capitol grounds would indicate that congress is not going to do much on behalf of his movement. But Coxey will get what he is after—notoriety.

If is said that K. D. Chase, Donald Grant and M. E. Clapp, have disposed of their holdings in the Minsahe iron mines to John D. Rockefellow, on the same terms as those upon which the Merritts dropped out of the deal. The purchase price is said to have been $800,000. As they had already made a big thing out of it it makes a nice snug little deal taken all 'round.

Duluth News-Tribune: Referring to the report that "Col." Charles W. Johnson, of Minneapolis, is an active candidate for clerk of the house of representatives next term, believing the Republicans will be in control, the Polk County Journal expresses the opinion that he has already had lots of recognition and there are also lots of Republicans just as good who never had anything from the party. With this opinion most Republicans will agree.

There are those who will tell you that Coxey's army is not wholly composed of tramps and dead-beats, but is composed of honest, earnest working men in quest of relief. If this theory is correct, and these men are seeking to better their condition they have made a big mistake in this pilgrimage to Washington. They should have been marched to the unsettled lands of Northern Minnesota, where if they are really willing to work they could find plenty to do and in the end establish good homes.

The report upon the business situation of the country shows not a very marked degree of improvement —which is not to be wondered at while the Wilson bill hangs like a pall over the country. Consumers do not feel like investing heavily in goods while the prospects are that the bill may pass and flood the country with cheap goods from foreign countries, nor do our home manufacturers want to make up great overgrown stocks that must come into a competitive market with the shoddy stuffs from the old world.

Penny Press: The Great Northern system is being placed under martial law. Hordes of marshals are being dumped upon law abiding communities. Is it not about time to inquire if the people of a state have any rights left, or has Uncle Sam secured all possible power through the legal rulings of a corporation attorney who plays the role of United States attorney general?

When the administration is elected by corporation money, what can you expect? It isn't reasonable to presume that Grover and his admin will go back on a man who spent thousands of dollars to put them in power and the dear people should remember that they wanted a democratic administration; and they have it. They wanted a change, and they got it. They wanted "Four years more of Grover," and there they'd be in clover" Well, they've been wallowing in democratic clover for a couple of years, and still they're not satisfied.

In anything were needed to prove that the Twin City dailies are subsidized by the corporations, it is only necessary to read the accounts of the trip of the U. S. troops from Fort Snelling to Grand Forks. Each of the nine influential papers sent a special correspondent along to send in matter favorable to the road, and they did it with a vengeance.

They reported terrible encounters with the strikers at different points along the line. An exciting scene is said to have occurred in the Crookston yards. The Minneapolis Journal man said a shot was fired as the train was pulling out, and that it was apparently meant for the engineer. The representatives of the Minneapolis Tribune and the Pioneer Press had more imagination than the Journal reporter and they tell of a scrimmage in the yard, strikers try to uncouple train, couplings and pins thrown, and shot fired, soldiers called out and strikers dispersed.

The facts are that no such trouble occurred here, and not a single unlawful act has been done by the strikers at this point. If this is a sample of the lawlessness reported at other points by these papers it is clearly evident these stories have been made up simply to prejudice the people against the strikers.

At Grand Forks these special correspondents report the citizens as not being in sympathy with the strikers, when the facts are that the people were not only in sympathy with them, but the merchants had standing offers in the papers to supply all strikers with goods on credit until the strike was over. Does that look as though the citizens were against the strikers?

Says the Pioneer Press: "A strange fact in connection with the troubles here (Grand Forks) is that to some extent the newspapers are controlled by the strikers, and are cautious in their reports." An outsider might wonder why it is the people of Grand Forks will be surprised to learn that their three daily newspapers are all controlled by the handful of strikers at that point. The Press correspondent also offered his services as fireman on the troop train after the regular crew had quit. This fellow must have had very emphatic instructions from headquarters.

LUCK IN ODD NUMBERS.

Superstitions of Modern Gamblers Which Are "as Old as the Hills."

If there is one active principle that enters into gambling, it is superstition, and for almost every man that hunts the chance dollar over the desolate waste of the green baize cloth, or on the race track, or in any of the other multitudinous ways of chance that one may lay siege to alluring fortune there is a separate fancy.

Jack McDonald, one of the best known bookmakers of America, believes that he is most successful in those years which are indicated by odd numbers, and if you are doubtful of the truth of it he will offer you figures to prove it.

"Carley B," as Bookmaker Woolf is best known, has a steadfast belief in "9," and after he has selected a horse to bet upon he will place an extra heavy wager on him if he discovers that he is numbered "9" on the programme.

Several superstitions betting men at the Morris park races a few years ago noticed the coincidence that the thirteenth day of the meeting fell upon June 13, and they straightway sought out a horse numbered "13" on the card. They found one and bet upon him, and to make the coincidence most strange of all, he won.

That this belief in luck as applied to certain numbers is as old as our philosophy is known by the fact that centuries before the Christian era the Pythagoreans and Platonists, who represented all movements and phenomena of nature by numbers, invented the science of arithmomancy, consisting of the use of magical squares and applying occult powers to numbers. On the combinations of certain numbers depended the means of divination, and particular virtues were ascribed to numbers accordingly as they were odd or even.

"There's luck in odd numbers" is a saying as old as the hills. As ancient a writer as Virgil says he rejoices in himself esteemed the numbers odd, for in the eighth college he wrote:

Grand his warm image first I vital
Three woolen fillets of three colors joined;
Three round his thrice devoted altar I led,
Which round the sacred altar thrice is led—
Uneven numbers please the gods.

The Chinese have similar ideas. With them heaven is odd and earth even, and one number 1, 3, 5, 7, 9 belongs to heaven, while the even digits are of the earth earthy.

So it is little cause for wonder that our modern gamblers stick to their belief that fortune abounds in odd numbers only.—New York Herald.

THE CROCUS.

In sheltered corners and shady places
The waning waves of the winter lie,
But there in a token of coming roses,
In the tender pink of the crocus sky.
Above the dusk of the windy forest
The young moon sends out a silvery cold.
Come, love, and lean on the gate beside me,
And I will tell you a legend old.

A jealous wizard with withered tresses
Beheld a maiden with yellow hair,
And sobred her from his fellows' fingers,
And bore her far to his icy lair.
He bound her there in a sleep enchanted,
And hid her deep in a grave of gloom,
Then over the purple seas came sailing
A slender prince, with a pale green plume.

From the withered grass and earth above her
He brushed the wreaths of the snow aside,
And slew the wizard, whose cruel fetters
Let down the rose from the tomb to be his bride.
Look! There she stands by the broken trellis,
Where budding sprays of the ivy cling.
For the captive maid was the golden crocus;
Her sailing prince, the prince is Spring!

Business.

"Say, old man, I want to talk business to you a few minutes."

"Certainly; go ahead."

"Could you lend me $20 without its convenience?"

"Yes, I think I could."

"Thanks. I'll return it shortly."

"What security will you give?"

"Why—er—I—didn't think any necessary."

"Oh, probably I misunderstood you. I thought you said you wanted to talk business."—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Japan and Foreigners.

In the last century there was a Japanese law providing that no ship or native should leave Japan under pain of forfeiture or death; this any one returning from a foreign country should be killed; that no one should purchase anything from a foreigner, and that any person bringing a letter from abroad should die, together with all his family.

NO WHEELS TURNING

GREAT NORTHERN TIED UP FROM ST. PAUL TO THE COAST.

The Order Given Out by President Dabs Immediately After the Close of Friday Morning's Conference With President Hill—Eastern Minnesota Men Also Go Out.

St. Paul, April 27.—At high noon the Great Northern strike went into effect at St. Paul and Minneapolis and at all points on the line from this city to the coast. Within five minutes after the committee had arrived at the decision to call all the men out the order had been sent out by President Debs, and the fight is now in dead earnest. The company claims that it has sufficient men now in its service who will remain at work, while the American Railway union assert just the contrary.

The strike, if as successful in tying up the entire road as it has been in blockading a major portion, will be, with possibly one exception, the greatest fight ever made by organized labor, both as to territory covered and the number of persons affected. The Great Northern's total mileage is close to 6,000 miles with shops and full equipment, all of which the A. R. U. claims to be able to tie up. Spurred on by President Hill's refusal to recognize the A. R. U. as a representative body, the managers of the strike will make every effort to have the blockade complete. It will be a great fight and soon the less great it peaceful.

Everything Tied Up Tight.

Everything in St. Paul is tied up tighter than wax. There are 1,500 men in the Twin Cities, and both are solid. So far as the order has gone and it has been generally promulgated, there has not been a single refusal to obey. Minneapolis is absolutely solid. In St. Paul shortly after 12 o'clock, and on receipt of the striking order, 450 men quit work. The general freight yards are deserted, the only man remaining on duty being Pete Wadsworth, who was allowed to remain in.; Much confusion prevails in the yards in St. Paul, as Great Northern engines and cars are mixed up with those of other lines and not a wheel is turning.

The strikers have appointed guards for the railroad property, both day and night, there being eight men on each crew. The strike extends to all classes from the engineers to dining car service.

MR. HILL'S OPINION.

Great Northern President Says He Can Get Green Hands.

St. Paul, April 27.—Directly after the order for a general strike had been issued, President Hill stated that he had little to say in addition to what had been previously said. The company, he said, proposed to operate its road independent of the American Railway Union.

"I do not think," said Mr. Hill "that any great proportion of the men will obey the order, and I do not anticipate any difficulty in getting men to operate the trains. I intend that every wheel on the line shall be running in as short a time as possible, and this further says if the committee does not seriously alter the situation so far as the company is concerned."

An Interview With Debs.

President Debs was asked the situation at noon, when the committee adjourned, and said:

"The strike is declared on, over the entire line, and every member of the American Railway Union will at once quit work. This order, of course, applies to St. Paul and Minneapolis."

"The conference with Mr. Hill during the morning was then without result?"

"That conference was simply to talk over some matters upon which we thought Mr. Hill might throw some light; it was really a going over again of the ground which was traveled before, and the committee reiterated its demands for a complete restoration of the old schedule as the only basis upon which the men would go to work. The conversation with Mr. Hill was carried on pleasantly, but without the effect of bringing us any nearer together."

MORE MEN ARE OUT.

Eastern Minnesota Employes Strike in Sympathy With Great Northern.

Milwaukee, April 28.—A special to to The Evening Wisconsin from West Superior, Wis., says: All employes on the Eastern Minnesota have gone out in sympathy with the Great Northern strikers, and the immense docks there are quiet as on Sunday. It is rumored that floor handlers at the dock will strike, but this is not believed, as they are receiving good wages and have been idle so long. All efforts to start trains were abandoned; strikers are holding meetings.

THE WEDNESDAY CONFERENCE.

Nothing Definite Accomplished in the Way of Settlement.

St. Paul, April 26.—The long expected conference between the representatives of the Great Northern, the officers of the American Railway union and President Hill opened at 11 a. m. at the Great Northern offices. Messrs. Debs and Howard, accompanied by a sub-committee of seven, called on Mr. Hill and gave him the schedules which they desire to have adopted. A consultation was held between President Hill, his officials and President Debs and Vice President Howard, which lasted until the noon hour, adjournment being then taken to 2:15 in the afternoon.

It came out that Mr. Hill declined to accede to the terms proposed, and Mr. Howard hesitated not to say that a conference in the afternoon with the committee would be of no use. Mr. Debs, however, appeared more conservative in his view and thought it proper that the committee should call later and resume the discussion.

The conference in the afternoon was attended by a committee of 47 employes of the road on the one side and President Hill and his assistants on the other. Mr. Hill questioned the statement of Debs that the committee present represented the employes fairly, saying that if there were any addresses as St. Paul and Minneapolis, while not one of them was personally known to him. Mr. Debs, in reply, showed that, as regards the employment of the men, the different classes were fairly represented, and added that the older organizations would lay no obstruction in the way.

Mr. Hill's Proposition.

At 5 o'clock the session took a recess for the purpose of sending for some of the members of the old brotherhoods and to secure their sanction of the proceedings of the committee. After a recess of half an hour Mr. Hill submitted a proposition to the committee in which he suggested that the company would settle the differences with each class of employes separately, arbitration to be resorted to when an agreement could not be reached.

When Mr. Hill had finished reading the proposition Mr. Debs arose and declined to accept it; claiming that his mode of procedure was intended to break up the organizations and to create ill feeling among them. The men, he said, would not accept any such proposition.

This ended the conference for the day, the committee agreeing to discuss no matter among themselves and let Mr. Hill know the result within 24 hours.

Proposition of the Men.

The statement presented to Mr. Hill outlining the only terms which the men would accept was as follows:

First—That the rate of wages in all departments of employes as paid previous to the first cut prior to August, 1893, to restored.

Second—That the switchmen in Great Falls, Helena and Butte receive the same rate of wages, the rate to be adopted which is now in force at Butte.

Third—That the management pledge themselves to sign schedules of each department of employes, the same being based upon the rate of wages paid prior to August, 1893, as above stated.

Fourth—That, should it be necessary to reduce expenses in any department, the working hours shall be shortened instead of a reduction of the force, no more absolutely necessary to the contrary.

Fifth—That there will be no prejudice upon the part of the management against any particular employe or department of employes who have taken part in the adjustment of the matter of wages which has terminated in this strike.

Sixth—That the rate of pay as per this agreement be in force from the time the employes return to work.

ON THURSDAY.

Men Reject President Hill's Proposition. Settled to Further Conference.

St. Paul, April 28.—During the day President Debs acting for the conference committee, tentatively declined the offer of President Hill to arbitrate the trouble.

He immediately after the the rejection of the offer to compromise President Hill sent a communication to the committee stating whether they objected to arbitration as a method of settlement or whether they objected to the plan proposed. And continued:

"Bearing in mind the great advantages to all concerned that will follow a just and equitable settlement of any matter of difference that may exist, I desire to know if you are opposed to the question of arbitration, and before making my your minds to decline it that you may consider the question and let me have those in effect last year; and to the end that you may have the correct figures in this matter, I suggest that you bring your sub-committee to our office at 11 a. m. for the purpose of comparing figures. In the meantime, as I am not standing on any matter of form, I would be glad to hear from you as to whether you decline to recommend arbitration on the grounds above stated, or whether you have a better plan for forming a competent board of arbitrators."

To this President Howard, when seen later, said the men intended to stand by their demands for the August schedule would decline Mr. Hill's proposition to arbitrate. Further than this he would not commit himself.

Friday's Proceedings.

St. Paul, April 26.—Mr. Hill's suggestion for a further conference was acted upon and at 9:30 a. m. the subcommittee appeared at the Great Northern offices. They conferred secretly with Mr. Hill about an hour. Nothing definite was accomplished. Mr. Hill wanted the full conference committee to examine and compare the old and present rates of pay, and as the plan of arbitration proposed by the company had been rejected by the union, possibly the employes would formulate a plan of procedure that both sides would consider in a favorable light.

The committee left Debs and the subcommittee returned to Lahor Hall and reported the morning meeting with Mr. Hill.

Injunction Made Permanent.

St. Paul, April 28.—Judge Sanborn of the United States circuit court, had up for consideration the case of the Great Northern Railway company against Olson and other employes of the road. This was the chancery proceeding commenced at the beginning of the strike to enjoin the the employes of the road from doing further damage to property. No objection was made by the employes and the injunction was made perpetual.

Started Out a Train.

St. Paul, April 29.—The first through passenger train on the Great Northern was started for Great Falls about 9 o'clock this morning. It reached St. Cloud, but was stopped there for want of breakmen. A freight train started out the two previous evening was also abandoned at St. Cloud for a like reason.

TROOPS GO FORWARD

SOLDIERS FROM SNELLING TO TAKE A HAND IN THE STRIKE.

They Go to Grand Forks to Assist Marshal Cronan in Making Arrests—Strike's Again Re-fuse to Arbitrate, But Debs Thinks That Course May Yet Be Taken.

St. Paul, April 30.—A battalion of four companies of Third regiment United States regulars from Fort Snelling left at 8:30 a. m. on a special train of the Great Northern for Grand Forks, N. D. Major John H. Patterson was in command, and the following comprised the column: Company A, Captain John W. Hamer; Company B, Captain A. Williams; Company D, Captain George W. Stonch, and Company G, Captain Joseph Hale. There were 201 men in all, a full hospital corps and rations for 10 days. The battalion arrived on a special Milwaukee train from the fort, and it took about half an hour to make the transfer. When ready to proceed it was necessary for the yardmaster to set the switches, as the train crew refused to do so. The officers of the battalion said that their instructions were to assist the United States marshal in the serving of processes, and that they would not take a hand in the operation of trains. The remaining companies of the Third regiment are held in readiness to be sent to the front should occasion demand it.

MET BUSINESS MEN.

Debs and Howard Discuss the Situation But Refuse to Arbitrate.

Minneapolis, May 1.—At the meeting of the Minneapolis and St. Paul citizens' committee at the Minneapolis Commercial club no conclusion was reached, but there was some pretty interesting talk. The latest proposition on the part of Debs and Howard, who were at the meeting, and was to the effect that the executive committe of the strikers would be willing to argue the matter with President Hill at any public mass meeting in the Twin Cities and then let the public hear for itself the different sides of the question directly from the lips of the men most vitally interested. As to submitting the question to any other form of arbitration the representatives of the strikers stood firm against it.

The discussion was an executive one and must either have been highly interesting or very important, for it lasted nearly two hours. At the close of the meeting, Chairmen C. A. Pillsbury stated that the committee had now a thorough understanding of the side of question presented by the men and that the next move would be to see President Hill of the Great Northern.

NOLAN MAKES A STATEMENT.

Position of the Engineers Misrepresented by Mr. Debs, He Says.

St. Paul, May 1.—J. C. Nolan, chairman of the executive committee of the Brotherhood of Engineers, in an interview said: "The very unconplimentary things about President Debs of the American Railway union. He says that the only business the executive committee had with the meetings with Debs was to advise arbitration. He said the statement of Debs that a portion of the engineers committee had pledged support to the American Railway union." During the interview Mr. Nolan went into the past history of the strike and stated that in a conference with Chief Arthur at the beginning of the strike Debs had admitted that Chief Arthur was ill advised and promised to put the men back to work.

Position of the Engineers.

Mr. Nolan then went on to say:

"The public seem to misunderstand the position of the engineers and parties are misleading of those seeking to represent them. This misunderstanding is largely due to the statements of Messrs. Debs and Howard. They have no excuse for their misleading statements, for I have always been the same position since the A. R. U. was organized. My position has been one of loyalty to the brotherhood organization and of open and honest opposition to the A. R. U."

RESCUED THE MANDANS.

Montana Supreme Court Will Not Interfere in the Great Northern Strike.

Helena, Mon., May 1.—The Montana supreme court has refused to issue a writ of mandamus compelling the Great Northern to operate its line of railroad in this state as it had been accustomed to prior to the strike of all its trainmen. The court held that the proceeding was equivalent to asking the court to inquire and determine what would be a reasonable scale of wages for the men required to operate the road and to ascertain whether the required number of men could be employed at the wages demanded. The court said it was not certain it had jurisdiction for the arbitrament of these questions and that even if it possess such jurisdiction it should not decide them. Furthermore, the court is not sure that it has jurisdiction to issue a writ in the nature of the relation of the railroad property to interstate jurisdiction.

AT DEVILS LAKE.

Citizens Indignant at the Call for United States Troops.

Devils Lake, N. D., May 1.—Press dispatches announcing that Marshal Cronan has called for United States troops are received here with mingled amusement and indignation—amusement on the humorous aspect, indignation at the clur cast pon the state and citizens. No necessity exists for calling out a single soldier. The strikers here are mostly heads of families, owners of property and good, law abiding citizens. Farmers here offer provisions and supplies for the strikers if necessary. One farmer said he had three fat steers he will should supplies run short.

Press reports about trains leaving for the coast are untrue. Not a single train has left Minot since the strike occurred.

Mrs. J. H. Henriksen, 155 Pacific Ave., Santa Cruz, Cal., writes:

"When a girl at school, in Reading, Ohio, I had a severe attack of brain fever. On my recovery, I found myself perfectly bald, and, for a long time, I feared I should be permanently so. Friends urged me to use Ayer's Hair Vigor, and, on doing so, my hair and now my hair is over a yard long and very full and heavy. I have recommended this preparation to others with like good effect."—Mrs. Sidney Carr, 1620 Regina st., Harrisburg, Pa.

Mr. Ned Hindley, a prominent farmer and stockman of Washington county, Neb., says: "After trying your Hallet's Bath Wire Liniment, I am satisfied that it is the best thing on the market. I would not be without it, and cheerfully recommend it to all farmers and stockraisers." F. L. Durand sells and guarantees it.

The man who called sarsaparilla a fraud, had good reason; for he got hold of a worthless mixture at "reduced rates." He changed his opinion, however, when he began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It pays to be careful, when buying medicines.

Venetian Mirrors.

The beauty and absolute perfection characterizing the mirrors produced in the manufactories of Venice are amazing. It is said, to the pecullar solution applied to the surface. Preliminary to this application the glass is thoroughly cleaned with red whiting, then washed with distilled water and prepared for the silver with a sensitizing solution of tin, which is well rinsed off immediately before its removal to the silvering table, and the latter being raised to the proper temperature the glass is laid and the silvering solution at once poured over it before the least of the table has time to dry any part of the surface of the glass. The solution used is prepared as follows: In one-half liter of distilled water 100 grains of nitrate of silver are dissolved, to this being added 62 grains of liquid ammonia of 0.88 specific gravity. The mixture is filtered and made up to eight liters with distilled water, and 7 5-10 grams of tartaric acid dissolved in 20 grams of water are mixed with the solution. About 2 5-10 liters are poured over the glass meter to be silvered, the metal immediately commencing to deposit on the glass, which is maintained at about 104 degrees F., and in a little more than a half hour a continuous coating of silver is formed. After careful rinsing with chamois the surface is treated a second time with a solution like the first, but containing a double quantity of tartaric acid.—New York Sun.

REGION OF WONDERS.

SOME OF THE NATURAL MARVELS TO BE SEEN IN OREGON.

Illustrations of Both the Dead and the Living Past—Premonitions In Abundance of Something Strange to Come—In the Valley of Desolation.

Nowhere on the known globe is there another region of thousands of square miles presenting the weird and gruesome as well as the sublime and grand in nature as in a long and wide strip lying a considerable distance inland from the western coast of the United States. Here can be found an abundance of illustrations of both the dead and living past—that strange past of physical violence preceding the age of man, and that solemn past when the forces had gone to rest and the imprint of chaos lay everywhere. There are premonitions in abundance of something strange to come in the counties of Snohomish, Okanogan, Douglas and Yakima in Washington, but this is not fully emphasized until the Oregon counties of Morrow, Gilliam, Grant and Lake have been considered, and the marvelous receives a wonderful accession in the long line of eastern California counties, southern Nevada, a considerable region in Utah west of Great Salt lake, southern New Mexico and a region of no small dimensions in northern Texas. Here, to the mental and the ocular sight, are marvels problems in geology, paradoxes in physical formation and numberless instances of what may be termed inversions of established geographical order.

In Oregon we are confronted with the still and silent Sagebrush desert, hemmed in by a wildly picturesque yet as dreary and inhospitable a region as can be found anywhere. In the midst of this desert, as if to reflect the surrounding awfulness, is Fossil lake, and all the surrounding region is one vast and wide cemetery of the fauna of a precataclysmal world. Here are massed together more fossil specimens of a greater variety of early animal life than can be found anywhere on the earth, excepting the immense fossil islands northward of Siberia—horses of rare form, different species of mammoths, monstrous lizards, forms of huge proportions, wonderful birds, and the evidence that primitive man at some time was there is indicated by the presence of arrowheads chipped from volcanic glass. But what long ages have been entombed there! Tropical animals in their untamed strength trod the soil of Oregon and what mighty changes have swept over the earth since then! How came they there in such amazing numbers, and what were the causes of such universal and evidently such simultaneous death? No conditions on the earth as we know them now could bring this about. Yet here nature chose to locate one of her remarkable mortuary establishments and to enshroud it with the gloom of unrelieved desolation. Commencing in this region and extending down into California, the mountains are freakish. They are not constructed on the chain or continuous system. The cone did not wrinkle its crust, but she erupted into huge boils; the peaks stand isolated sometimes interrupting an otherwise comparatively even plain.

And over the valleys, rivers and considerable lakes take on a habit of becoming lost. The streams, after considerable underground meandering, find themselves again on the surface, and after a succession of reappearances and disappearances either stay found or are lost entirely.

Chasms, with almost a mile of depth and lined with perpendicular walls of solid rock, now begin to appal both sight and sense, and in Mariposa county the monumental wonders of the Yosemite exceeds anything of the kind on the earth. Before this hot springs have become cascades, lakes of soda water abound, and San Bernardino has valleys where the soil is hot and boiling geysers obtrude. Lava fields, covering immense tracts, have exhibited vitrified scorim from northern Oregon down, and Nye county, Nev., has lava beds in profusion. In lago county, and taking in a portion of San Bernardino, Death valley, grim, hot and repellent, presents itself, it and the surrounding region constituting, not in the mind only, but in reality, a region bordering more on the human conception of the infernal than can be furnished by any other locality on the globe.

In this valley of desolation the summer temperature reaches 140 degrees, rivaling that of the Sahara. It is some hundreds of feet below sea level, entirely destitute of water, although the Amargosa river discharges into one end of it, and in the interior has an atmosphere as of burning sulphur that neither human nor animal lungs can long inhale without great risk to life. Enclosing hundreds of square miles, it affords not a sign of either animal or vegetable life in its interior, while its furnacelike heat renders it one of the hottest spots on the globe. In the same system is Soda lake, into which the trembled Amargosa river finally enters, discharging its brackish waters as into a stove. The country abounds with salt streams that suddenly plunge into subterranean depths further south to furnish hot water, hot mud and sulphur volcanoes dotted in miniature over an immense area, hissing and spitting and loading the air with most disagreeable fumes. The Utah section duplicates many of the remarkable features common to the other localities mentioned and affords indisputable evidence of having been involved in the throes of the mighty disturbance that once prevailed throughout this singular region, and which must have been still potent long after the other surface that is now embraced in the United States was quiescent.

Whatever the quantities of the violence may have been, Great Salt lake lowered its level 940 feet, and a vast region partook of great and sudden topographical changes.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

THE MASTER PASSION.

Alleged to Be the Mania For Getting Free Passes For the Play.

"I was once present," said Charles Dickens, "at a social discussion which originated by chance. The subject was, 'What was the most absorbing and longest lived passion in the human breast?' What was the passion so powerful that it would almost indoce the generous to become the careless to be cautious, the guileless to be deeply designing and the dove to emulate the serpent?' A daily editor of vast experience and great acuteness, who was one of the company, considerably surprised us by saying, with the most perfect confidence, that the passion in question was the passion of getting orders for the play. There had recently been a terrific shipwreck, and very few of the surviving sailors had escaped in an open boat.

"One of these on making land came straight to London and straight to the newspaper office with the story of how he had seen the ship go down before his eyes. That young man had witnessed the most terrible catastrophe that the powers of fire and water for the destruction of that ship and of every one on board. He had rowed away among the floating dying and the sinking dead. He had floated by day, and he had frozen by night, with no shelter and no food, and as he told his dismal tale he rolled his haggard eyes about the room.

"When he had finished and the tale had been noted down from his lips, he was cheered and refreshed and soothed and asked if anything could be done for him. Even within him that master passion was so strong that he immediately replied that he should like an order for the play. My friend, the editor, certainly thought that was rather a strong case, but he said that during his many years of experience he had witnessed an incredible amount of self possession and abasement having no other object and that almost invariably on the part of people who could well afford to pay."—Exchange.

Hardy Climbing Roses.

In the prairie rose we have a class of hardy native climbing roses often found growing wild in Michigan and the western states, which we may plant with confidence. Two of the more commonly known forms of this class, which are favorites everywhere on account of their hardiness, free blooming, and the fact of their flowers appearing just after the other varieties are nearly over, are Queen of the Prairie and Baltimore belle, varieties raised in the year 1843 by a rose grower named Feast, in Baltimore, from seeds of the wild prairie rose crossed with some European variety. These two, the former red and the latter white, when grown near each other on the same porch or with intertwining branches, heighten each other's beauty by contrast. Both are of rapid growth and may be employed to advantage for covering any unsightly objects as walls, old trees, old buildings, etc. Among the most desirable roses of the prairie class we have Anne Maria, especially desirable, very fine for thorns; Baltimore Belle, pale blush, clinging to white; Gem of the Prairie, believed to be from the Queen of the Prairies crossed with Mme. Laffay, rosy red, occasionally blotched with white, large, flat flowers, slightly fragrant; Queen of the Prairies, vigorous, rosy red, frequently with a white stripe, medium size, full, distinct, seven leaflets arecommon.—Cleveland Leader.

April Fool Day.

The custom of sending one on a hootless errand or otherwise "April fooling" him on the first day of April is very ancient. Yet it cannot truthfully be said that any one is equal to the task of tracing to its origin. Some antiquarians profess to believe it a survival of the travesty of sending the Saviour hither and thither, from Annas to Caiaphas and then to Pilate and Herod. This opinion is strengthened by the fact that during the middle ages that very scene in Christ's life was made the subject of one of the feasts or "Mystery Plays" enacted on the chief streets of London and other English cities of the first class. Even though the scene was enacted to relieve the sanction of Brande, Moore and Hone, it is not at all unlikely that it is really a relic of the old heathen festival, such as the Hull festival of the Hindoos or the Roman "feast of fools." The custom, whatever its origin, of playing tricks and pranks of all kinds on the first day of this month is universal throughout Europe and is also practiced in many other countries and under various names. It is a curious fact that the Hindoo Hull festival, where April fool tricks of all sorts are played, is held on the first day of March, and the orgies are not discontinued until sunrise on the morning of April 1.—St. Louis Republic.

Proof That Sparrows Can Count.

There is no doubt but that birds can count, and an incident I witnessed several years ago illustrating the fact occurred under my own roof. A sparrow with four of her young, had a nest in a sparrow house under the veranda of my dwelling which I had fitted up to the nest with four living worms in her beak. The four little birds reached out their mouths in the customary noise and were each fed a worm. The sparrow then flew away, and after a time returned again with four worms in her beak, which were disposed of as before. The bird kept this up for some time, during which I was a delighted spectator.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Important Information For Girls.

Blue eyed men are the most sentimental of the species. At least this is what an eminent physiognomist says. They are peculiarly susceptible to the influence of the opposite sex, and under the warmth of one ardent glance, have emotional, mercurial affections and are found by the coquette to be easier game to bag than to hold.—American Woman.

POLITICAL EQUALITY

THAT IS THE RALLYING CRY OF THE CAMPAIGN NOW ON IN NEW YORK.

It Is Being Waged by the Society Women of the Metropolis, and They Believe They Can Get the Word "Male" Eliminated From the State Constitution.

That which was not long predicted has come to pass in the city of New York. The Society Woman (capital letters, if you please) has joined hands with the advanced woman in calling for practical equality of the sexes.

Just how this came about not every society woman knows, but there is one thing which nearly every one of them understands thoroughly, and that is that she and her sisters are very much in earnest in desiring the ballot.

As many readers already know, the energies of those who favor the extension of the ballot in New York are this year exerted in a different direction from that of former years. It is proposed to induce the constitutional convention, to be held according to the provisions of the organic law of the state in May, to prepare an amendment to the constitution eliminating the word "male" from that document. Once that little word is left out the rest will be a mere matter of detail, but even if the effort be successful before the convention the campaign is not more than begun, for the deliverance of a constitutional convention upon any subject may only consist of a resolution to submit the proposed change in the form of a question to the people at the next regular election, and this has to be done twice. It will be two or three years, therefore, before the preliminary stage will be passed and the essential details of the change will be taken up.

The conversion of the society women to the advanced way of thinking was so far as the public knows, a rather sudden thing, but there is little doubt that unless the growth of this feeling receives an unlooked for setback the women will eventually, if not this time, win for themselves the prize they so earnestly desire. One thing that makes for this conclusion is the fact that, although there are some who fight the proposition with all the earnestness of former years, the period of fighting the movement solely by ridicule seems to have practically passed away.

The chief difference between the present methods and those of the past, aside from the entry of the society women upon the field and the assault made upon the constitutional convention instead of the legislature, lies in the meetings. Instead of public gatherings attended by thousands and open to all, meetings have been held in the parlors of some of the most exclusive houses, and no one has been present except by invitation. The speeches indeed, have been women identified with the suffrage movement for years, but others as fine and clever as those have not been much in evidence, and the speaker even has often been a society woman or a professional or business woman whose interest in the matter is of recent growth and due to the belief that without the same political privileges and responsibilities as are accorded to men she has not the same opportunities for success in her chosen occupation as a man. Besides the meetings at society houses, which have in most cases been attended by the fragrant aroma of tea parties as well as the ladies, petitions have been started in all directions, headquarters for that branch of the campaign having been established at Sherry's, in Fifth avenue, a favorite resort generally for the swell set of the metropolis and the Manhattan seaboard. Society women have themselves sat behind the table at Sherry's day after day and superintended the signing of the rolls by all who desired to add their name thereto. The list that is there offered for signatures does not bear so many nor so important names as many suppose, because of the reluctance which is felt in many respectable one both as to quantity and quality, and when I examined it in day or two ago I observed that there were more signatures of men than women. This fact brings to mind the oft repeated statement that men have always been ready to accord the ballot to women whenever the majority of the women really desired it. At the present time there is no doubt that the society women all the old time agitators and many of the professional and business women are aroused upon the subject, but the feeling in favor of political equality is still very feeble among the home women of the "middle class"—the wives and sisters and daughters of men if the receipt of incomes of from $800 to $5,000 a year. I do not mean to say that no women of the class indicated are interested, but that the majority are not and there is no doubt whatever. Granting this, it is clear that the women of New York as a whole are not yet asking for the suffrage.

"We are well aware," said a young woman in charge for the day at Sherry's recently, "that the middle class women are not yet aroused, but they will be, I am sure. We have had so much to do in getting our petitions out among those whom we personally know that we have not yet had time to go to those with whom we are not acquainted. But if you observe the men who come in here to sign you will see that they do not all look as if they were rich, and if the middle class men, financially speaking, come out for equal political rights their wives and daughters will too. Is it logical for no one to say that the women will be guided by the men in this matter? Well, it's true any way, and it couldn't be otherwise. We have always followed the lead of men in political and economic thought—most of us—and if we get citizenship we became many of us are led by the men it's all right. We don't care about that. What we want is the citizenship.

"I have not thought very long on this matter. I don't know the history of the so called 'woman's rights movement' at all well or the names of its pioneers. But my mamma used always when I was alive to see that I kept pretty well informed on the political events of the day, and my mamma has always believed women were as well qualified to exercise the powers of citizenship as the men and some women, I think, are to a great deal better qualified than some men. I agree with her in this, and so do most of the girls of my women I know. One thing is certain. We shall not do as so many men we know have done—stay away from the polls after voting. We know that ignorant women, and frivolous women, and bad women will vote as well as men will and as we will, and I believe that when equality comes the grand many good, pure women will may not now favor the suffrage will see the situation as it is and vote because one of her nieces for her liberal use of "awfully jolly." The young lady replied: "Oh nant, do not deprive me of that awfully fetching expression. If I were deprived of it I shouldn't know what to say."

The frequent use of the expletive "you know" was justified to me on the ground that it keeps the listener's attention awake.

The fashionable novel presses into its service these flowers of speech. In Mr. Norris' "Countess Radna" a young gentleman thus addresses a young lady. "I'm so awfully sorry that you are going to desert us." "I'm awfully sorry to have to go," replied the girl compassedly, "and accounts will be awfully sorry to see me."

Of this young lady's two lovers the author himself describes one in the same chapter (24) that one was much "nicer" than the other. In chapter 37 the nicer one, in declining an invitation, says, "Thanks awfully, but I'm afraid I can't."—Notes and Queries.

the vives and mothers, the good, pure women, vote there, and that they vote as they think and not as they are told they are at liberty to do so. I do not fear for embarrassment in voting nor for want of ability to keep posted on it. I shall know how to vote, but duties come with privileges, you know, and I have been thinking a good deal about jury duty and some other things. There are some cases, you know, in which I should not like to be a jury woman, and I can imagine a jury containing some men with whom I should not like to be shut up for long deliberation over a verdict."

No matter how the petitions are received by the constitutional convention, the present interest taken by the society women of New York is of itself a great victory for the pioneer Mrs. Eliza both Cady Stanton, Mrs. Lillie Devereux Blake, Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, Miss Susan B. Anthony and the host of young er women like Mrs. Eliza Archard Conger, Helen Gardener, Sarah Orne Jewett, Jenny June Croly, Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge and others who have unostentatiously labored for the enfranchisement of the suffrage idea among members of their own sex. The fact that it has needed the help of Russell Sage, Mrs. A. M. Palmer, Colonel Bob Ingersoll, Frederic Coudert and other lights of both sexes to bring the present sentiment into being does not detract one iota from the credit the leaders should receive. It is somewhat interesting to note that among those who are in opposition are Marion Harland, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, Emma D. E. N. Southworth and Mrs. Bab Mallon, all women of marked individuality and unusual abilities.

The history of woman's suffrage in the state of New York is peculiar, and one where is too well known to be touched on here, but it is significant that both those who oppose and who favor political equality in New York cite the results where it has been granted in support of their arguments. The women in the state of New York outside the city, though not so strong, is still one of considerable magnitude.

Lord Rosebery's Late Wife.

Lord Rosebery, the present prime minister of England, married a cousin of Lord Rothschild, the daughter of Sir Anthony, and is said to have received from her father's estate the sum of $6,000,000 as a wedding gift. Lady Rosebery, who was a most accomplished and very philanthropic woman, died several years ago.

A KABYLE MARRIAGE.

The Ceremony Is Complicated and Winds Up With an Exciting Incident.

The wedding ceremony among the Kabyles is interesting because of its comparative resemblance to the customs of the old Greeks and Romans and even to those which still prevail in segregated parts of France. Here it is the girl's father who exacts a wedding portion, a sum of about £8, for which the bridegroom has generally to rely upon the advances of his friends. Often, too, the young man has not a house for his bride, in which case his friends set to work and build one, no very difficult matter.

On the wedding day the bride is led through the village in the neighborhood, mounted on a mule and escorted by friends and relatives, who shout and fire guns again and again. The various householders hasten forth to offer her a sieveful of beans, nuts or dried figs. Of these she takes a handful, which she kisses and then applies in the sieve. All the offerings are collected in sacks by the old women of the procession as contributions to the young people's larder.

At the bridegroom's house the girl's hands are washed with liquid butter. Then they give her some fresh eggs, which she breaks on the male's head and inside the unhappy animal's ears, thereby, it is believed, counteracting any evil designs against her and her husband's happiness. Before entering the house she drinks milk, fresh and sour, and also water, and scatters over her shoulder a handful of barley, wheat and salt for the good of the house.

The husband then approaches her and fires a pistol above her head to signify that thenceforward he has the power of life and death over her. Not infrequently he makes the symbol even more emphatic by firing into her headdress and setting her aflame. This done, little remains except for the youth to lift the veil from his arms and carry his spouse into his house.—All the Year Round.

A Kind of All Work Adjective.

I inquired of the head mistress of a girls' school why she so frequently made use of the adjective "nice." She replied, "Because it is such a useful maid of all work adjective and saves one the trouble of thinking!" "Then you teach your girls to be inaccurate?" "I don't think it is being inaccurate. The word in most cases expresses my meaning better than any other." A relative of mine reproved one of her nieces for her liberal use of "awfully jolly." The young lady replied: "Oh nant, do not deprive me of that awfully fetching expression. If I were deprived of it I shouldn't know what to say."

The frequent use of the expletive "you know" was justified to me on the ground that it keeps the listener's attention awake.

Killing Crocodiles.

"There are two ways of killing crocodiles," writes an ex-resident of India. "One is by shooting with a rifle, but the most satisfactory way of dealing with them, besides being far the most sporting, is to bait a good large hook with a bird or small animal and fasten it by a chain to a good long rope, the end of which is firmly picketed, the rope being coiled and the bait laid in shallow water. There must be lots of slack line, as the crocodile does not swallow anything that does not, seizes it and takes it thing deep water to gorge. A number of lines may be laid and looked up in the morning or cool of the evening. When hooked, it will take a good many men to haul it ashore, and it is not an unusual the operation and can use his tail as well as his jaws one or two sportsmen will find considerable entertainment in dispatching him with spears. Some crocodiles grow to an enormous size, and their necks have always round their white stones, and often trinkets, the relics of inside passengers. The writer assisted at the death of a not extraordinarily large 'mubnose' which had six women's rings in her."—Badminton Library.

A Dagger Signal.

"I found a queer specimen today," said the policeman to the reporter.

The interrogation points popped into the reporter's eyes.

"Old fellow drunk in the alley," continued the officer. "I noticed him go in and watched him. He found a comfortable place and laid down on it, then took a placard out from under his coat and hung it around his neck."

"What was on the placard?" asked the reporter as the officer stopped with the apparent intention of having him ask the question so he could spring the answer on him. "Hanged as an April fool. It is loaded." And the officer laughed as if a policeman's lot were sometimes a happy one.—Detroit Free Press.

Ugliness.

Reformed Geometry.

Almost 100 years ago two men set out from Virginia to visit the Scioto valley, of the beauty and fertility of which they had heard alluring reports. On the third night they reached Charlsburg, where they put up with a man who appeared to be honest, but old fashioned and illiterate.

"Can you tell us how far it is to Marietta and what sort of a road we shall find?" asked one of the travelers.

"Yes," answered the host; "that is exactly what I can do, for I was appointed one of the viewers to lay out the road and have just returned from the performance of that duty."

"That is fortunate. What do you call the distance?"

"Well, the distance on an outright line, which we don't run, was 76 miles, but on our way back we discovered and marked another line which was much nearer."

The two travelers had each spent some years in the study of surveying and were more or less amused at the idea of a line shorter than a straight line between two given points.

However, the next morning they took the route which their informant had recommended as nearer, and then enough they found his statement correct, for the crooked road went round the hills, while the straight one went over them, and the distance round was less than the distance over.—Youth's Companion.

Gifts at Baptism.

Gifts to infants on their baptism are of ancient origin. Formerly the sponsors generally offered gilt spoons to the child. These spoons were called apostle spoons, because the figures of the 12 apostles were carved at the top of the handles. Rich sponsors gave the complete set of 13, while for those who were not so opulent four was considered the proper number, and poor sponsors would content themselves with offering one. In the latter case the handle of the spoon generally exhibited the figure of any saint in honor of whom the child received its name. It is in allusion to this custom that a woman professes himself to be unworthy of being sponsor to the young princess, Shakespeare makes the king reply:

"Come, come, my lord, you'll spare your spoons."

The mug or spoon and fork offering of the present day appears as a very debased survival of a really beautiful christening offering.—Westminster Review.

SMITH WAS A BAD MAN.

And He Had Lessened One Gama of Which He Could Boast.

"But speaking of train robberies," put in the colonel, "reminds me of a man I met when I was in command of Fort D. A. Russil at Cheyenne. He was an express messenger named Smith, and his run was on what they called out there the 'high line' of the S. and M. railroad. Smith was a bit much of a man to look at, but he was great in action, as you'll agree. "I'd heard of Smith before I met him. He'd killed two men down in western Kansas, and they were saying around Cheyenne that he was 'bad.' So I was curious to get him to tell me the story, and after awhile he did.

"He used to have a run on the Santa Fe down where it crossed into Colorado. All the messengers, you know, carried guns in those days—they do yet, for that matter—but Smith understood the use of a six shooter better than some of his mates. Things had been so smooth on his run for so long that he got a bit careless at last and used to leave the door of his car unlocked so that the brakeman could come in and talk with him whenever they liked without his having to go to the end of the car to unlock the door.

"Smith had one game, though, which was all his own. He told me that he had practiced it in good deal so that he could shoot within a fraction of a second after hearing my one say, 'Put up your hands.' All the train men on his run knew that. You know those fellows are great in sky larking, and Smith had warned them never to try to play that joke on him, because, he said, the first man who came into his car and took him unawares with that remark would be likely to die.

"One day he was sitting behind his little square iron safe checking off his money packages. He had the safe in a corner of the car facing one end. He always sat with his back against the front end of the car. The front door was always barred. When he raised the lid of the little trankliike safe the messengers used then, he always put his two big six shooters on the corners of the safe in front of the lid. Any one approaching him from the rear end of the car couldn't see the guns, but they were ready for instant use.

"Well, on this day I'm telling you about, as he was checking off the packages, he heard the car door open and some one come in. He took it for granted that the visitor was the brakeman whom he was expecting, and without looking up went on with his work. He checked two or three more packages and was almost finished when he heard the sharp command, 'Put up your hands!'

"He looked up on the instant and saw two men, not in the least disguised, covering him with six shooters. His own hands were behind the lid of his safe. 'All right, boys,' he said. 'Don't shoot. They're up.'

"They went up, that was true, but as they went over the lid of the safe there was a six shooter in each one. Both six shooters cracked the instant their nozzles came above the safe lid, and both bullets killed. The robbers fired, but they didn't pull until after they had been hit, and their bullets went wild.

"It was all done so quickly that there was no outcry or noise, and when the brakeman went into the car a few minutes afterward he found Smith washing up the blood from the floor. The dead men were on a blanket in a corner. That was how Smith got his reputation for being 'bad.'"—New York Sun

Painstaking Forgers.

"Men try in every way possible," said a prominent bank president, "to obtain the signatures of New York bankers.

"I suspect it is mainly to use them in committing forgeries. At least we suspect so, and for that reason try to be as careful as possible in signing letters.

"In this bank we have many letters from the west of such a trivial nature that we suspect an ulterior motive upon the part of the writers, and if we answer them at all do so by typewriter, even to the signatures.

"One forger or counterfeiter in Indiana is exceedingly systematic and persistent in his efforts to obtain the signatures of our officers. As regularly as the year comes around he writes, inclosing a $10 bill, and requests us to send him one of our new $10 bank notes in exchange.

"He always gives the same reason for the request—that he wants it for his collection. Of course that is nonsense. We believe that he wants a new bill so that he may discover if we have changed our officers and get their signatures.

"He never does get them though. We always return his bill with a typewritten letter on paper not answering the accessing ourselves on the ground that we have no circulation outstanding."—New York Herald.

Woodpeckers That Look Ahead.

There is a species of the bird known as the woodpecker in the far west that bases unusual amount of reasoning faculty. It is much tamer than the species of that bird found farther east and frequents the towns rather than the woods. They make holes along the eaves of a house, and in these holes they place acorns, not for the purpose of eating them, as the birds do not eat the acorns at all, but for the purpose of devouring the grubs that germinate in the acorn. WORK OF CONGRESS.

Tuesday, April 24.

Senator Mills opened the general debate on the tariff bill in the senate.

The house continued the consideration of the diplomatic and consular bill.

The several house bills were passed by the senate, including one to authorize the building of a bridge over the St. Louis river between Duluth and West Superior. At 1 o'clock the tariff bill was taken up by unanimous consent and Senator Aldrich began in opposition to it when the sugar schedule was reached. Mr. Platt of Connecticut followed, also in opposition.

Thursday, April 26.

The diplomatic and consular appropriation bill passed the house. It carries $1,515,688.

In the senate, Mr. Jarvis, recently appointed from North Carolina to succeed the late Senator Vance, took the oath of office.

The tariff bill was taken up and reading by paragraphs continued.

Friday, April 27.

Twenty-one private pension bills passed was the result of the day's work in the house. Mr. Hepburn of Iowa, who has been harassing the Democratic side daily for a week to force action on these pension bills, finally succeeded, through the aid of Mr. Pickler of South Dakota, who has been acting with him, and the bills were passed in 21 minutes.

The senate continued the debate on the tariff bill. The proceedings were enlivened by a proposition by Mr. Aldrich of Rhode Islandside, to amend the title of the tariff bill and amendments at once. Leaders of the Democratic side professed to be willing but objections were made and the debate was continued.

Saturday, April 28.

The senate continued the debate on the tariff bill by paragraphs. Nothing of general interest was done in the house.

Monday, April 30.

The house spent the day in committee of the whole on the army appropriation bill. The senate continued the debate on the tariff bill,

MORE WORK FOR THE ARMY.

Colonel Swaine Receives Orders to Repress Lawlessness in the Northwest.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—National power is to be exercised to compel respect for the law in the far Northwest, where trains are being seized by commonwealers and the law being disregarded. General Schofield sent orders to Colonel Swaine at St. Paul, in command of the department of the Dakotas, and General Otis at Vancouver barracks, in command of the department of the Columbia, to use the troops under their command upon the application of the United States marshals in the several states along the line of the Northern Pacific and in executing the processes of the United States courts. Special orders have been sent forward to recapture the train seized at Troutdale by the tramps and now on its way East.

The government has settled the question of the prisoners taken at Forsyth, Mont., by giving directions to the military authorities to transfer them to Helena, Mont., where they may be dealt with by the civil authorities. Those prisoners who are not charged with espionage until the courts shall have disposed of their cases.

Longed From the Flames.

RACINE, Wis., May 1.—William Torbert and wife and their nine children leaped from the second-story windows of their burning dwelling at 1:30 a. m. to escape death from the flames. When they awoke the entire building was in a blaze, and as the last child jumped from the window it was wrapped in flames, its clothing having taken fire. Almost at the same time was so seriously hurt that death is feared.

The Human Electrical Forces!

How They Control the Organs of the Body.

The electrical force of the human body, as the nerve fluid may be termed, is an exquisite attractive department of science, as it exerts so marked an influence on the health and happiness of the human race. Force is produced by the brain and conveyed by means of the nerves to the various organs of the body, thus supplying the latter with the electrical energy necessary to their healthful action. The pneumogastric nerve, as known here, may be said to be the most important one in the entire nerve system, as it supplies the heart, lungs, stomach and liver with the necessary nerve force necessary to keep them active and healthy. As will be seen by the accompanying cut, descending from the base of the brain and accompanying the carotid artery, the two branches supply the heart with necessary vitality. When the brain begins to cease in any way discharging its functions, the nerve force which is supplied is lessened, and the organs receiving the diminished supply become consequently weakened.

Physicians generally fail to recognize the importance of this fact, but treat the symptoms instead of the cause. Dr. Miles' Nervine, especially prepared by Dr. Miles, has given the greater part of his life to the study of this subject, and the principal discoveries concerning it are due to his efforts. Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, by its action on vital brain and nerve food, is prepared on the principles that all nervous and many other diseases originate from disorders of the nervecentres. It controls the nerve force and conducts it to itself to by channels in every part of the land.

Restorative Nervine cures sleeplessness, nervous prostration, dizziness, hysteria, neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs. It is sold by druggists on a positive guarantee first bottle will benefit. Dr. Miles' Book on Nervous Diseases, free, on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

"How good digestion wait on appetite, And health on both."

To insure both the above ends, good, wholesome, palatable food is demanded. It is next to impossible to present a sufficient variety of appetizing bill of fare for our meals without a liberal allowance of pastry and other food in which shortening is required. How to secure the healthful, digestible pastry has puzzled the cooks. A difficulty in all good cooking in the past has been met. Always light, never uniform, unwholesomeness—lard has always been the bane of the cook and the obstacle to "good digestion."

COTTOLENE

comes now into popular favor as the new shortening—better than even the best of lard with none of lard's objectionable qualities. And comes attended by both "APPETITE AND HEALTH."

COTTOLENE

CHAPTER XXV.

THE GHOST TAKES AN UNEXPECTED SHAPE.

I did not see the apparition for some days after that, began to entertain the hope that it would not again come to plague me, but at midnight on the fourth day it appeared again, and this time not as an unshaped blot of darkness surrounded by mist, but exhibiting a very distinct shape—the shape of a man. As on the first occasion a sudden premonitory chill, like the passing of an ice cold wind, struck cold and terror alike into the very marrow of my bones. I knew now what was coming. Will it this time, I thought, pass by us, or interfere with me in my new place of keep in its old beat? I kept my eyes fixed upon the wall of rock where my old fireplace had been and which was faintly lit by the illumination of my new fire. Then presently I saw the figure of a tall man striding noiselessly along, proceeding just as that shapeless blot had done from the interior of the cavern and moving toward the entrance. The outline of the figure was perfectly distinct, the colors and the lines within the form were blurred and dim. So far as I could judge, the same atmospheric condition which I was thrown into by the reappearance of the phantom, the figure wore a tunic and a kilt reaching to the knees, the legs being otherwise bare. In a horrible condition of alarm, but still exercising over myself a certain self control, I awaited its return. After what seemed to be the usual lapse of time it repassed along the illuminated wall of rock and as silently as before. On this occasion either the outlines or colors were more clear and visual on the fact that I was not now taken by surprise enabled me to observe the phenomenon with less agitation and alarm. This man, if man it was, wore his hair long; wore also a beard. His mantle was red, and on his breast I saw something glittering.

I saw the figure of a tall man striding along.

In this manner it continued to pass and repass, while I remained as if glued to the spot on which I sat. Though the fire was burning very low, I either forgot to feed it or did not offer to stir through my apprehensions and fear of attracting the phantom in my direction. I forget now which. So low did the fire fall that at length I with difficulty could distinguish the moving shape as it passed and repassed. Could I not, I seek crept up to me and uttered one of its obscure but and friendliest cries.

The noise made by this poor animal, utterly unconscious apparently of any dread presence in the cavern, recalled me to myself. I laid a little fresh driftwood on the fire, and when the blaze shot up saw clearly once more the apparition moving from the entrance toward the interior—never by night have to my left. I waited for its return, but it did not return. I looked at my watch. It was a little after a quarter to 3 a. m. When the ghost had commenced to walk, I did not know, save that it was sometime about midnight. I remained awake for hours after this and at last fell into a broken slumber, haunted by disagreeable images, so that I was pleased to be again awake. Next night when the hands of my watch approached the midnight hour I sat up observant, though alarmed and trembling. Of course I apprehended that this dread elder tenant of the cavern, in spite of his past innocuous behavior, would at some time challenge my right to be there or in one way or another attack me. Now, though I don't wish to boast of my courage, and indeed I believe it is no proof of a chicken heart to be afraid of a ghost, yet, having had many hours to reflect over this singular phenomenon, I was determined, come what might, to resist it, at least not to permit this man, for indeed a man he seemed, to frighten me out of my senses and there destroy me at his leisure. I knew that ghosts, if any such existed, were insubstantial, not to be injured by weapons and presenting no purchase even to the bravest hands, yet it never occurred to me that this ghost could have been of the rock as it passed by, obliterating in its passage the illuminated points and projections there, which instantly shone out again after it had gone by.

More than that, I remembered having distinctly seen its shadow.

I don't say that these considerations passed through my mind then, and I only refer to them now to justify the conviction which I entertained that this being was not a ghost in the ordinary sense of the word, but a substantial thing that might lay hold on me and drag me by the hair through the cavern, perhaps to its den. I never doubted that it was a thing which could hold me, and also guess that I might lay hold, and with which I might struggle, and possibly, God helping me, overcome. Indeed I did not forget my prayers while finally resolving in my own mind not to be destroyed without a struggle. I prayed incessantly, and, though I felt greater calm, self control and even strength as the result of my prayers, did not observe that the size of the sacred names exercised the least influence on the apparition. It is true indeed that my murmuring of those holy names was quite inaudible. I felt that to stand up and in the name of Jesus Christ bid the specter go would be an act of war, so to speak, and that as long as it should leave me alone and not come nearer it would be more prudent not to proceed to such extremities. This was no doubt weak, but allowances must be made for my very helpless condition, immured here, far from men, in this tomb, with a fellow tenant of that horrible character. So far the ghost had not interfered with me. On this the third appearance of the specter its shape, outline and the interior lines and colors were completely and distinctly visible. I saw now pass before me, with a long, steady and even stride, not unlike the tallest man I have ever seen, but among the tallest. I have never seen nor ever cared to see one of those unfortunate human beings who are bawked about the world as a spectacle and a show on account of their prodigious size. The man who now almost exactly at 12 o'clock began to pass and repass, a few yards away from me, was as tall as one of the taller of the Dublin policemen, of proportions corresponding with his height and indeed very finely formed. The something which I had formerly noticed as glittering upon his breast I now saw to be a round wheel, seemingly of gold, but why the man wore a wheel on his breast I could not at first understand. After he had passed and repassed a few times I discovered that it was a brooch. I could see the two ends of the pin of the brooch, one knobbed on the man's right shoulder and the other pointed on his left. They were straight across his chest, of course piercing the mantle and keeping it close to his figure at this point. His head was quite new to me. It was of a lowish or rather sandy, neither lastrous nor carling, fell on his shoulders. His beard and mustache, like his head especially, were not exactly red, but more inclined to red than the hair of his head. His mantle was a dark crimson, with loose threads, apparently of gold thread or thread of gold, in that resemblance, flattening on the edges. What I had at first imagined to be a kilt I now saw was only the lower part of a shirt or loose tunic gathered at the waist by a dark red belt and falling thence in loose folds to his knees. It was striped vertically, white and red. His wore shoes of some brown or dan color, but with clasps of some description of metal which I could just perceive abining. The light seldom fell on his feet. I could not perceive that he wore any stockings. When he went toward the interior from the entrance of the cave, I could see distinctly a short sword, which hung down quite vertically on his left thigh. The scabbard seemed to be made of some reddish kind of wood. It was fastened with bright headed rivets and was about at either end with a substance which looked like gold, but was brighter. The handle of the sword looked like ivory, but was rounder and fuller than ivory should be. Otherwise he was unarmed. In fact, altogether he resembled the pictures of the warriors of ancient times. His right arm always hung down by his side. The left hand was passed under the mantle as it lay on his breast, having hold upon something there, I fancy upon the strap of his sword—what a suggestion, a belt, a full baldrick. His head was bent a little forward, and his shoulders were slightly rounded. At all events his gait was not quite erect. His attitude was that of a man pondering profoundly upon some intricate problem and passing to and fro quite immersed in calculations and ruminations concerning its solution. Though I watched him pass and repass at least a hundred times, his carriage and mode of holding his hands never varied in the least from that I have described. His bearing, I say, was that of a man deeply reflecting, but then there was no sign or token of reflection whatsoever in his face. There was truly no speculation in those eyes. Otherwise his face suggested life rather than death, for it was of a good color, somewhat ruddy in the cheeks and well browned otherwise. The eyes alone, as wide open, staring and lustorless, suggested death. As to his age, he seemed to be about 40.

I may add, at the risk of being too minute, that on his brooch were five good sized opal eyes of glass or some substance duller than glass, and, that on his left temple there was a scar running from the roots of his hair to the outer extremity of the corresponding eyebrow. I had plenty of time and opportunity to make these observations for after his second appearance the ghost continued to walk every night exactly at 12 o'clock and ceased to walk at half past 2. Invariably also he walking passed by the interior portion of the cave and in that gallery at the end of which was the strange tomb which I have described.

Although the reader will of coarse attribute this apparition wholly to the diseased state of my nerves and imagination, and although such is my own belief, too, in a sense, yet it is singular that the apparition, supposing such to be its origin, should have assumed exactly this form and garb. I never saw a man dressed in that style. I had never even seen a picture of a man so dressed, although the flowing mantle, long hair, straight hanging sword and kilt form the usual set up of antique warriors on the stage or in pictures, the big brooch was quite strange and novel even to my imagination. Such antique warriors, too, in pictures or on the stage, appear gartered to the knee and always carry a shield on their arms or strapped to their backs. This figure had no shield, apparently no stockings and certainly no garters. Consequently, if the apparition sprang from my imagination, and from the imagination projected itself into visuality in the manner, in a manner, my imagination was able to produce something that my eyes had never seen either in the world of waking or in the world of art and something that the imagination had never at any time consciously conceived at all. Another singular circumstance is this: I know that this cave was the cave of Curry, the smuggler. I had already associated the idea of the tomb which I had discovered with him. Now, my notion of a smuggler was that which is commonly entertained by all boys and young men—viz. a stout, strong, hardy man of a sentaring type, wearing top boots and pistols stuck in his belt. Having had plenty of time for reflection, the most come nearer it would be more prudent not to proceed to such extremities. This was no doubt weak, but allowances must be made for my very helpless condition, immured here, far from men, in this tomb, with a fellow tenant of that horrible character. His bearing, I say, was that of a man deeply reflecting, but then there was no sign or token of reflection whatsoever in his face. There was truly no speculation in those eyes. Otherwise his face suggested life rather than death, for it was of a good color, somewhat ruddy in the cheeks and well browned otherwise. The eyes alone, as wide open, staring and lustorless, suggested death. As to his age, he seemed to be about 40.

I may add, at the risk of being too minute, that on his brooch were five good sized opal eyes of glass or some substance duller than glass, and, that on his left temple there was a scar running from the roots of his hair to the outer extremity of the corresponding eyebrow. I had plenty of time and opportunity to make these observations for after his second appearance the ghost continued appetite. I ate with a relish, and returning to the carcass of the mutor tasted deep in the flesh of two more chops, fed and ate them. I would have eaten more but I knew how dangerous such indulgence may be after long abstinence. Then I drank copiously from that little slanting pencil of descending water to which I was now used. I used to scowl at it sometimes by the simple process of forcing my mouth to receive it, at least when I was in good health and spirits. Finally I filled myself a pipe of tobacco and enjoyed a good smoke, a luxury in which I had not indulged for a long time. Finding myself unusually gay and vigorous, I might almost say defiant and pugnacious, I determined to stay awake till 12 o'clock and see whether the ghost would reappear. I expected that my weak and nervous condition had something to do with the presence of the apparition. Twelve o'clock passed, and I, yet I saw absolutely nothing that might, nor did I ever afterward discover anything in that antique mantel figure or anything at all suggestive of the uncanny and supernatural as long as I remained in the cave. I have heard and read of various methods of laying ghosts and exorcising evil spirits. Mutton chops nicely broiled and eaten by an extremely hungry man laid my ghost and laid them for ever. The former evidence saved me my life or my reason on this occasion. I don't think I am a coward, but from what I confess I am convinced that if the ghost had appeared that night, as he had been in the habit of appearing for some days previously, I would have confronted him, burned his path and questioned him. Familiarity breeds contempt. Every night for 2½ hours I had been now for weeks watching the steady passage of this sinister figure as it paced to and fro along the north wall of the cavern. Each night I had seen it roll out of sight in the morning alert, energetic and ravenous. Of course I attacked the sheep again, but what was my surprise to find on this occasion another great brown cake close beside the sheep, quite fresh and seemingly baked on the previous day. Moving around with my torch, I discovered half a dozen others, some of them quite stale. It was a great deal that Charley had been again at work and seemingly now enabled, without let or hindrance, to roll out cake after cake every second day, as he had promised. Having now both mutton and bread to eat with it, I rapidly recovered my health and strength, and the knowledge that I was at least of my brothers was firmly convinced that I was at the bottom of the "Devil's Parlor" filled me with hope. I skinned and jointed my sheep, and collected from various little hollows near the pool all the salt procurable, intending to keep as much of it as it was not likely that I should eat fresh, rubbing the salt well in with my hands. Large quantities of salt was limited, I cked it out by soaking each piece of mutton in the tidal pool. After withered from which I took it piece at the fire and again plunged it in the salt water. Between times I rubbed in the salt. Before the end I began to be of service to me. At last, in a remote corner which I had not quite illuminated formerly, I discovered a beam of timber of considerable size. I notched it with my knife. All the outer part was quite soft and crumbling, but as I went on cutting I discovered, to my joy, that within was hard and sound. I managed at length to cut through it, and, by means of a great many fires and explored it in every part, hoping that I might there meet with something that might

You can get a 100-pound sack of Valley Roller Mills flour for $1.50.

Rev. R. H. Battey went to Fertile Saturday evening for Sabbath services.

Just received—a fine invoice of California wines for medicinal purposes at the California wine house. (5-tf)

Frank Wilcox, of Wabasha, put up at the Cleveland House on Friday of last week.

Use Valley Roller Mills best patent flour—the best in the world—only $1.50 per 100-pound sack.

J. W. Iiren, of Tabor, came down on Friday evening of last week to attend the assessors' meeting.

Two dollars per dozen for cabinet photos is within the reach of every one who knows and cares for the very best work. CHAPIN.

The town assessors met at the auditor's office on Saturday for books and instructions.

It is not my object to do the cheapest work in the market, but the very best at the least price. Good work and good material deserves its reward. CHAPIN.

C. W. Mead arrived from Red Lake Falls on Friday last to go to work in the Walker saw-mill.

I now have money again to loan on good improved farms.
[1-tf] A. F. GROSS,
Opera Block.

Laurence Larson is having several hundred feet (more or less) of rain gutters put up.

A fine rain on Sunday evening was a good thing for grass but not very good for land that was barely dry enough for seeding before.

Go to the California wine house for choice wines and liquors for medicinal purposes. (5)

At the chattel mortgage sale on Monday morning the Dalen outfit was bid off by Nils Muus for $850. It is said the paper will be removed to East Grand Forks and be published there during the campaign.

Anything you want in the purest wines and liquors for medicinal purposes at the California.

Frank Creamer is moving into the Charbonneau house on Houston avenue.

A. R. U. to J. J. Hill: "Come off the perch!"

J. J. Hill to A. R. U.: "Don't shoot, I'll come down!"

The unmilitar sound of the saw-mill whistle was heard on Monday and on Tuesday business was commenced in good earnest.

The concert at the M. E. church this evening will be well worth attending; you will miss it if you miss it.

M. W. Jensen, the prominent miller at McIntosh, was in the city attending the Odd Fellow's reception on Thursday evening.

Peter Stuhr came down from Euclid on Friday evening of last week, to attend the assessors' meeting and put up at the Cleveland house.

Dr. Langevin enters a fine Ham Nut filly in the yearling stakes for the coming fair. She is a little daisy and Doc. takes great pride in her.

The brakesmen on the branch lines threw off on the strike on Monday morning and reported for duty at their various stations.

Dec. Overholt, C. C. Lawton and John E. Van Dayl, were Mentorites who arrived in the Queen City on Sunday evening via the overland route. Overholt and Lawton returned on Monday afternoon. They report seeding well advanced around Mentor.

40 YEARS THE STANDARD.

Benoit's delivery team took a lively go-as-you-please on Saturday, colliding with Chahn's display case making a lively drop in photographs in short order. No very great damage done otherwise.

Officer Kyle arrested a tramp Saturday, who was wearing one of Geo. Vine's shirts. He is undoubtedly the thief who stole the washing from George's place some ten days ago. He claimed he had only taken one shirt.

Chas. Hitchcock, of McIntosh, formerly of Fargo passed through the city Saturday with a carload of horses—trotting stock and Percherons—which he had shipped from Nebraska, and intends to sell around McIntosh.

Swan Anderson was up from Wylie last week. Reports seeding well along in his neighborhood. He does not expect as large an average of wheat will be put in this season as usual, more of other grains and potatoes.

Some farmers were quite uneasy early in the week, fearing that the rain would prevent wheat sowing until too late to insure a good crop of that cereal. There are those who assert that wheat is an uncertain crop if sowed after the 10th of May.

The ball game between the Cleveland house nine and the Germania house nine resulted in a victory for the latter. They mopped the floor with the Clevelands, but the boys do confidently assert that they can't do it again.

The stake races for the coming Polk county fair are filled in good shape. There are 8 entries in the yearling class, 5 or 6 in the two-year-old, 10 in the three-year-old, and 7 in the 2:30 class for city horses. These events promise to be unusually attractive this season.

Col. Cobham Post met in extra session on Friday evening to arrange for the Memorial Day exercises. A unanimous invitation was extended to Rev. R. H. Battey to deliver the Memorial address, which, we are pleased to say, has been accepted. The meeting was one of great interest and was well attended.

"Indian land and Wonderland" is the name of a beautiful little pamphlet, profusely illustrated, just issued by the Northern Pacific railroad company, descriptive of all the country along the line of road from St. Paul to the coast. It is a good thing to send to a friend in the east, who may be looking for a change of location and would be of great interest to such.

The JOURNAL has often urged the the business men cause action being taken to improve the streets in the city, that, since the sewers were put in there been, in wet seasons in horrid shape. Our experience this spring has but emphasized all we have said, and shows the necessity for action in the matter. No better time than the present, when labor and material are abundant and cheap, could be had.

A man named Toller Torgeson was fined $100 and costs in Red Lake and taken before Judge Benson last week to be examined on information of insanity. A number of men came down Saturday, claiming that it was absolutely a case of persecution, that the man was not insane. He was examined before four doctors who pronounced him sane and he was released—a number of his friends giving bonds for his future good behavior.

Wm. Davidson writes the JOURNAL from the Keystone farm this week, requesting us to say that if the individual who wrote him that anonymous letter will be manly enough to reveal his identity, Davidson will promptly "call" his "bluff," but unless he will do so no further attention will be paid to it. Mr. Davidson says: "Had this man been manly enough to come to me requesting me not to locate certain territory I could have granted the request, but as it is my trips will be made in accordance with my original plans, and my unknown friend need not necessary sleep for fear of 'giving a Scot more trouble than he can take care of,' and he need not waste any money trying to find a "corporation horse" that does not exist."

The farms lying along the Northern Pacific track for a few miles out, are generally too wet to get to work upon for a week or so yet—which makes it late for wheat. Before the road went through these lands were all at least ten days earlier than they have been since. When the road was first talked of the projectors all assured the owners of these lands that the railroad ditches would thoroughly drain these lands and make them better, and had the ditches been constructed as now agreed this no doubt would have been the result. It looks as though the company was culpably careless in regard to this matter, but it is a fact that they have already paid out more in her damage suits than the whole cost of correcting the evil would amount to, and they have several more damage suits pending.

Chas. Teal was down from Euclid last week and purchased a team from D. W. Lake.

On May day Mr. and Mrs. A. J. McArty announced the arrival of a young son and heir.

Dr. M. Legnee was called to Euclid last week, to attend to a sick horse for Tim Blewett.

Roads are beginning to get passable again—but it has been a siege long to be remembered.

Postmaster LeFrige has filled a long felt want by cleaning up the postoffice lobby this week.

Doc. Hennait boasts of a new dentist skin, made by Schmidt the painter. It is a beauty, sure enough.

Ed. Shrender left for St. Cloud on Sunday evening, as a witness in a case on trial there this week.

Comrade Fontaine went out to his farm at Badger Creek last week, to look after seeding operations.

Not so many farmers in the city as usual on Saturday. Mostly busy in the fields seeding or dragging.

Comrade Will Carlton went up to Angus last week to look after seeding operations on the farm. Says he saw 18 or 20 seeders at work on the way.

Street Commissioner Creighton put teams at work on Tuesday morning dragging the streets and in the afternoon put the road grader at work—and then it rained.

The arrival of Grant Northrup trains this week are events of sufficient importance to call out considerable of a crowd. Each train has a mail car in the usual place in front and one in the rear.

While Mrs. Mix was in Minneapolis last week he met L. D. Marshall, who is just getting up from a sick bed. Marshall says he expected to be in Crookston just as soon as he has sufficient strength to travel.

The school board met on Friday evening but failed to select a man in Supt. Moore's place—the board standing three for Moore and three for no Moore. The friends of Prof. Moore place a great deal of stress upon the fact that a large petition was signed for his retention, but if we may judge from expressions that we hear, a much larger one could be had protesting against his retention.

About 200 regular troops from Fort Snelling went through the city about 12 o'clock Sunday night on their way to Devils Lake to assist the U. S. Marshals at that place in serving warrants upon the strikers. When the train reached Grand Forks, being the end of a division, it became necessary to change engines, and not an engineer could be found who would take the train further, and so the soldier boys went into camp and remained there all day Monday.

A healthy kick is registered from Edna at the condition of things existing there. A week or so ago the land was all in good shape for early seeding, but the overflow from the Sand Hill river has made the conditions worse than ever, and delayed seeding for some time. The commission was urged to commence draining further east to cover this case but declined to pay sufficient attention to the request, and complaint has been made to the governor, who has been requested to send the commission up to investigate the matter. It is to be hoped that the commissioners will look into this matter and apply the proper remedy.

A taxpayer of Kertsonville township was in the city last week looking after his taxes, and thinking they were too high, he made a comparison of the taxes in his town with another town—Fairfax. He found that the assessment of Kertsonville had been raised, and Fairfax had been lowered, until there was a difference between them of 60 cents per acre in favor of Fairfax, although the land in the latter township is acknowledged to be on an average 30 per cent. better than that in Kertsonville. He would like to know why the basis of equalization made this difference. We gave it up, and if any county commissioner can explain it, we will be glad to publish the explanation for the benefit of the people of Kertsonville.

Olena Berteland, a young Norwegian girl, was examined in Judge Benson's court on Monday, committed to the asylum at Fergus Falls and was taken to that place on the Great Northern train in the evening by her brother. This is a sad case; insanity seemingly caused by slanders affecting the character of the young lady, she brooding over the vile slanders until she lost her reason. Two years ago she had worked in the family of Charles Bailey and was well liked; later on she went to some point in Dakota to work awhile and then to her home up in the Rosseau country. About a month since she came back to work for Mrs. Bailey and appeared quite rational until one day last week she seemed to get off her mental equilibrium, becoming worse until on Saturday Mr. Bailey filed information against her and she was taken before Judge Benson on Monday. Some villain walks the earth in security while his innocent victim languishes in a mad house.

District court convenes here May 24th.

The directors of the fair and driving association meet next Saturday May 5th.

E. M. Stanton expects to deliver an oration at Barnesville on memorial day.

Bagley's first drive arrived on Saturday. This is said to be the quickest drive ever made.

The experience social at the Congregational church Tuesday evening, was a pleasant and profitable affair.

A good start was made last week at seeding and this week lots of grain will go into the ground in good shape.

Money is no object to me. I am offering the best cabinet photographs for $1.50 per dozen. P. E. Lyons.

Robert Shultz has rented the Revere house on the corner of Main street and Loring avenue and will conduct a boarding house.

The rumor that the strike was over got abroad on Monday morning and everybody brightened up, but the rumor proved somewhat premature.

Chris Stenerson was up from the west side this week to learn the strike news," he said. Reports seeding well along in his neighborhood.

W. E. Slocum moved on Tuesday into the Taylor house on Houston avenue. J. J. Molstad will occupy the house in Jerome's addition vacated by Mr. Slocum.

Larsen, Carpenter & Co. shipped a seeder to Fosston Tuesday by way of the Angus route. This firm don't let such trifles as a railroad strike interfere with their business.

K. O. Gjestad was in from St. Hilaire this week. Reports farmers busy sowing and with good weather will have a good bit of the seed in the ground this week.

Comrade Andrist caught a pike from the river on Friday last which he thought was a whale when first hooked. When landed and weighed the pike tipped the beam at 11 pounds.

Gen. W. C. Andrew, representing the old and reliable stattionery house of Wright, Barrett & Stilwell, of St. Paul, was a welcome caller at our den on Saturday. Andrews reports a trade very good considering the times.

Miss Maggie Vannett, who returned a couple of weeks ago from Valparaiso, Ind., where she had been to school, has taken a department in the Fertile schools. A Mr. Rogers, of Hendrum, has taken the position of principal.

"You bet I'm feeling much better than I did yesterday," said Jack Bunnell about 6 o'clock on Monday evening. Jack has been having a wrestle with his old trouble but comes out ahead of the deal, though somewhat pale and care-worn.

We were all happily disappointed on Monday afternoon when the clouds rolled by and the sun shone out bright and clear, as the indications had all been largely in favor of rain during the day. Two weeks of weather just now would be highly appreciated.

The firm of Peterson Bros. & Warninger was dissolved last week, J. W. retiring. This firm has done a great deal to establish a royal line of trotters in Polk county, and has expended large sums of money in these efforts. The results are just beginning to develope and indicate that the trotting horse will find a home in this county. J. H. Peterson & Dr. Warninger will continue the business, and we trust their efforts will meet with all due appreciation.

D. N. Comtright was up from Fertile on Monday.

Rev. R. H. Battey will conduct services in the Baptist church, next Sunday, morning and evening.

Dr. C. E. Dampier started for Galveston, Texas, on Wednesday evening, to attend a convention of railway surgeons. After which he expects to visit Mexico and other points. Expects to be away about a month.

Mr. and Mrs. A. V. E. Wyatt went to McIntosh Tuesday to help the McIntosh I. O. O. F. lodge with their anniversary, which they held last evening.

P. S. That's what they intended to do and would have done had the train on the Fosston branch gone out.

B. A. Strawbridge and R. S. Kundson on Wednesday closed a deal for four blocks in McDonald's addition on which they intend to erect buildings for the Crookston Normal School and Business College. They bought one block of W. E. Walker, one that E. M. Walsh was agent for, and Judge Ives and E. M. Walsh donated a block each. They hope to be able to build during the coming summer.

Much has been said about good roads and we see much gratuitous advice in our exchanges some of which is wise, and some otherwise, but in all the discussions we have seen, never a word has been said about dragging the highways in the spring. It seems to us that if the overseers and pathmasters would order some of the annual road-work done in early spring along this line, it would be of great practical benefit. The reasons are too obvious to need discussion.

Prof. Gaudell came down from Euclid on Wednesday for the purpose of attending "A Pound of Flesh." He started on foot from Euclid with the intention of catching the St. Hilaire train at Shibley, and when a mile or so out he saw the smoke of the train he wanted to take, so he gathered a liberal bunch unto himself and pulled into Shibley in one hour and five minutes from Euclid—just in time to see the caboose of the train pull out into the main line. A man who can run like that ought to run for county superintendent of schools next fall.

Referring to an article in the McIntosh Tribune of last week, which accuses Judge Benson of trying to lay the wires to capture the populist nomination for sheriff, Judge Benson says: "I am the animus of that attack. It is because Gooding gets no prohibe notices, and the reason he gets no notices is because at one time Gooding ran out in the case of a widow lady at Warren, paid him for the notice and after that Bodine had the gall to draw upon the lady through one of our banks for payment the second time. He has never had another notice from my office and has never neglected to hit me a wipe whenever he thought he had a chance ever since. As to being a candidate for sheriff I have a perfect right to do so, but in this case I do not happen to choose to do so."

The Oldest Grapevine.

The oldest grapevine in the country was indeed interesting. One growing near this, which was known to be more than 80 years old, died finally of old age and was purchased and transported in its entirety to the Chicago fair. This one is 47 to 60 years of age and hale and hearty yet. At the base it is 52 inches in circumference. It grows straight up for about 3 feet, then divides into six branches and at this point is 5 feet in circumference. At a height of perhaps 7 feet it spreads itself in all directions over a immense arbor covering a space by actual measurement of 75 by 66 feet. It bears in one season 5,000 pounds of the purple muscadine grape, of which no use is made except as it is eaten and given away by its owner to any one who will take it.—Santa Barbara Cor. Troy Times.

One of the Delights of Life.

When old Kaiser Wilhelm was still Prince of Prussia, he had one day at Babelsberg, near Potsdam, his beautiful and ever favorite residence, a visit from that prime among landscape gardeners, Furst Hermann von Puckler-Muskau, who somewhat bluntly expressed his disapproval of the slow rate of progress in certain improvements in the grounds—improvements which he had himself suggested on the occasion of a previous visit. The future emperor pleaded his limited means. "But does your royal highness rather borrow money?" queried Prince Puckler, evidently much amused. "Never, my dear prince," was the smiling reply. "Then your royal highness has never tasted life's greatest delight—viz. the pleasure of finding yourself able to pay your debts, after all!"—Chicago Tribune.

Cheap Locomotion.

Datagonard has been informed that cabs are going to be fitted with automatic distance counters, and that the fare for the first kilometer is to be 75 cents, and 36 cents for each succeeding kilometer.

"Capital!" he said, tapping his forehead, as if inspired with a happy thought. "Next time I have to go any distance I shall walk the first kilometer and take a cab for the rest of the journey."—Journal de Vienne.

A complaint comes from Russia of the scarcity of physicians throughout the empire. The number of medical men is only one in 6,000 of the entire population. These are mostly in the large cities. The village population has only one in 30,000, while the remote provinces have only one doctor to 120,000 people.

Handel and Bach were contemporaries. Born about the same time, in houses almost in sight of each other, devoted to the same branch of the same art, and each famous, and loyal to his profession, these two great men never met.

Frederick the Great was ambitious to be thought a composer of music. Over 120 of his pieces have been found and are now in the imperial library of Berlin. They are, if possible, worse than his poetry.

During the most of the sixteenth century the English people called the Bible the Bibliotheca, or the library, the word being limited in its application to the Scriptural writings.

There is a well at Scarpa, a village near Stroli, Italy, which is 1,700 feet deep, all but 26 feet being cut in solid rock.

Attacks of cramp colic come suddenly and in many instances the sufferer has to bear the excruciating pains till some remedy is sent for and procured. Considering the fact that Hallers Pain Paralyzer is the best and a never failing remedy for the quick relief and cure for all cramps and palns in the stomach and bowels and that a large bottle only costs 50c, it would be money well invested to keep a bottle in the house for the relief and cure of all aches and palns. Nothing cures colic in horses as quick as Haller's Pain Parnlyzer. For sale by F. L. Durand.

THE COUNTY BOARD.

Minutes of the Meeting of the County Commissioners Held on May 2, 1894

The county board met pursuant to call on May 2nd, 1894, with all members present.

Minutes of previous meeting read and approved.

Hearing was set at the next meeting of the board in the matter of the petition of Silas H. Kennedy, asking to detach the E. ½ N. W. ¼ and N. W. ¼ N. E. ¼ of Sec. 19, Township 147, Range 49.

A hearing having been set for this meeting on the individual petitions of R. Bierson and Sam Fishback, and no one appearing to remonstrate, it was ordered that the S. E. ¼ and the E. ½ S. W. ¼ and N. E. ¼ of Section 13, Township 147, R. 41, be detached from School District No. 134, and the same attached to District No. 197.

The erroneous assessments on Lot 7, Block 1, Stearns' addition, and Lot 12, Block 2, McManus' addition, was ordered corrected.

The county road and bridge committee was authorized to investigate the condition of the county bridges located between Sections 1 and 36, Roome and Fisher townships, and between Sections 3 and 4, Fairfax township, with power to act.

The bridge petition from Bygland township was rejected.

The following appropriations out of the road and bridge fund was made in favor of the following townships:

Andover, $150 for repairing bridges; Crookston, $150 for repairing Districts Nos. 1 and 3; Belgium, $50; Euclid, $100; Lambert, $125; Louisville, $100 for ferry and $50 for bridge; Terrebonne, $100; Columbia, $165; Grove Park, $75; Winger, $75; Badger, $150, of which $100 is for county road and $50 on town roads. Lessor, $100, to be expended as follows: On Hills, not to exceed $35, and $25 for ditching and grading road between S. E. ¼ Sec. 31, and S. W. ¼ Sec. 32, in Twp. 149, R. 42, and on the N. E. ¼, Sec. 1, Town of Knute, and on the N. W. ¼, Sec. 6, Town of King, the balance of said appropriation to be expended at the discretion of the supervisors of said Lessor township; to Nesbit, $100; to Rosine, $100; to Reis, $100; to Tynsid, $100; all of said appropriations to be expended as prayed for in the different petitions.

The application of M. B. Hayes for a cancellation, and the application of John Walter, of Red Lake Falls, for a reduction in the 1893 real estate assessment, was rejected.

$2000 insurance on the court house was authorized in the Phœnix Insurance Company.

A communication from the supervisors of Sanders Twp. was read, in which they endorse the action of the council in cancelling personal taxes against certain parties in said township.

The county surveyor was instructed to commence action against the City of Crookston and the Town of Woodside for the amounts due for county bridge fees.

The following resolution was offered by Commissioner Oppegaard:

Whereas, it appears from the computation by the state printing expert of certain commissioners' proceedings for the year of an excessive number of folios, therefore, be it resolved, that the chairman of this board appoint a committee to go through the printing bills for 1893 and last year and ascertain and compute the actual number of folios printed and legally to be charged for and if found to be overcharged to report at next meeting of this board the results of their investigation.

Kirsch moved, and Demers seconded, that the resolution be laid on the table.

Yeas, Demers, Kirsch and Hindmarsh.

Nays, Oppegaard and Lindeo.

Motion carried.

Lindeo moved, and Demers seconded, that the chairman appoint a committee, who were to be charged with the duty hereafter of measuring and computing the number of folios contained in any official publication, the pay for which the county is liable. The chair thereupon appointed the committee on bills, of which Kirsch and Lindeo, as members of said committee, asked to be excused from serving in that capacity.

The Twp. of Bygland was ordered re-imbursed the amount of $5 for merchandise advanced for the county.

The road and bridge committee reported and recommended that an amount of $100 be and the same is hereby appropriated out of the road and bridge fund in favor of Huntsville Twp. towards repairing the bridge near Mallory, money available on the completion of the work, less the amount of $50 which said Twp. of Huntsville owes the county on previous work.

Kirsch moved, and Demers seconded, that an item of $84.48 in a former bill of W. E. McKenzie not previously considered by the board, be allowed. Motion carried.

Oppegaard voting no.

The county auditor was authorized to advertise for bids in the grading of 6th street, between Ash and Broadway. The county auditor was instructed to advertise for bids for the sale of $15,000 Polk county bonds, said bonds to be issued in defraying the cost of the construction of a certain ditch in Lowell Township known as ditch No. 1. Motion carried with four members voting in favor thereof, while Kirsch voted against the issuance of bonds on the grounds that the contracts were let to the highest bidder instead of the lowest, and that litigation was expected therefrom.

The county auditor was also instructed to issues his warrants for the payment of right of way for the Lowell ditch, and in such amounts of damages as were awarded by the viewers thereof, when the owners of the ground in question shall have first properly executed and delivered a warranty deed in favor of the county for the territory occupied by said ditch.

Death of John Locken.

John Locken died at his residence in this city on Tuesday May 8th, at 5 o'clock a. m., of consumption at the age of 40 years. John H. Locken, son of Haagen and Marit Locken, was born in Sundahl, Norway, in 1854, where he received a fine education and at the age of 19 sailed for America, coming from New York to Reed's Landing, Minnesota, where he lived till 1879 when he came to Polk county and opened up a farm in the town of Roome, which farm he personally carried on until 1882 when, with his brother Capt. A. Locken he engaged in the mercantile business in the city under the firm name of J. H. and A. Locken, continuing until the death of Capt. Locken when A. Holmboe bought into the concern when the firm became Locken & Holmboe continuing until the present time. Mr. Locken has ever taken an active part in town, city and county matters being town clerk and secretary of the school board in the town of Roome. When he came to the city to live he was, in 1883 elected alderman-at-large and in 1885 city treasurer. Later he was elected register of deeds serving one term when, his health giving out he declined to run again and at the expiration of his term he went south in the vain hope that a change of climate might be beneficial, but the insidious disease, consumption had too firm a hold of him and last fall he returned home to die. In 1882 he was married to Miss Jalla Wennevold, who with four children survives him. He also leaves one brother and two sisters, Mrs. Severson and Mrs. Amundsen. He was a faithful and earnest member of the Norwegian Lutheran church of this city, at which church the funeral obsequies will be held on Friday (to-morrow) at 2 o'clock. He was well-known and highly respected throughout the county and leaves a host of friends who will drop a silent tear to the memory of a truly worthy man who has gone to rest in the very prime of manhood.

The Liberati Concert.

The concert given by Liberati and his company at the First M. E. church last Thursday evening, was one of the finest ever held in the city. The reputation which Signor Liberati has gained as a cornetist has been well earned, and he is certainly a master of his instrument. The members of his company are all experts in their line, the tenor singer and the pianist being exceptionally fine. What the audience lacked in numbers it made up in enthusiasm, and Mr. Wheeler is to be commended for securing this musical treat for the people.

Get Your Wheel Fixed.

F. J. Hawkins and Will Olds are working up quite a business in the repairing of bicycles. They have a full supply of repairs, and are prepared to do any kind of work in this line. They are also going to sell the celebrated Cleveland wheel, and will have a number of wheels for rent.

ACROSS A CONTINENT.

A TREMENDOUS UNDERTAKING IS THE TRANSSIBERIAN RAILWAY.

An Enterprise of Great Commercial and Strategic Importance—It Will Develop the Resources of Siberia—Information About That Little Known Country.

The Russian government has at last begun to build the great Siberian railway which has been under consideration for so long a period. The road will be some 5,000 miles in length, extending from Cheliabinsk in the west to Vladivostok in the east. Its cost is estimated at $270,000,000, and it is hoped that the entire line will be in operation by the year 1900. It is not expected that it will pay expenses for a long time, but it is an investment by the government for economic, industrial and military purposes whose supreme importance cannot be overlooked.

The chief purpose, of course, which the Russian government has in view in building this great railway across Siberia is political. Its significance is clear from the fact that when the line is completed Russia will not only nominally but actually occupy that position in the east of Asia which she now holds among her friends and enemies in Europe. As the line shortens the distance from European Russia to the east of Asia, in a like measure will the power of Russia increase in the east.

The strategic value of the road can be realized only by those who have made a study of the relations that have for so long existed between England and Russia, the constant friction on the boundaries of their colonies in the east and the apprehension with which each has regarded the slightest movement the other has made in that direction. It is presumed that when the Siberian railway is in operation it will be possible to make the trip from Moscow to Vladivostok inside of 10 days.

That Russia evidently had the military possibilities of the road uppermost in her mind when it was decided to proceed with its building is shown by the fact that the estimated capacity of the road is based upon the number of military trains which may be sent over it in 24 hours. For its strategic value alone Russia could well afford to put the $270,000,000 which is will cost into this railroad, without regard to the other advantages it offers.

In case of hostilities between Russia and England the former country would be able in a comparatively short time to send a large number of troops by means of this great railway to attack Great Britain's Indian possessions. England would be forced to send her troops by means of transports through the Mediterranean and Suez canal or across the Atlantic, British North America and the Pacific ocean.

From a commercial point of view also the importance of the Siberian road cannot be overestimated. It will furnish means of transportation for the Chinese, Japanese and Indian trade to Europe and divert the commerce of the east that now travels in caravans from the lines it follows farther south. The popular notion of Siberia is that it is a barren waste, extending from the frozen ocean on the north to the burning semitropic plains on the south, and that its chief inhabitants are Russian political prisoners who have been condemned to spend their lives in the mines of this almost unknown region. But this idea is very far from the truth.

As a matter of fact, it embraces enormous areas of exceedingly fertile soil and possesses climatic conditions favorable to the development of agricultural industries. It is also rich in minerals. Iron and coal are found nearly all over Siberia and in veins of exceeding richness. Gold, too, exists in abundance. These mineral deposits are now neglected simply because the present cost of transportation is too high to permit them to be worked profitably. The railway will cheapen the carrying of implements and stores to the mines and increase the supply of laborers, who are not numerous enough in a great many places. It will also facilitate the marketing of the output, and as the road is to be a government institution probably the golden rule of "all the traffic will bear" will not be allowed to throttle the industries it is built to promote.

Hitherto the principal barrier to the development of civilization in Siberia has been the absence of regular communication with European Russia as well as between the most important industrial and administrative centers within the country itself. The railway will remove this barrier and will pour in a flood of immigration from the congested districts in Russia and from other places where the pressure of a landless population upon the limits of subsistence is inimical to the stability of existing institutions.

The influence of the new road upon the commerce of the world must not be lost sight of. It will connect 400,000,000 Chinese and 35,000,000 Japanese more directly with Europe. The journey from Europe through Vladivostok to Shanghai will be made in 18 or 20 days instead of 45 by way of the Suez canal or 35 by way of the American transcontinental railways, as at present. It may also have much to do with determining that great contest between Asiatic and European civilization which Socrates' statesmen have declared must one day be settled.

THE CLEVELAND CONFERENCE.

Operators Expect it to End the Big Coal Miners Strike.

CLEVELAND, O., May 8.—An officer of the Massillon Coal Operators' association, who has been traveling in the Ohio and Pennsylvania fields for several days, said that the big conference which will be held in this city next week will put an end to the strike, whether an agreement is reached or not. He further said:

There are dozens of big operators who have offered what the men have asked, that is, the rate that was fixed several years ago, which has averaged about 70 cents. Many of them have the assurance of the men that they will go to work whatever the result of the conference, and the moment any of the large mines are put in operation the strike will be broken.

INVEST IN TENNESSEE BONDS.

Minnesota School Funds W ll Be Used to Buy $300,000 Worth.

ST. PAUL, May 8.—At the last meeting the state board of investment instructed the state treasurer to invest not less than $200,000 and not more than $800,000 in Tennessee bonds, and Monday's mails from New York brought the treasurer a letter from Starr & Co., who say that only $350,000 of Tennessee bonds are now on the market. The treasurer will buy them, and report his action to the state board, which must look elsewhere for the placing of the remaining $600,000 in his hands.

The board tried to buy Minnesota bonds but none could be had except at large premiums.

FOUND BODIES OF TWO.

Searching Party Sent Out After Hunters, Only Partially Successful.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 8.—Francis Murphy, an American engineer and mining men, returned to this city from Macatlan, Mexico, states that he was a member of a searching party that left Durango about five weeks ago to find the whereabouts of N. L. Denton, C. H. Hall, Frank Tarnstall, Amerman, and two Mexican guides, who started from Saltillo, State of Durango, on a prospecting and hunting expedition into the Sierra Madre mountains.

They found the bodies of Denton and Hall, and buried them, but were unsuccessful in finding the others. The men had evidently died from lack of provisions.

Inquisitiveness Killed Him.

MEDFORD, Wis., May 8.—Robert Tull, aged 18, son of Farmer Wenzel Tull, of the town of Deer Creek, was blown into eternity while trying to raise steam in a large kettle which had been filled with water and corked tight for the experiment. After firing up the boy's desire for knowledge of the mystery of steam power kept him close to the kettle, when it exploded, inflicting injuries from which he died within two hours.

Montreal to Dublin.

DUBLIN, May 8.—The Irish Times announces that the Ulster Steamship company is about to commence direct steamship communication between Montreal and Dublin. The first steamer in this trade will leave Montreal on June 15 next. She is the Teelin Head, 1,071 tons register.

AN ABLE NAVIGATOR.

Joseph S. Skerrett, the New Rear Admiral, Is Known as "Fighting Joe."

Comdore Joseph S. Skerrett, who recently attained the rank of rear admiral on the retirement of Admiral Irwin, is considered the best navigator in the United States navy and is known among his seamen by the endearing nickname of "Sailor Joe." He might have been a soldier, however, and had the service escapes from a military career. One of these was at the very beginning of his life work, when he was offered the choice of an appointment to either West Point or Annapolis. The other was during the early years of the war, after he had reached the rank of lieutenant in the navy.

When in 1862 he came home from service on the coast of Africa, where he had been sent with the sloop Saratoga to suppress the slave trade, he found there was no disposition to assign him to any duty of importance, and he grew very impatient. Secretary Welles had been previously indicated him because his wife was known to have a large circle of southern friends and was even said to sympathize with the Confederate cause herself. Lieutenant Skerrett went to the secretary and said that if he was not assigned to some duty he would resign from the navy, go back to Ohio and enter an artillery regiment and get some fighting anyhow.

Welles admired the lieutenant's spirit, and assigned him to important ordnance duty at the Washington navy yard, telling him if he could supply sufficient resigning he would be placed under arrest. He was afterward assigned to duty on various blockading squadrons, but it was not till 1864 that he succeeded in getting into an engagement. In June of that year he successfully attacked the fortifications at the mouth of the Bazos river. After the war he was placed in command of the apprentice ship Portsmouth and in conjunction with Commander Upsher framed the regulations of the apprentice system, now introduced into the navy. After that he was stationed for four years at the naval academy at Annapolis.

In June, 1873, having been promoted captain, he was again placed in command of the Portsmouth, in which the following winter he began his famous surveying trip down the Atlantic coast, around the Horn and up the Pacific.

Admiral Skerrett was born in Chillicothe, O., in 1833. He is now in service on the China station, where he is likely to remain in command until his retirement in January next.

A GLADSTONE MEMORIAL HALL.

It May Be Erected as a Permanent Headquarters For the Liberal Party.

They are talking in England about erecting in London an immense assembly hall which is to serve the triple purpose of a lasting memorial to Mr. Gladstone, a suitable meeting place for great political demonstrations and the central headquarters for the Liberal party. It seems there is at present no large hall in the English capital suitable for political meetings on a large scale, and some of the influential Liberals, believing that such a hall would greatly advance the interests of their party in the city, propose to make good the deficiency. The project has been under consideration for a couple of years, and the hall would probably have been erected before this if it were not for the difficulty of securing a suitable site.

The design for such a structure made by Mr. Woodworth seems to provide for a hall which in size and magnificence would be a worthy memorial of the great statesman and at the same time answer admirably for the other ends in view. At one end of the building is to be placed a heroic statue of Mr. Gladstone under an architectural canopy surmounted by a gilded dome. The grand entrance portico will be placed at one side of the building, but provision may be made from all sides of the hall, which will be surrounded by open-fire offices, and the tower rooms on the first floor will probably be used for library purposes. The estimated cost of the edifice will be between $375,000 and $500,000, the exact amount depending upon matters of detail that have not yet been settled.

GRAND ARMY FUNDS.

A Denial That Improper Use Has Been Made of Northern Contributions.

RICHMOND, Va., May 8.—Past Commander D. R. Wilson of Phil Kearney Post, G. A. R., said in reply to the statement of Commander Burrus of Wisconsin, that money sent South to decorate Union soldiers' graves, has been put into the fund to erect a memorial hall, that no misuse has been made of the money. His explanation of it is this:

"For several years the poets throughout the North have been sending money to the local post to decorate graves in the six national cemeteries near Richmond. Each year a surplus has remained after the work was done. This was not returned to those giving it, the post thinking it had the right to use it for any purpose it saw fit. A fund to erect a memorial hall was started and has now reached $10,000. The old city hall site has been purchased. Work on the hall will soon commence."

FAIR STAR GAZERS.

San Francisco Society Girls Flirting With the Constellations.

Astronomy is the latest fad of San Francisco society girls with scientific tendencies. The success of Miss Dorothea Klumpke, the California girl who got the degree of doctor of mathematics from the Sorbonne in Paris, seems to have aroused their emulative faculties, and they are going in for astronomy with an enthusiasm that could not be developed anywhere else than beneath their own sunny skies. They have the advantage, too, of being able to receive instruction from a woman who has gained considerable reputation as an astronomer and gained it in spite of obstacles that would have seemed insurmountable to any less courageous spirit.

ROSE O'HALLORAN.

This is Miss Rose O'Halloran, the only woman member of the Astronomical Society of the Pacific, an honor which was accorded her on the nomination of Professor Holden of the great Lick observatory. Miss O'Halloran devotes her life to the scientific study of the stars, doing a great deal of original work and gaining a livelihood by instructing ambitious young women in the rudiments of her favorite science. She has a small 4½ inch Brashear refracting telescope to assist her observations, and her observatory is an ordinary room with two windows, one of which has a northern view, and the other an eastern exposure. When Miss O'Halloran desires to extend her horizon she moves her telescope out upon the roof of the back kitchen, where she has an unobstructed sweep in three directions.

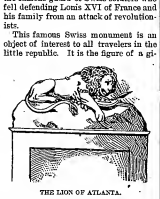
With no better conveniences than these Miss O'Halloran's zeal has accomplished some excellent results. On every favorable day during the past three years she has made observations of the spots on the sun, and she was among the earliest, if not the very first, to discover the great spot group of January and February, 1892. At night Miss O'Halloran looks after variable stars in the constellation of the Scorpion, about which she expects to publish a book some day, though she says it will take years to collect the necessary data. She has already published several notable articles in magazines and scientific journals, thereby considerably augmenting her slender income.

Miss O'Halloran is an Irish woman of gentle birth and received an early education befitting the daughter of a country gentleman without any idea that she would ever have to earn a living. She always felt an especial interest in astronomy and naturally combined her taste when, after her father's death, she found it necessary to teach for a livelihood.

THE LION OF ATLANTA.

A Copy of the Lion of Lucerne to Commemorate the Confederate Dead.

The unknown soldiers who sacrificed their lives in the great lost cause of the southern confederacy are commemorated by a magnificent monument erected at Atlanta by the ladies of the Confederate Memorial association in the cemetery at Oakland. The design of the monument is eminently appropriate to the purpose for which it is designed. It is a reduced copy of Thorwaldsen's famous "Lion of Lucerne," which commemorates on the shore of Lake Lemau, in Switzerland, the valor and fidelity of the famous guard of Swiss soldiers who fell defending Louis XVI of France and his family from an attack of revolutionists.



THE LION OF ATLANTA.

This famous Swiss monument is an object of interest to all travelers in the little republic. It is the figure of a gigantic lion in the throes of death. An arrow has pierced the heart of the beast, and between its feet is a shield on which is a device of Bourbon lilies. The figure has been cut into the face of a precipice 75 feet high, the whole face of the rock having been carved out so as to leave the lion standing in bold relief. Though the lion is dying, there is evidence of strength in the figure, and the whole monument is exceedingly impressive. It is situated in a park on the outskirts of Lucerne. The precipice rises abruptly out of the water, and the visitor views the memorial from the other side of the lake.

The "Lion of Lucerne" is 26 feet in length. That of Atlanta is 42 feet long, and it is a faithful reproduction of Thorwaldsen's great work in all respects, save that instead of Bourbon lilies the device upon the shield is the Confederate battleflag. The monument is wrought entirely of Georgia stone, the lion being carved out of a block of white marble and resting upon a base of gray. The work of the sculptor is well done, and the finish of the monument is really admirable.

Stone Money In Manilla.

The Yaps of Manilla use a certain stone as money. Some of the pieces are several feet in diameter and very valuable. If a man goes to the island where this money is found, secures a piece and has the misfortune to lose it on the return voyage, he has only to show a certificate from the maker of the stone money that the Yap really possessed it. This certificate passes as cash.

A NEW TARIFF BILL.

OVER FOUR HUNDRED CHANGES IN THE TARIFF MEASURE

By Democratic Senators—A General Increase in the Schedules—A Marked Increase in Some Instances—Republicans Will Not Unnecessarily Prolong Debate.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—During the executive session Senator Jones presented the amendments to the tariff bill which have been considered and agreed to by the Democratic senators. There are over 400 of them, and it makes a new bill, or a measure greatly differing from the Wilson bill and from the senate bill in any form in which it has been presented. The amendments heretofore presented by Senator Vest and reported from the finance committee are endorsed by the compromise committee. There is a general increase in the bill and in some schedules the increases are very marked. Senator Harris announced that notwithstanding the consideration of the Chinese treaty had not been finished, he would oppose any more executive sessions or the passing of any bills during the morning hours until after the tariff bill was disposed of. He also said that he would press for sessions beginning at 10 a. m. in order that more speed might be made.

The Principal Items.

The new sugar schedule provides that on and after Jan. 1, 1898, there shall be levied, collected and paid on all sugars not above No. 16 Dutch standard in color, a duty of 40 per centum ad valorem, and upon all sugars above No. 10 Dutch standard in color there shall be levied, collected and paid a duty of one-eighth of one cent per pound in addition to the said duty of 40 per cent ad valorem; and all sugars which are imported from or are the product of any countries which at the time the same are exported therefrom pays, indirectly or directly, bounty on the export thereof, shall pay a duty of one-tenth of one cent per pound in addition to the foregoing rates.

The iron paragraph fixes a duty of $4 per ton on pig iron and three-fifths of a cent per pound on the actual iron. The house duty, on this plan, 1-3 cents a pound, is also restored in the new measure. The cigar paragraph is changed from $8 per pound and 25 per cent ad valorem to $4 per pound and 25 per cent. The duty on butter is fixed at 4 cents per pound, and eggs, which are free in the Wilson bill, are taxed 3 cents per dozen. Brussels carpets and carpets of like character are changed from 50 to 35 per cent, and the date on which the reduction of rates in the wool schedule goes into effect is changed to Jan. 1, 1895.

WILL NOT FILIBUSTER.

Republican Attitude on the Tariff Bill Declared.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—The Republican steering committee of the senate held a conference during the day for the purpose of considering the attitude of the Republican party in the senate on the tariff question, in view of the claims made by the Democrats that they have assurance of the 45 votes necessary to pass the bill. While the members of the committee do not freely discuss the action of the committee, it is understood that they decided to notify the Democratic leaders that they had no intention of filibustering against the tariff, and especially would not be inclined to resort to dilatory tactics if the Democratic party should prove to be united upon the tariff bill. The interchanges of views showed the fact to be, however, that the Republicans think that there is much material in the new compromise bill for legitimate discussion, and that they will insist upon the right to discuss the bill as amended upon its merits.

JUDGE JENKINS CALLED DOWN.

Investigating Committee's Report Presented to the House.

WASHINGTON, May 4.—The majority report of Representative Bentzar's committee to investigate the action of Judge Jenkins in making his famous Northern Pacific strike order was presented to the house during the day. As foreshadowed, it exonerates the judge for his action, holding that he was not justified. However, it expresses the belief that he was honest in what he did, and therefore does not recommend impeachment proceedings. The report, however, calls attention to alleged abuse of the courts in its exercise of the power of appointing receivers, and punishing for contempt, and suggests legislation to correct these abuses.

INTERNATIONAL BIMETALLISM.

Mr. Lodge Would Force Great Britain to Adopt a Double Standard.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—Mr. Lodge has introduced an amendment to the tariff bill in the senate, of which he gave notice some time ago, providing that as against Great Britain, or any of her colonies, a duty double the amount imposed in the proposed tariff bill shall be levied, and a duty of 35 per cent on all articles on the free list, such duties to continue until Great Britain shall consent to take part in an international agreement with the United States for the coinage and use of silver.

Mrs. Lease For Congress.

TOPEKA, Kan., May 7.—There was talk here during the day of putting Mrs. Lease in nomination for congressman at large, but the Populist leaders do not want to turn down Congressman Harris. They are willing, however, to give her the nomination in the Seventh district should Jerry Simpson not make the race.

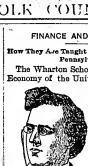
No Grasshoppers This Year.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—The department of agriculture has sent out a bulletin to correct an erroneous impression that destructive broods of locusts are due to appear this season. Two or three broods are due this year, but they are not of a voracious kind and will do very little if any damage.

FINANCE AND ECONOMY.

How They Are Taught In the University of Pennsylvania.

The Wharton School of Finance and Economy of the University of Pennsylvania was established and endowed a unique experiment when it was founded in 1881 on an endowment of $100,000 given by Joseph Wharton. It has proved so successful and attractive to students, however, that its course has been extended from two years of four years to four, so as to enable students to devote some of the time during their freshman and sophomore years to politics, economics and practical affairs as treated in its curriculum.



PROF. E. J. JAMES.

Mr. Wharton has recently added another $100,000 to his donation, $75,000 to go into the general endowment fund and $25,000 for the maintenance of the library. He has attached to his gifts the requirement that the income be expended in giving young men a thorough education in the principles underlying successful civil government and a training for citizenship and various practical careers, particularly banking, insurance, manufacturing and journalism. A special course in journalism was established this year and is proving successful. Next year a course in banking and possibly one in insurance will be begun.

The work of the freshman and sophomore years of the Wharton course will embrace the studies usually found in the lower years of academic courses, but in addition there will be instruction in practical economic problems, accounting, the public service of the United States, physical and commercial geography, political economy and descriptive sociology. The studies of the junior and senior years will remain as at present, and students will still be permitted to enter the Wharton school in the junior year from any of the other departments of the university. The advantages of the course in politics and economics are thus open to every student of the university, no matter what he may make a specialty.

The man to whom the success of the school is mostly due is Professor Edmund J. James, who was called to the faculty in 1883. His energy and skill as a teacher and organizer have made possible the realization of Mr. Wharton's idea. Professor Simon N. Patten has given the school a solid reputation in economics, and Professor John Bach McMaster has given it high rank in American history.

NORTH CAROLINA'S NEW SENATOR.

Ex-Governor Jarvis Has Been Repeatedly Honored by His Fellow Citizens.

Ex-Governor Thomas Jordan Jarvis, appointed by Governor Carr of North Carolina to fill the vacancy in the United States senate occasioned by the death of Senator Z. B. Vance, will only occupy the seat until the election of his successor by the state legislature, which meets in June, unless he be chosen to succeed SENATOR JARVIS. himself for the balance of the unexpired term, which has till March 3, 1897, to run.

Senator Jarvis succeeded Senator Vance also in the governorship of North Carolina. He was lieutenant governor when Vance resigned the governorship to go to the senate in 1879, and so obtained the gubernatorial chair, which he afterward held by election till 1884. After his retirement from the governorship the legislature unanimously recommended him to President Cleveland for a cabinet appointment, but the president gave him instead the post of minister to Brazil.

Senator Jarvis was born in Currituck county, N. C., in January, 1836. His father was a Methodist minister of more character and ability than worldly wealth, and the son had hard scrambling for a collegiate education, but by doing farm work and teaching school finally managed to get through Randolph Macon college, graduating in 1860. He entered the Confederate service at the beginning of the war as a private and was promoted to a captaincy. He had his right arm shattered by a bullet at Drury's Bluff in 1864 and has ever since carried it, helpless, in a sling.

When the war was over, Mr. Jarvis kept store for a couple of years, reading law in the meantime. He was admitted to the bar in 1868 and was chosen a presidential elector on the Seymour ticket and a member of the legislative convention in 1873 and lieutenant governor in 1876.

Twenty Miles a Day by Elevator.

An elevator boy in the Monadnock building in Chicago rides from 80 to 28 miles a day in his car. It is about 300 feet from the ground to the sixteenth floor, and a car makes from 376 to 800 round trips a day, according to the rush. Several young men have collected some interesting statistics on the skyward travel in that buildings. They find that on busy days each car hauls about 4,000 persons up and down. There are 16 elevators in Monadnock building, which would indicate that 64,000 persons visited the building every day.

To Christ Sankey:

You are hereby notified that on the 8th day of May, A. D. 1890, in pursuance to statute, the payment of delinquent taxes pursuant to that certain real estate tax judgment which was entered in the district court in and for the county of Polk, in the Fourteenth Judicial District of the state of Minnesota, on the 31st day of March, A. D. 1890, in favor of said county of Polk and against the land hereinafter described, in the state of Minnesota, to-wit: the east of the S. E. qr. of Sec. 7, Tp. 147, R. 46, was sold to satisfy the amount for which it was adjudged liable in said judgment, interest and costs, to the sum of twenty-eight dollars and forty-seven cents; that the amount required to redeem said piece and parcel of land from such sale (exclusive of the taxes subsequent to said judgment) is twenty-eight dollars and forty-seven cents, and interest on said amount at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum from said 8th day of May, A. D. 1890, until such redemption is made, and that the time for redemption of such piece and parcel of land from such sale will expire sixty days after the last publication of this notice.

Witness my hand and official seal this 24th day of April, A. D. 1894.

THE populists talk of an early county convention, at which they will put up all the tickets they have to put up and make one job of it.

A STATE that cannot produce a gold find nowadays is out of luck. The latest discovery is one in Montana said to be south of Glasgow, a station on the Great Northern railway.

THE Canadian people are experiencing the business depression felt in the United States for the past year, and trade and business in all lines are very dull. The Canadian Pacific alone has laid off about 1000 employes.

THE rumor is afloat that the dems will combine with the pops, with Winston, for governor, S. M. Owen, lieutenant governor and Donnelly for U. S. Senator. Rest assured that Donnelly will be in it somewhere. He did not move his paper to Minneapolis for his health.

WHERE are we at? Gen. Killey's corp of Coxey's army are really at work building barges on which to float down the river to save walking! And some of 'em are liable to fall off their raft and get wrasled all over for once! What times these be that we have fallen upon!

THE republican state central committee meets in St. Paul this week to transact such business as shall come before it. It is thought that the committee will issue a call for the state republican convention for some date in June. An early convention seems to be the general desire throughout the state.

THE rumor that Benjamin Harrison is an avowed candidate for president is denied by that gentleman himself. It would seem that some of his fool friends sprung the story, probably in order to see how it would take. As we view it the people have an idea that McKinley is the man to lead the republican party to victory in '96.

SPEAKING of the next republican state convention the Duluth Tribune says the people demand a big convention and the committee will no doubt concede it, and will arrange a call that will give a convention of 1300 members. One thing about a big convention is that a few designing politicians with good voices can more easily control it than they could a small one.

LAST week in Minneapolis a jealous woman deliberately shot and inflicted a dangerous if not fatal wound upon a fellow-woman whom she found in a room with the husband of the would-be-murderess. And now we hear that he murderess is liable to go scot free because the relatives of the wounded woman "are prominent people" who wish to "avoid notoriety." We fail to see wherein justice gets in her work in that kind of a deal.

WE note that many of our county exchanges regard the candidacy of P. J. McGinty very favorably—even the populist papers agree that McGuire is the best man for state auditor that has yet been mentioned. As yet, we believe, that gentleman has not declared his intentions but we are of the opinion that, should the nomination be tendered him he would consent to make the race.

THE grant and only Ignatius has another hobby on the carpet. He proposes to have a monster parade sometime this summer in Minneapolis, in which he says he will have ten miles of farmers' wagons in the procession. Ignatius is nothing if not sensational. Whatever good such a parade will do the agricultural interests of the state we confess we are too dense to see clearly.

A WATKIN in the Thirteen Towns favors dividing Polk county into two rather than four counties, on the ground that the smaller the county the more heavily will fall the burden of taxation on the people. On the same ground every taxpayer in the county—except those interested in real estate at the proposed county seats—should be opposed to division of any kind at the present time. Not until this county becomes more populous and the people more prosperous, can they afford the luxury of a county sent for every dozen townships.

WE notice that some of our good brethren of the republican press are just now worrying a good bit over Bro. Lamphire, of the Moorhead News, lest he should wander away and get into the camp of the Philistines. We don't think so. Bro. Lamphire lost an arm in the service of the country and recovered to find it in the hands of old republican cause, and while it is possible that he might lose his head temporarily he is sure to recover it and do lots of good service. It is not an easy matter to drive an old soldier out of the party he risked his life for on ensanguined southern fields.

COL. BRECKENRIDGE addressed a meeting of 2000 of his admirers at Lexington last week, and from the hearty greeting at which he received, one would think that the southern people were all in sympathy with the old libertine. But to the credit of Kentucky be it said that her better class of citizens repudiate the old hoary-headed assumer, and are taking a determined stand against his re-election to congress.

OUR great and glorious administration is expending almost enough money in its efforts to discover frauds in pension matters as would be required to place every applicant a generous pension—and as yet has not succeeded in unearthing a single authentic case. Congress passed and our president signed the disability pension bill thus making it a law of the land and the pension commissioner has no right to misconstrue that law to deprive any applicant under it. He would have just as much right to take property that belongs to any other man as he has to take money from the old soldiers that has been given them by law. The government intended, when that law was passed, to give a benefit to the men who perilled their lives that the nation might live, and this administration is doing all in its power to render the law inoperative.

THE REVIEW TABLE.

The North American Review for May, is brim full of well-written articles on timely topics. An article by Gov. Tillman, of South Carolina, on "The Way to Regulate Liquor Selling" is particularly interesting at this time, from the fact that the South Carolina dispensary law has been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme court. Two articles on "Hostility to Roman Catholics" by George Parsons Lathrop and the Bishops of Albany, are also seasonable at the present time.

* * *

The foreign policy of the United States receives special attention in the department "Progress of the World" of the Reviews of Reviews for May. The adventures to be derived by our people from the construction of the Nicuragua Canal from our commercial position in the Pacific, and from using Pearl Harbor as a naval repair and coaling station are clearly outlined. The part played by the British Bermudas as a base of supplies against the United States during the Civil War is recalled as an object lesson to those statesmen who seem overfearful of any policy looking toward the annexation of Hawaii.

Cut in Two.

The Pioneer Press, always abreast of the times, has reduced its subscription rates just one-half. The new rate on the Daily and Sunday editions is but 50c. per month, $5.00 per annum, in advance; for the Daily without Sunday, 40c. per month, $4.00 per annum, in advance; Sunday only, $1.50 per annum, in advance, 50c. for three months. The Pioneer Press is now the cheapest metropolitan newspaper in the country. Its high standard will be thoroughly maintained, and in view of its largely increased circulation which it will most assuredly have, it has entered into arrangements to even greatly improve the paper. Every one can now afford to have a daily paper, as it costs but a cent and a half per week. All news should be addressed to the Pioneer Press, St. Paul, Minn.

DUNN'S BUDGET.

Interesting News and Gossip from the National Capital.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—For the past two weeks the democrats have been very busy trying to secure enough democrats in the senate to pass the tariff bill through that body. Meanwhile the trusts have fattened. All a trust had to do was to make connection with some democrat in the senate who would at once go to the crowd that was making the bill of compromises and say that he wanted it fixed or he would not vote for the bill, and the result is he got what he wanted, for the particular trust or monopoly that he was representing.

Probably there has never been in congress anything like the wholesale jobbery, including speculation and corruption, that has been going on during the fixing of the present tariff bill. It has been shameless. Many democrats have refused to answer the charges that have been made against them in their own party papers, while others have undertaken to make home excuses. And all this has been in the sacred name of reform.

* * *

The democratic victory in St. Paul was not such a surprise to Minnesotans here, who knew of Bob Smith's popularity. Smith is a level headed man and the people are sure that the interests of the whole city are safe in his hands. He always kept the city admirably policed.

* * *

The Coxey raid on Washington has demonstrated one thing to a certainty. No crank can be elected president. No man sulling under populistic or anarchistic colors can get to the White House. The people have seen enough in the demonstration of that rank to know how unsafe it would have been to have had a crank in the presidential chair even if he were no worse than those in congress who have encouraged the Coxeyites. To carry out their ideas, with a populistic crank in power they would have swept away congress. The two old parties will nominate level headed men, and with this example before them the people will choose one or the other of them for president.

It is rather curious that the real leaders of populism would not see that the encouragement of the Coxey movement would forever damn their party with thinking men. They choose, however, to try to keep afloat upon the encouragement of all that is worst and infernal in human nature, in the hope that they might make some small profit for themselves. It may help them in the states where there are many cranks, but not with the whole people.

* * *

It was rather amusing to see our Boss sculling around and offering crank resolutions, and doing everything that the crank element was doing to get before the public as the friends of Coxey. I asked Boen if he expected to make any votes in the Seventh district by his movements and he got mad and quit it.

April Fool Day.

The custom of sending one on a hoodless errand or otherwise "April fooling" him on the first day of April is very ancient. Yet it cannot truthfully be said that any one is equal to the task of tracing it to its origin. Some antiquarians profess to believe it to survival of the travesty of sending the Saviour hither and thither, first from Annas to Caiaphas and then to Pilate and Herod. This opinion is strengthened by the fact that during the middle ages that very scene in Christ's life was made the subject of one of the Easter "Miracle Plays" enacted on the chief streets of London and other English cities of the time. Even though the above opinion has received the sanction of Brands, Moore and Hone, it is not at all unlikely that it is really a relic of some old heathen festival, such as the Hull festival of the Hindoos or the Roman "feast of fools." The custom, whatever its origin, of playing tricks and pranks on April fool on the first day of this month is universal throughout Europe and is also practiced in many other countries of wonder various names. It is a curious fact that the Hindoo Hull festival, where April fool tricks of all sorts are played, is held on the night of the 31st of March, and the orgies are not discontinued until sunrise on the morning of April 1.—St. Louis Republic.

Proof That Sparrows Can Count.

There is no doubt but that birds can count, and an incident I witnessed several years ago illustrating this fact caused me not a little. A sparrow, with four of her young, had a nest in a sparrow house under the veranda of my dwelling. One day the old bird flew up to the nest with four living worms in her beak. The four little birds reached out their heads with the customary noise and were each fed a worm. The sparrow then flew away, and after a time returned again with four worms in her beak, which were disposed of as before. The bird kept this up for some time, during which I was an interested spectator.—Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Planting In the Canecaus.

The partial failure of the experiments thus far made in the culture of Caucasian tea is attributed to a want of expert knowledge in the planting. As it is confidently believed that the climatic conditions and the nature of the soil in certain regions of the Caucasus are entirely favorable to tea culture, new and more practical experiments are about to be made. A large consignment of young plants, with the soil still attached to the roots and carefully packed in wooden boxes, has just been landed at Batoum, direct from Hankow. This shipment is accompanied by 15 Chinese planters and a Buddhaman who has had a long experience on China plantations.—London News.

A Complete Installation.

One of the most complete electric light installations in existence has been decided on for a colliery in Lanarkshire, Scotland. The plant is divided into three parts. In the first the dynamo will run 800 lamps in the colliery itself, to be distributed both throughout the pit and above ground. Another installation is intended to be lighting of 24 workmen's cottages, which are about 700 yards from the colliery, there being three lights in each cottage, or a total of 192 lamps in all. The third installation consists of a complete electric pumping plant capable of delivering 100 gallons of water per minute from the adjacent river to the colliery.

Schoolboy "Cigarette Fiends."

A determined effort is being made by school principals and the press to stamp out the cigarette habit in the public schools. The vice has obtained a firmer grip here on boys from 8 to 14 years old than in any other city in the country, and the results are seen in the remarkable increase of criminals of tender years and of deaths from what the doctors call the "cigarette heart."—New York Tribune.

How to Scrape Beef and Serve It.

This is simply beef from which all indigestible substances have been removed. Take a tender piece of beef; cut across the grain; scrape with a spoon until all the pulp is removed; make a fresh raw face by cutting off the scraped part with a clean, sharp knife; proceed in this way until all the meat is reduced to a pulp. If necessary, it may be eaten raw, spread many thin on slices of toast, or the pulp may be put in a hot frying pan with a little butter and allowed to barely cook through, stirring and turning constantly. A weak stomach will often retain scraped beef when it refuses all other solid foods.

HOW TO BE A GOOD CAKEMAKER.

Social Distinction Was Won In Olden Times by Proficiency In It.

The first requisite is good stuff—fresh eggs, sweet butter, light, lively looking brown sugar or the finest loaf and flour not too white, but of the quality that when squeezed in the hand will keep the lines and veining of the palm. Besides these have favorites—a bottle of brandy, another of the very best whisky, spices, homemade citron, raisins, molasses and sherry or Madeira wine.

From such basis you can evolve bt least 20 different cakes, each in its own way unquestionably excellent.

Begin with the butter. Whether fresh or salt, wash it twice carefully through clear, cold water; then cream in a cool place, since in a warm one there is danger of oiling. Beat very light and stir all the time until mixed with the other ingredients.

About the eggs it depends. In winter they must be fairly warmed; in summer, chilled with the coldest spring or well water.

The flour must always be heated—set in the sun after the first sifting, provided it shines hot enough, otherwise put into a bag and place upon an earthen dish inside the oven until hot through.

Then it must be sifted again fast as the hands can move, and at once stirred lightly into the cake batter.

Mace is powdered, sifted and dried, but not made hot.

Two methods of mixing obtain about equally. In one the sugar is put first with the creamed butter, beaten in thoroughly, and the yellow of egg, also beaten very light, added a little at a time.

Then comes the flour, also added gradually; next the white of eggs, beaten till the dish that holds it might be turned upside down without spilling it; then the flavoring; last of all, wine in the proportion of a tablespoonful for each four eggs used in the cake.

That is for pound cakes or silver or gold cake. In fruit or spice cakes brandy takes its place.

The spirit is used not as flavoring, but as a sort of chemic solvent, which softens the crude component flavors into a harmonious whole.

In the other way the sugar and yolk of eggs are beaten together, the flour mixed with the creamed butter, then the two components carefully stirred together. Next comes the whisky and flavoring go into the batter before the eggs and sugar are added.

Last of all comes the frothed whites; then after 10 minutes of vigorous beating the cake is ready for the oven.

How "Dogcarts" Received Their Name.

Originally "dogcarts" were used by parties of sportsmen in driving to or from the hunting field, and there was always a box or empty space under the back seat, into which the dogs were put when being taken to the field. Probably this was done in order that they might be quite fresh to begin the chase, and from it these conveyances came to be called "dogcarts."

How to Prepare Salmon With Mayonnaise.

Five pounds of salmon are enough for 12 people. Get a piece midway between tail and shoulders. Boil in the day before you need it, and keep in a cold place till you use it. To boil it tie it in a cloth and put 2 tablespoonfuls of vinegar and a tablespoonful of salt in the water. Put the fish in cold water and stand on a slow fire. After it begins to boil to maginsilium—metalic—third lighter and yet much denser and stronger.

let it boil 20 minutes or half an hour. Lift it out carefully by the cloth in which it is boiled and let it drain well before removing the cloth. Then place it in a porcelain dish and set away. When ready for use, put it on a dish platter, remove the skin and dress it all around with crisp white lettuce leaves, pour over it a little tarragon vinegar, garnish prettily with hard boiled eggs cut in quarters lengthwise, lemon cut in the same way, and a few capers over it, and last of all pour the mayonnaise over it and serve.

How to Preserve the Natural Color of Flowers.

Take very fine sand, wash it perfectly clean, and when dry sift it through a fine sieve to a pan. When the sand is dry enough to hold the flowers in an upright position, take some more sifted sand and carefully cover them. Above is a good thing to take for this, as it fills in every chink and crany without breaking or bending the leaves. When the pan is filled softly, leave the flowers to dry for several days. It is a good plan to warm the sand in the oven before using it, as the flowers will then dry more thoroughly. In taking the sand off great care must be taken not to break the leaves, as they are now dry and brittle. Pansies preserved on this way will keep their shape and brilliancy of color all winter, and many other flowers can be equally successfully treated—anything, in fact, where the full pressure of the sand comes on both sides of the leaves; otherwise they will shrivel. To fill in flowers with cuplike shapes, it is better to lay them on the sand and with a small spoon fill in and around each flower. Ferns, when preserved in this way, have a more natural look if when pressed, and the maidenhair fern looks almost as well so when it is freshly gathered.

Her father was in great distress about the case, and, at my recommendation, at last began to administer Ayer's Sarsaparilla, two bottles of which effected a complete cure, much to her relief and her father's delight. THE MASTER PASSION.

Alleged to Be the Mania For Getting Free Passes For the Play.

"I was once present," said Charles Dickens, "at a social discussion which originated in a chance. The subject was, 'What was the most absorbing and longest lived passion in the human breast?' What was the passion so powerful that it would almost induce the possessor to be mean, the careless to be cautious, the generous to be deeply designing and the dove to emulate the serpent?' A daily editor of vast experience and great acuteness, who was one of the company, considerably surprised us by saying, with the greatest confidence, that the passion in question was the passion of getting orders for the play. There had recently been a terrible shipwreck, and very few of the surviving sailors had escaped in an open boat.

"One of these on making land came straight to London and called at a newspaper office with his story of how he had seen the ship go down before his eyes. The young man had witnessed the most terrible contention between the powers of fire and water for the destruction of that ship and of every soul on board. He had rowed away among the gnashing spring and the sinking dead. He had floated by day, and he had frozen by night, with no shelter and no food, and as he told his dismal tale he rolled his haggard eyes about the room.

"When he had finished and the tale had been wiped away from the lips, he was cheered and refreshed and sorted and asked if anything could be done for him. Even with him the master passion was so strong that he immediately replied that he should like an order for the play. My friend, the editor, certainly thought that was rather a strong case, but he said that during his many years of experience he had witnessed an incurable amount of self prostration and abasement having no other object and that almost invariably on the part of people who could well afford to pay."—Exchange.

Hardy Climbing Roses.

In the prairie rose we have a class of hardy native climbers that abound in the growing wild in Michigan and the westren states, where we may plant with confidence. Two of the most commonly known roses of this class, which are favorites everywhere on account of their hardiness, free blooming, and the fact of their flowers appearing just after the other varieties have gone, are the Queen of the Prairie and Baltimore Belle, varieties raised in the year 1843 by a rose grower named Prince, in Baltimore from seeds of the wild prairie rose crossed with some European variety. These two, the Queen and the Belle, are very near alike, when grown near each other on the same porch or with intertwining branches, being both rose colored, but the Queen in contrast. Both are of rapid growth and may be employed to advantage for covering many unsightly objects as old, old trees, old buildings, etc. Among the most desirable roses of the prairie class we have Anna Maria, white flowers, pale pink, very few thorns; Baltimore Belle, pale blush, changing to white; Gem of the Prairie, free, believed to be from Queen of the Prairies crossed with Mme. Laffay, rose red, occasionally blotched with white, large, flat flowers, slightly fragrant; Queen of the Prairies, vigorous, rose red, frequently with a white stripe, medium or large size, double, foliage large, five leaflets, quite serrated; Triumphant, vigorous, rose pink, medium size, double or full, distinct, serrated leaflets arocommon.—Cleveland Leader

WORK OF CONGRESS.

Tuesday, May 1.

Both houses adjourned on account of the death of Senator Stockbridge.

Wednesday, May 2.

In the senate most of the day was consumed by Senator Squire of Washington, who made a carefully prepared speech in general opposition to the tariff bill.

The house passed the bill to improve the methods of accounting in the treasury department. The river and harbor bill was then taken up in committee of the whole.

Thursday, May 3.

The most interesting feature of the day in the senate was the caucus of Democratic senators to discuss the compromise tariff bill. Thirty-eight senators were present and of this number 37 voted to support the compromise measure. It is said the absent senators are also favorable to the measure. Senator Hill was present at the caucus and voted against the compromise.

No business was transacted in the morning hour in the house, the regular order being demanded when it was sought to obtain consideration of a bill. The time of the house from 12:45 until 4 o'clock was taken up in the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Friday, May 4.

The river and harbor bill occupied the day in the house. Among the amendments offered was one by Mr. Boen (Pop., Minn.) appropriating $10,000 for a survey of the Red River of the North. It was defeated.

Senator Quay Continued his speech on the tariff bill.

Saturday, May 5.

Tariff debate in the senate was suspended, and some unimportant calendar bills passed.

The house considered the river and harbor bill.

Monday, May 7.

The senate discussed the Chinese treaty behind closed doors for six hours, but did not finally dispose of the matter.

The house began business by making some committee provisions for the newly elected members of the house. A special order was adopted making the bills for the erection of a new government printing office and a new hall of records in the city of Washington the business of the house until disposed of.

BIMETALLISTS MEET.

Prominent Financiers of All Nations in Session at the Mansion House, London.

LONDON, May 4.—The international bimetallic conference, under the auspices of the Bimetallic League, was called to order in the Egyptian hall of the Mansion House, ex-Lord Mayor Evans presiding. the lord mayor, the Rt. Hon. George B. Tyler, not being able to be present. The proceedings began by an address by the ex-lord mayor, after which Professor Shields Nicholson read a paper on the fall in the general level of prices in relation to the appreciation of gold, and the divergence in the relative value of gold and silver.

During the afternoon the Rt. Hon. A. J. Balfour, the Conservative leader in the house of commons, made an address which was followed by a paper by Leonard Courtney, M. P., on "The Practicability of Maintaining a Ratio Between Gold and Silver Under an International Bimetallic Agreement."

This was followed by a discussion. A banquet was given in the evening to the English and foreign members of the conference. There were about 400 delegates present at the opening session.

Favor Bimetallism.

CHICAGO, May 4.—Chicago bankers, merchant princes and manufacturers, whose names are widely known, have come out for international bimetallism. Marshall Field, Lyman J. Gage, George M. Pullman and 50 others of wealth and importance in the financial world, have signed a creed with bimetallism as its basis and pledged themselves to promote its adoption as an international system. This is the outcome of a conference held a short time ago by several prominent financiers.

LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEERS.

The Biennial National Convention in Session at St. Paul.

ST. PAUL, May 8.—The city is now the temporary home of hundreds of locomotive engineers, who have come from every state in the Union and from Canada to attend the Brotherhood meeting. Headquarters in the Germania Life Insurance Building are a regular beehive of activity. Local enthusiasm is at a high pitch, and the Brotherhood men are assured a most Pleasant Visit and Profitable Convention.

Committee rooms have been provided, adjoining the main headquarters, where special work can be done and private conferences held.

Grand Chief Arthur and Assistant Chief Youngson arrived in St. Paul early Tuesday, ahead of the Chicago special, having come on the regular Chicago and Northwestern Limited. The special train of eight sleepers brought 048 persons from Chicago, mostly delegates, with many ladies, who had gathered in Chicago from Eastern and Southern points.

Carriage Drives and Trips by Rail.

In the way of entertainment nothing is being left undone by the local committees to make this convention in St. Paul a memorable one, and the committee of the city council and of the Commercial club and other bodies in this matter. There will be carriage drives about the city, trips by rail to Fort Snelling, White Bear lake, Lake Minnetonka, Duluth and other points. The citizens of Duluth and Minneapolis are determined to be equal to St. Paul in the matter of providing pleasure for the guests.

The formal welcome to St. Paul will be tendered this evening in the Metropolitan opera house on Thursday afternoon, for which occasion a splendid programme of music and speaking has been arranged.

On Friday afternoon the opening exercises of the grand international auxiliary of the brotherhood will be held also in the Metropolitan opera house, beginning at 1:30, when the ladies will have full charge of the very elaborate entertainment to be given.

The Women Coming and Wives.

Brot'erhood of Locomotive Engi eers te olest organization of ral p ple and with age, has developed strength and wisdom. The Brotherhood has employment agreements with most railroad companies in the country. They have made a record for which they may well be proud. They are as a rule conservative men, who ask for justice only and are satisfied with nothing less.

A cheap, but valuable, life insurance is a feature of the Brotherhood, but the care of the worthy widow of the organization cannot be estimated in dollars and cents, or in fact in any other way, it is done in a manner so quiet and unostentatious. The engineers are known as a most liberal class of men when it comes to a deserving charity of any kind.

Hitherto the conventions have been held annually, but St. Paul has the honor of holding the first biennial convention.

HARRISON IN NEW YORK.

The Ex-President Says He Will Not Be a Candidate in '96.

NEW YORK, May 5.—Ex-President Harrison arrived in Jersey City by the Pennsylvania railroad during the afternoon. He was unaccompanied by anyone and been unobserved from the train to a cab, in which he was driven to the Fifth Avenue hotel. Mr. Harrison says his visit to the city was on private business matters.

"I have no object in coming to New York," he said, "except on my professional business. I have a law case which I came here to attend to. I have been misquoted by the newspapers, and the attempt to give any political colorings to my visit is altogether unwarranted. My law practice is taking up all my time, and I have no thoughts of politics."

"Have you any idea of becoming a candidate for the presidency in 1896?"

"I have not," replied General Harrison, in an emphatic manner.

He said he expects to remain in New York for six or seven days. He will be joined on Monday or Tuesday by his daughter, Mrs. McKee, and Baby Mc-Kee. When he leaves here he will go home to Indianapolis, but his daughter and grandson will remain in the East, where they will spend the summer.

GETTING RID OF THE UNEMPLOYED.

Western Cities Paying Big Sums to Send Coxeyites Home.

FERGUS FALLS, Minn., May 7.—A Coxey organizer, who was here with a wing of the army, in an interview, said that $5,000 was raised in Butte to help take an army which he was organizing in the West to the East. He says that other cities on the coast are raising large sums to send unemployed workingmen east. They care nothing about the effect that the movement is expected to have on legislation, but it is a cheap and popular way to return to the East a large army of men which floated west during the boom days on the coast and which are now a drag in Western cities. While the organizer was here a prominent and wealthy man gave him a list of 104 undesirable citizens and offered him $10 per head for as many of them as he would take over the money payable when he reached Pittsburg.

Appointed Senator from Michigan.

LANSING, Mich., May 4.—At 2:45 o'clock this afternoon, Governor Rich announced the appointment of John Patton, Jr., as United States senator, to succeed Senator Stockbridge, deceased, until a successor is elected by the legislature next January.

Sailed for Spitsbergen.

TROMSOE, Norway, May 8.—The American north polar expedition, under the command of Walter Wellman, has left this place for the island of Spitsbergen on the steamer Ragvold Jarl.

Illiterate Statistics.

A few more years discussing the progress of education in this country.

"You're doing a good deal of talking here," said one, "but I'll bet my man in this crowd a new hat that here in London there are at least 50,000 persons who can't speak a word of English."

The crowd was staggered at first, but recovered in a moment, and bet hats were made. Then it was suggested that some one should go after the statistics.

"Before you do that," said the man very coolly, "I want to bet $1 apiece all round that there are twice that number that can't read and write."

Again the crowd felt the pressure of a hinff, but it rallied soon, and every man who had a sovereign put it up. The newspaper man stood to win eight hats and £6. The man to get the statistics was about to start.

"Hold on," said the man with the iron nerve. "I can tell you now who the first 50,000 are."

"Tell us," was the unanimous command.

"Babies under one year," was the reply, "and under four years for the other 100,000."—London Tit-Bits.

Measuring Brain Work.

An apparatus for measuring brain effort has been made by J. L. Balbi, who suggests that the arrangement might be made to point out the proper studies for children, or those which can be pursued with the least work and most profit, says an English paper. In the center of some heat conducting material he places a thermo-electric pile, which is connected by flexible wire to a sensitive galvanometer. The slightest rise in temperature, due to rush of blood in the head, is indicated by the galvanometer, the effect, of course, increasing with the intensity of the mental work.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

How to Clean Tortoise Shell.

To keep tortoise shell combs bright rub them after each wearing with soft leather. When they become dim, clean with rotten stone and oil applied with chamois.

She Said: Let's Try Hood's

And It Helped Them Both

Liver Troubles—Dyspepsia 29 Yrs.

"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:

"Gentlemen:—My husband and I have been taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and I can truly say it has helped us both. My husband had

Lumbago Rheumatism,

so that he could not stand up straight, and went around half bent over. He had to have a cane to help himself out of his chair. He had taken so much medicine that he was discouraged. But I read so much about Hood's Sarsaparilla, I said, Let's try it. My husband has improved a great deal. His back is much better, and his eyes, which have troubled him a great deal, also seem better. Hood's Sarsaparilla has given him a good appetite. I have had liver trouble and dyspepsia 29 years, but since I have been taking Hood's Sarsaparilla my skin is better, and I also have a good appetite. My complexion is much improved. I have only taken four bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla."—Mrs. and Mrs. JAMES COX, Centerville, Wisconsin.

The health department is asked to abate the nuisance.

MAY STRIKE AGAIN.

RUMORS OF FURTHER TROUBLE ON THE GREAT NORTHERN

Over an Obnoxious Order by the General Manager—Old Employes Being Let Out. The Grievance Committee Confers With President Hill Without Result.

ST. PAUL, May 7.—There are rumors of further trouble with the men on the Great Northern, and the general grievance committee has been summoned to meet here to consider the situation and take whatever action may be deemed necessary. The trouble arises over the order issued a few days ago by the general manager relative to the suspension of certain employes who had deserted their posts or in other manner committed acts subjecting the company to loss and damage during the recent strike.

Conferring With Hill.

Monday the grievance committee called on President Hill and had an interview, but no agreement was reached and another meeting will be held. As nearly as could be learned, after careful inquiry, the matter is simply this: The men claim that the understanding, under the findings of the board of arbitration, was that the strikers should be reinstated in their positions. The company does not understand that the terms are so sweeping, and, in fact, that it reserved the right to let out certain employes who went a little farther than was warranted under the circumstances.

EMPLOYES DISSATISFIED.

A Committee From St. Cloud to Confer With President Hill.

ST. CLOUD, Minn., May 7.—General Manager Case's order that none of the Great Northern employes who did violence to the company's property or violated United States laws during the strike is causing uneasiness here among the A. R. U. men. At a meeting held by them it was decided to send a committee to wait on President Hill requesting him to reinstate the men thus affected or modify the order. Twelve men on this division are affected, including President Foster.

ANOTHER STRIKE OVER.

Trouble on the Mesaba Range Ended by the Closing of a Mine.

DULUTH, May 7.—The decision of Mr. Corrigan to stop work at the Franklin mine ended the strike at Virginia. With the Franklin out of existence, and the only real grievance existed there, the strike came to an end for want of material to feed on. The men returned to their places in the other mines at the old rate, and were glad to get back. The termination of the trouble gave the village authorities a new and very serious question. Mr. Corrigan's decision left 300 men without work or money, and no prospect of employment. Many of them had had nothing to eat for 24 hours. A fund was immediately raised to give them a temporary lift, and while this lasts they will be given work on the streets at $1 per day. The feeling growing out of the death of Mattson, shot by Marshal Feel, is still bitter, but the presence of two companies of militia and the determined stand taken have made the men more conservative.

Militia Relieved.

DULUTH, May 7.—The militia companies were relieved from Virginia and Mountain Iron at 8 a. m. When work was begun at the Franklin a crowd collected, but scattered when the soldiers arrived on the scene. Peter Hooper, the leader of the Finns, was arrested and is now in the county jail.

COKE REGION RIOTS.

Bloody Battle Between Huns and Deputies at the Painter Plant.

SCOTTSDALE, Pa., May 7.—During a battle between striking Huns, a small number of deputies and a few of the Huns men at work at the Painter plant, Deputy Sheriff Sanford White and Chief Clerk E. B. Roddy were terribly beaten and are in a critical condition. Five men and two women on the strikers' side were shot and two of the men dangerously wounded. The mob was led by women.

Sixty-three rioters, among them 12 women and 10 children have been taken to jail and warrants for 50 others have been sworn out, but the men cannot now be found.

Molly Is Called a Convention.

COLUMBUS, O., May 5.—John McBride, president of the United Mine Workers of America, has issued a call to the organization and those affiliated with it, to send each delegate to each 500 members to a national convention to be held in Cleveland at 10 a. m., on Monday, May 14, preparatory to meet in joint session with coal operators from all the states the following day.

Ramsay Not Guilty.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Ia., May 5.—The jury in the case of Grand Chief Ramsay of the telegraphers' union, charged with inciting men to quit and tangle the wires during a strike, brought in a verdict of not guilty.

GRAND ARMY SENSATION.

Money Sent South to Decorate Union Graves Used For Other Purposes.

MILWAUKEE, May 7.—Department Commander Watrous, of the Wisconsin G. A. R., has issued a statement to the effect that funds which have annually been sent to Virginia to be used in decorating the graves of Union soldiers, buried on and near southern battlefields have not all been used for the purpose intended. The matter is one that will interest Grand Army men in every part of the country, and will cause quite a stir. Communications and resolutions that a large portion of the money received by the Richmond post has been used to build a memorial hall in the city of Richmond.

Good Business Women.

"It is very hard now-a-days to transact business with women than it was a score of years ago," said a lawyer who has much to do with the settling of estates. "Formerly I found it next to impossible to get women to understand even simple legal terms, and as for any technical phraseology I might just as well have talked Greek to them. But I had a client the other day that it was actually a pleasure to do business with. She was a woman in middle life, and one whom I would never have expected to find so intelligent on such subjects, but she entered into the arrangement, went through all of the intricacies, and followed me through the devious ways of a complicated real estate transaction in a fashion that not only delighted but amazed me.

"I note with the greatest pleasure a growing tendency in this direction. I could wish that I might live in the first half of the next century, for I fancy that society and the business world in general will be in a very much better state than it is at present. I believe the fathers of daughters will live long enough to see their girls reflecting quite as much credit on them by their business faculties as ever their sons did.

"It all very well to talk about women in business and say disparaging things of them and indulge in all sorts of little witticisms and unadvisable remarks, but when one comes down to actual facts the business woman of today stands well up in the ranks. When there are taken into consideration the obstacles they have to contend with and their newness in this sort of work, this is not the least remarkable feature of the situation. The country is full of women who raise their families with great credit to themselves and meanwhile conduct various sorts of business with the very best of financial results. Comparatively little is said about it on account of a tendency in the minds of many men to discourage and belittle anything that looks like feminine competition in the business world. But all these men are wasting their time and strength. The movement is well started and is going on with a force as resistless as all of the other processes of evolution."—New York Ledger.

An Automatic Press Feeder.

An ingenious arrangement has been devised and put in operation by a Lorain county boy which the automatic feeding of single sheets of paper to printing machines of the ordinary, under pattern, or two feeder, perfecting, lithographic or rolling machine is carried out in a remarkably satisfactory manner—the apparatus, in a word, while of simple construction and management, is capable of automatically separating a single sheet of paper from the bulk and laying the sheet to exact register in the grippers of the machine. In the accomplishing of this effect two sheets are advised in the usual position on the sides of the machine, which sides also carry two vertical sliding frames surmounted by a cross-head, which supports a radial beam for the purpose of regulating the weight or pressure upon the sheets, the parts being allowed sufficient play on the slides by means of antifriction pulleys. The motive power for carrying the sheet forward is taken by means of a chain drive from the shaft of the cylinder, thus insuring that the sheet is fed except in accord with the motion of the cylinder.—New York Sun.

A STRANGE CASE.

How an Enemy was Foiled.

The following graphic statement will be read with interest: "I cannot describe the comb, except to say that it was made of a single piece of wood. I had to work it until the two parts until they were sort of connected in a manner the devil himself had not mixed possession of them. In addition, I had a wrong business in my head and something wrong, somewhere with an indescribable 'pain' in it. I was a physical physician and I knew it. I knew the symptoms, from which, according to their unanimous testimony, I was dying of cancer. Cure it forsooth—impossible, sir. It confirmed its insidious progress until I had been a thing of dreadful suffering for years. Such was my prospect. I had been doctoring a year and a half steadily, but all to no purpose. Then I read in an advertisement of Dr. Miles' Nervine. I sent for a package. It helped me from the very first dose. I took it as directed, but I must confess, with little hope. In many cases, but a few days had passed before I felt sure that my enemy fiend had left me, and there has not been even the slightest indication of its return. I now feel as well as I ever did, and have gained ten pounds in weight, though I had not gained three lbs in 20 years. Four others have used Dr. Miles' Nervine with the same astonishing result, and I am daily advising it in all cases of cancer in mine."—James Kane, La Rue, O.

Dr. Miles' Restorative is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

Progress and Cookery.
"The World Moves."
There is no better illustration of this old saying than the numerous schools now-a-days devoted to practical kitchen processes. These schools have been alert to find a reasonable substitute for Lard, the use of which is so generally condemned. This want has been fully met by the new vegetable Lard. When science strikes the kitchen, it strikes home and everybody gets the benefit. Cottolene is a clean, delicate and economical substitute for Lard—cleaner than the hog, delicate as the finest vegetable oil, economical from its low price and small quantity required to be used. CHAPTER XXVIII.
Cottolene

EDWARD FREEMAN'S NARRATIVE.

The preservation of my brother's life is the first instance and his final escape such his piece of imprisonment were oth due, as I often heard my father assert and as Jack and myself also believed, to the grace of God and not the wisdom of man. The police and the coast guards were quite at a loss all through and could do nothing. Even the clever detective who came from Dublin and spent a fortnight here observing and considering went away giyin in a sort of passion. It was the extraordinary vision seen by my little brother Charley that led him to roll boyes into the places where Jack was really imprisoned and so perhaps saved his life. Finally I myself found out the secret of his imprisonment, not by any vies calculations, but by a sort of inspiration which came to me quite unsolicited. One day—shall I ever forget it?—a whimsical thought, but really a tempting of Providence, came upon me as I sat at the table just before breakfast balancing a spoon on the edge of a teacup and thinking about Jack. Might not something happen or some one strike me if I were to go to Dhn-Corrig fishing for comfort, just as my brother did? When I had an answer, I used to come back to the spot whence I shot it and shoot another in the same direction and with equal force in order to find the first. It was this that put me in mind of the plan which I rose now about to execute. I said nothing about it to any one, but taking my rod set off for Dhn-Corrig. I fished carelessly or pretended to fish for some time. Then I got tired. "This," I said, "is perhaps how Jack fell ac- months ago. Fish not taking, nothing to do, I will try another rock, but there are none here on the right, only the sheer wall of cliff; try leftward then." I clambered along bore till I came to a deep fissure in the cliff side. It ran sheer down to the sea, really a rather horrible chasm or long profound cleft, at the bottom of which the sullen waters seemed talking to themselves. I had already explored this cavern by sea, having scrulled a boat through it from end to end, for it was too narrow for rowing. Where I now stood it was possible to leap across, but as I looked up and down I saw a place where an active leaper, gifted with a degree of nerve, might leap it over. Not that the cleft was really so very wide at this point, but the narrowness of the foothold at the other side and the darkness and depth of the abyss below brought the consciousness of danger before the imagination in a somewhat appalling manner. Still keeping my rod in my hand, I leaped it right glad to find that my foot did not slip on the narrow and sloping ledge at the other side. I sat then in the convulsion which I used to into my mind that I was on Jack's throne. My heart beat so that I could hear it, and I had to stand still for a considerable time before its beatings and my general agitation would permit me to go on. I was now on the side of an ajacent sheer cliff, one which, when seen from the western sea, seemed quite sheer and untraversable, but I found a little ledge like a road leading onward and upward. One part of it was very dangerous, but after passing this I came upon rough, craggy ground, quite easy to get over. This rough way led steadily upward along the face of the cliff. By it alone was the rock traversable, and it was not wide. If Jack came down this cliff at all, I would now find him or his body.

I went on and on for nearly a mile, the little ledge being always traversable, did at last, quite suddenly, arrived at a large opening in the face of the cliff, which I had never noticed before. I may add that, unlike Jack. I did not care much for sea fishing, was seldom on the water and had never sounded the cliffs with his hawk's eye and inquiring mind. As I stood in the mouth of this cave I was too filled with hope and fear to cry out. Presently I heard the sound of feet, a man was stepping briskly over rocks, and even springing actively from one to another, though all was dark within. Then a strange whistle sounded in the interior. The air was "Yillikins and His Dinah." Well I knew who whistled. It was either Jack or his ghost. There was a smooth incline of rock sloping inward just in front of me. Crying out I know not what, I slid or even cast myself down this incline. I heard Jack roar at me to stay back, but I could not, for the incline rapidly grew steeper, till at last it was nearly sheer. So I came tumbling down and fell and rolled over upon something soft. In a moment I was on my feet again and found myself in my brother's arms.

As soon as we recovered ourselves Jack brought me round his vast underground dwelling, relating all his history as we went, while I told him all that had happened in the outer world. Though I, too, was now estranged, I did not mind it in the least. I was surprised—delighted—with all I saw—Jack's fine seals, his fire burning so mysteriously in the huge darkness.

CHAPTER XXIX.

LIFE OF THE TWO BROTHERS IN THE CAVERN.

Next morning in flus spirits we both so early and after breakfast commenced rolling such bowlders as we could in motion in the direction of Curry's Window. We worked hard till dinner and went at the work again shortly afterward, not desisting till we were hardly able to eat from fatigue. At supper Jack said: "I fear, Ned, that our task is a bigger one than I anticipated. When we got to Curry's Window nearly all the bowlders that you and I together can remove." I pooh-poohed Jack's low spirited view of the situation. I was so delighted with the novelty of everything I could not even for a moment harbor such thoughts. That we two could not almost as soon as we chose clim out at Curry's Window or in some other way escape triumphantly out of our prison I utterly refused to believe. If it were not for the sorrow of our people at home, which I knew must be great and heartbreaking, I would have been as happy as any one c uld be. It was all so like what might be read in a famous boys' story book, and yet it was all true. Here we were both immured in one vast cavern, amid strange echoes and reverberations, in a huge darkness lighted only by the light of our fire, with our seals, like Elijah's ravens, bringing us food. It was all so strange and interesting. At first I was obliged to keep well out of view of the seals, who after the first alarm gradually became accustomed to my presence, though it was several days before I could venture myself, and it was then only by slow degrees that I could get them to tolerate me. They were very susceptible to my spirit. I saw from their motions that they liked my whistling better. Jack was displeased at this, or I thought he was, so I forbore and took every opportunity of alluding to the extraordinary affection which subsisted between them. At the end of the second day we had shifted to Curry's Window a very considerable heap, yet the top of the heap was still a great distance from the window. We could not pile one stone on the top of another, owing to their smoothness and roundness. The base of this pile had to be made broad. We had to use all the pedicment many of our precious stones. With our two fishing rods, or rather the butts of them, the hoops of our shoes and the scanty bits of sound timber found in the cave, we proposed now to make a ladder, but soon dismissed that notion. The ladder would have been much too short for our purpose, as we found after a very careful calculation. "I fear you are right, Jack," I said at last one evening as we sat ruminating by the fire. "Tomorrow we shall begin cutting steps in the rock. It is too long to waste half our time in labor when thrown away." Those first steps that Jack cut were now useless, being covered by the loose stones.

"There is a better plan than that," said he. "In the lesser cavern there is a deep pool to the inner, which is quite sound when you get to the depth of two or three inches. It is far too heavy for us to roll into the water, but we might cut it into movable lengths and get the pieces through the tunnel. I think that is our plan, but it will be a long and hard work, for the beam is mahogany." We agreed to adopt that plan and to set to work in the morning. I, for my own part, made a proposition of a different kind. It was to send out a message attached to the neck of one of the seals. The absolute consultation we hit upon a good way of doing so. To write a letter was easy enough. I had paper, a bit of pointed stick, a hard fiber of seaweed, anything of all indeed, could be a pen, and our own vein supply the ink. But how send this letter out attached to a seal and at the same time preserve it from the water and render it conspicuous and noticeable to any one observing the letter carefully when it might be on discovering the right plan. Jack had carefully preserved every portion of that unfortunate sheep which he brought back to any conceivable purpose. The bones, much of them as were not still enveloped in muscle, were in a state to cut, split themselves. The entrails, dried and twisted, were now strong cords. Among the other relics of the sheep he had preserved the bladder. It was just the thing for our purpose. We would put our letter into the bladder, blow it out, bind the mouth of it firmly with twine and attach the bladder to our seal. So the letter would be preserved from the action of the water, and any one seeing our seal would see also the bladder floating behind him when he rose to the surface. The seal would in that case be certainly pressed till shot. Jack, who was very sanguine, and indeed not unreasonably so, about his hard of seals, did not quite like the plan, but finally consented to the immolation of one. We selected a seal called No Good. He was large enough, but so far as Jack and myself were concerned a bad fisherman. In fact, he could never be taught to fish—a fish at all, though being young he was one of the liveliest of our herd. This unproductive member of the family was selected to be the bearer of our letter. Next morning we wrote our letter and fastened the bladder to one of No Good's legs. We were in hopes or about two feet of sheep gut between the bladder and the leg. We now dismissed No Good and proceeded to carry our other purpose into execution. There was now no necessity for repeating the catholaomo operation by which Jack had formerly kindled a fire in his parlor if it were possible, for indeed he had exhausted his materials. I had in my pockets some lucifer matches. Two or three of these we selected, and binding them up tightly in Jack's purse we stripped and took to the water, Jack going first. Waiting for a few minutes till he should be quite clear of the tunnel, I followed, not indeed without unpleasant qualms, for it was an ugly business, and though I could swim and dive as well as my brother I was not at all so brave, stout hearted and determined as he was. Indeed I have never met any one so fearless as he was. On this occasion my heart failed me, and after groping in the cave for a few seconds I came out again as I had gone in. Then I said to myself, "If I do not get through soon, Jack, suspecting some accident, will return, and we may meet in the tunnel with disastrous consequences." Making up my mind fully to get through this time, I dived again and was quite surprised to find how easy the business really was. I came up, of course, in dense darkness and shouted, "All right!" I heard some one cry: "Swim this way. I will show you a hand." Soon I was helped onto the rocky shore, and when we had collected some timber and dried our hands we struck the matches and lit a fire. When I, for my own part, had acted my curiosity by exploring the parlor, we began to work upon the great beam and begin to cut from it such a length as we thought we could roll into the water, and found it, as Jack had predicted, very slow work indeed. In spite of the fire at which we repeatedly warmed ourselves, we soon grew cold. "This won't do at all," Jack said. "If we are to do a good day's work here, we must swim in with our clothes on, dry them at the fire, then dress ourselves and work comfortably." We returned as we came, dressed ourselves, and began again through the tunnel, and after drying our clothes and putting them on worked with our knives at the beam for the rest of that day. We then covered up the embers in ashes, returned to the big cave and there, having eaten our dinner, went to quite shift our quarters. at least for the present, and to remove some of our food into the parlor. This we did and, partaking with no a good deal of mutton and bread. We brought through the broad passage enough—viz., a leg of mutton and the sheep's skin and tying it up so tightly as to be quite waterproof. On the previous day we had been rather surprised to find that the seals seemed quite as fond of our society as we were quarters as in the old. There were one or two of them sporting in the dark water beside us all day as we worked. Though Jack, using all his most effective gestures and phrases, continued to impress upon them that they must go and fish, they did not do so. Our new and strange condition and the absence, I suppose, of Scamp from the scene had interrupted the association of ideas which my brother had with so much trouble succeeded in establishing in their minds. We therefore determined to bring Scamp in too. Jack unloosed the fellow for the first time. His delight was indescribable, and so much did he relish his freedom that during the greater part of that day we were unable to persuade him again. Eventually we succeeded and had the satisfaction later on of finding his parents bring him in a fine sparkling, only a portion of which was their son permitted to devour. Of course the moment we seized Scamp we proceeded to cut off a piece of the big mahogany beam, each of us working at a different notch. We now saw our way clearly to escape. This piece of timber, we knew, was amply sufficient for our needs, but we also saw that the cutting and preparation, of it would take a long time. We foresaw, too, some difficulty in getting the pieces through the flooded tunnel, but imagined we had a tremendous method of working out the problem.

No Good still continued to appear in the pool, with the bladder floating behind him, a comical sight, at which we often laughed. I have seen No Good chasing it round and round the pool for half an hour at a time, like a kitten chasing his tail, but we had foreseen the danger which this pastime involved and had tied it in such a manner that he never got his teeth within a foot of it. We attention of his companions, of course, that we did not fall sick or meet with my unforseen accident.

CHAPTER XXX.

One morning I was awakened by a loud noise of thumping and the swish swish of rushing water. I knew the significance of this. There was wild weather abroad, and we here, though far from the outer turmoil, were experiencing the effects. Jack was still asleep. I got up, fed the fire with fresh timber and sat on the edge of the pool contemplating the agitation of the dark water and listening to the strange and rather horrible notes which it made echoing in the long, high and winding cave behind me, the mouth of which opened upon this pool. All our seals were here in a row. No Good was among them, with his caudal, or crural, ornament swaying down gracefully behind him and occasionally whirled about by the water. "We are prisoners now," I said to myself, "for it would be decidedly dangerous to attempt the tunnel with the water rushing through it at this rate."

After awhile Jack awoke, and when we had breakfasted and played with our friends we went again at our work. We knew that the flood, probable pieces of timber, which only needed to be cut smooth at each end so that one might land on the top of another, to be ready for the escalading or Curry's Window. All that day the agitation of the water continued and now momentarily more violent. And we wished to do so it would have been utterly impossible for us to traverse the tunnel. In the afternoon the monotony was interrupted somewhat by the reappearance of No Good minus his appendage. The bladder was gone. That being so, we perceived how desirable it was that we should return to the big cavern as soon as possible. Our bladder might be picked up at any moment, consequently at any moment a search party might descend into the big cavern. What would our lucky find in the parlor then avail us? They would never suspect the existence of this second cave, the avenue to which was quite out of sight. It seemed to me very evening that Mr. Watkins and his nephews picked up our letter. As it was certain death, however, in the present condition of the water to attempt the tunnel, we quietly worked on at the big beam and spent the day according the ends of those pieces which we had separated. After a week or ten days the outer storm had evidently abated, but the agitation of the water was still too great to permit us to get through the tunnel. At last, one morning, when we awoke, we found that the agitation had almost subsided. This day we resolved to bring our legs through. We rolled one of them to the water's edge, and having made it fast with a cord gently pushed it into the water. We feared that it might sink, in which case we intended to get it by diving up to turning our sheepskin into a bladder and fastening it to the log. The log, however, swam, and our next task was to cause it to sink just sufficiently to come on a level with the surface of the submarine tunnel, so that we might draw it through into the great cavern. This task we accomplished by tying to it small stones as sinkers. To make a long story short, we succeeded that day in bringing all our short logs through and rolled them up upon the shore of the seals' pool in the great cavern, hut it was a very long work.

About half that work was accomplished when we made an important discovery. viz., that a search party had been in the cave during the time that we were weather bound. In our provision canny I found the remnant of sandwiches and the flask of brandy, recognized at once Mr. Watkins' flask. We did not know till afterward that he and his man had been twice in the cave, once the day after the inauguration of No Good's appendage and a second time three days subsequently. Though we remained in utter ignorance that they were visit it again, we did not relax our exertions. Next day we rolled the logs through Curry's Window. They we rolled them for greater convenience, we had taken care to make most of them light enough to be raised by our united strength and some light enough to be raised by one of us alone, the reason of which will be apparent presently. The sandwiches, some of ham and some of beef, were very welcome, though the latter was rather stale. They lasted us too, though neither of us cared in the least for strong drink, was in our present circumstances a most delicious beverage. In short, we ate, drank and were merry that night, and sang songs, too, making a chorus ring. We certainly did not drink too much brandy and water, at least I did not. I was the near approach of liberty which made us so festive, though no doubt the strong drink, to which we were unaccustomed, somewhat contributed. Jack had not smoked since I joined him. He now produced a bunch of tobacco. I still some time when he might really need the stimulus of tobacco. I was a confirmed smoker, but I should that I could say the same now! Indeed I have a wretched pipe in my mouth as I write these lines.

We rose next morning early and breakfasted in high spirits. This day we knew that we were to be free. We were to Curry's Window. There, on the highest of the bowlder stones, which we had previously placed there, we put one of our big logs, making it quite firm about the base by the insertion and even the wedging in of some rocks round it. We were to be cautious, for if afterward our ladder might happen to topple over the fall would be fatal. Upon the top of this first log we put a second in such a manner that the two might rise from the first to the second. This was effected by inserting seaweed behind the first log, causing it to stand out from the rock. To a similar manner we caused to stand back by means of seaweed. In this way we proposed to make our ladder, or rather our stairs. When completed, we hoped to be able to step up to Curry's Window almost as easily as one might go up stairs in a house. The necessity of making thousands of these blocks quite accurate and even of writing. All the gold and metal work we tambled into the portmanteaus, locked it and carried it to the entrance. My seals were not in evidence this day. Before leaving the cave our luminaries I had released Scamp and given him a final kiss. How long my seals continued to haunt the cave I cannot tell. They forgot me, I dare say, sooner than I could forget them. Though it is now 40 years and odd occurrences which I have described, I believe I would rather shoot a man than a seal. I sold most of my treasure there to Dublin in the autumn.

A few we disposed Scamp and had a kind farewell to all the seals. Indeed I myself felt a sort of regret at parting with them, though my acquaintance with the gentle and affectionate creatures was a very recent, yet Jack fairly—not that it is no matter. In time we lade farewell to the seals, and putting up the few things we had to bring with us and the hatt ends of our fishing rods, in order to steady us in our return along the face of the cliff, ascended the stairs, congratulating each other on the excellence of our handiwork, and together stood in Curry's Window contemplating the great sea, which at the moment was flashing in the sunlight. Jack's face was literally as bright as that sunlit sea. We made our way carefully along the little ledge. Indeed I may as well say that I went carefully, for Jack, who had now been for months stepping about among the bowlders of the cave, was as sure footed as a goat. In due times we came to that yawning cleft which ever since the days of old Curry, the smuggler, had repelled men from traversing this cliff. Jack sprang across without a moment's hesitation. It was a big leap indeed, but the leap back was not so appalling as the leap forward, for there was plenty of foothold on the Dhn-Corrig side of the chasm. After a few sigh to Melody's cabin the worthy, who had been released from jail, issued huge in the little bright doorway and behind him his superior, that illustrious young scholar, Daniels. Big Melody, who, I thought, was devoted of all amiable human instincts, actually wept, and the illustrious Daniels ran off to the village, roaring like a little bull—"Master Jack is found! Master Jack is found!" All the village people and a great many of the county people, who had been celebrating the eve of the great festival in the public house—Johnnie Melville's, if that is any matter—ran to meet us, so that it was at the head of a great procession that we reached the rectory. Needless to say that my father, though strongly averse to such practices, made no objection when Jack proposed to send to Johnnie Melville's for a barrel of porter. It was broached on the lawn under torchlight and then emptied. As every ou was tessiag us about our place of concealment, Jack announced he would make a speech and forgot them all together of our adventures. Accordingly, as soon as he had changed his clothes—those in which he had remained were mere rags—he mounted a chair on the lawn and told the whole story as shortly as he could. When he had finished, my father addressed the people and ended with a prayer, at which all the people, though perhaps in anything but a prayerful humor, reverently hared their heads. Most of them were Roman Catholics, but this was in the predominant days of the union the relations between Protestant clergymen and their Roman Catholic parishioners were more strained and strange than I have been informed they are now.

All the village people ran to meet us.

CHAPTER XXXI.

JOHN FREEMAN CONCLUDES HIS STORY.

My story is nearly ended. Next day Ned and Mr. Watkins and myself descended into the "Devil's Parlor." We took with us a rock drill, blasting powder, a fuse and a portmanteau. The reader will probably guess our purpose. It was to break open the tomb of old Curry and appropriate his treasures. I may have had some fear of the ghost, but I concealed it from my father in filing his tomb. We bored, charged and blasted the fragments the big stone which debarred entrance to the little nook where his ashes lay, thereby deserving, as I thought, a place in hell, what was perhaps an important archæological relic. The fragments, however, were so few as to excite no alarm in the Royal Irish academy or some other learned body to appropriate them. Breaking open the stone coffin we found, de, a fuse and a portmanteau. The each side of the heap of bones, nakes and metal work we found two smaller vases robinion and filled each of them in turn with many rings of gold. There was a third broken, but evidently charged in the same manner, for the rings were found in a heap mingled with shells. This crock was placed opposite the pot containing the ashes. The whole behind the latter pot had been planed or chiscled to a flat surface, and upon this were certain marks, but nothing in the nature of writing. All the gold and metal work we tumbled into the portmanteaus, locked it and carried it to the entrance. My seals were not in evidence this day. Before leaving the cave our luminaries I had released Scamp and given him a final kiss. How long my seals continued to haunt the cave I cannot tell. They forgot me, I dare say, sooner than I could forget them. Though it is now 40 years and odd occurrences which I have described, I believe I would rather shoot a man than a seal. I sold most of my treasure there to Dublin in the autumn of February. After giving Ned a present out of the proceeds, I had exactly £1,105 10s. over, which I straightway hunkered. I never finished my college course. In the following summer, yielding to the solicitations of a maternal uncle, I sailed for Australia. I am now a sheep farmer in the county of New Yorkshire, Victoria, and though I cannot say that I have cattle on a thousand hills I have many thousands of sheep on plains. My dear brother Ned joined me in the succeeding summer and is now doing well as a sheepmaster, but tired of the life. He is now a journalist in western Australia, and so far as I can judge, for the paper which he both owns and edits himself he is regularly, writes very well indeed. From certain signs and tokens I believe that the poetry which adorns it is his own. Little Charley, though he threatened at one time to join the Church of Rome, is now, I am glad to say, a low church clergyman and rector of the parish of Hugriminton in the shire of Essex and maintains manfully in those parts the sound doctrine of salvation by faith only. With regard to the spparition, I have to add the following: Some of the more interesting metal work I showed to a college chum, who told me that he had a friend, who was well up in antiquities, who would be able to tell us all about them. His friend's name was Hennessy, I forgot his Christian name. [A distinguished Gaelic scholar, transistor of "The Annals of Locha Cé" and of the annals of Ulster; died a few years ago.] He is a gentleman who, I understand, has since distinguished himself in that department of scholarship and now occupies a position of trust under the government. Mr. Hennessy assigned the metal work to some century which I forget. He said, I remember, that its characteristics were more Scandinavian than Irish, and that their partial defacement was due to the fact that they had been cast upon the funeral pyre of the person in whose tomb they were found. As I had told Mr. Hennessy nothing about how and whore I found them, I swagecrily struck by his penetration. Afterward I told him the whole story of my imprisonment in the cavern, with the leading facts of which he was generally acquainted, for it was a common theme of conversation at the time, and a pretty full account had appeared not long before in the Saunders News Letter. I asked him [—] to describe the personal appearance and dress of the ghost, he was greatly surprised and interested to find out that the dress was that of an antique Irish warrior. He took from a drawer a certain Irish manuscript and read out of me, translating as he went along, three or four passages, in which the appearance of the costumes of ancient Irish warriors was described, and which quite agreed with the vi ion. He said that the metal which I have described as being like gold, but brighter, was as amalgam of tin and copper, a species of bronze, the secret of whose manufacture has since been lost, and that the eyes in the head of the ghost, which looked like glass, but were not so bright as glass, were probably of that substance which in Ireland is called "Slieve Donard diamond." He was very much impressed by the whole of my story about the ghost, and said he for from treating it lightly was very serious indeed and said many times that it was marvelous—and marvelous indeed it was, be the explanation what it may. When I spoke of Curry's Window, he stopped me and asked whether I was sure that the fisherman had pronounced the word as I had pronounced it. "A great deal," he said, "in investigating antiquities and the appearances of names depends on the exact pronunciation." I said that he had not, and that it was for convenience's sake I had pronounced it so; that the fisherman had pronounced it something like Corr, He seemed greatly pleased and interested in this. He told me then that this was the name given in many parts of the southern and western Irish to the pre-Christian ages, and that in the still ancient literature is many a curious variety of stories relating to this being. After the introduction and spread of Christianity in the country the pagan deities began to be regarded as evil beings, usually as pisata, or great water serpents. This seems apposite and will help to explain the singular story told to Mr. Watkins by one of the islanders, which story, as my readers remember, he has taken from the correspondence of that gentleman and intends to publish along with my narrative.

The fire bell on Monday morning called out the department at about 8:30, to attend to an incipient blaze in a straw pile near T. H. Bjoin's barn in the 4th ward. When the department arrived they found the fire had been extinguished by a few pails full of water judiciously applied. The fire is said to have been caused by a smoker emptying his pipe in a straw pile.

Oats are selling in this market for 20 cents per bushel for feed and seed. Barley sells for 35. At these prices oats and barley are better crops to raise than wheat at its price, and yet every spring oats and barley have to be imported. Many farmers have said that they intend to raise more oats and barley this year than ever—but so they say every year and keep on raising more wheat.

Geo. Messick, of Duluth, was visiting his old-time Crookston friends last week. He says business in Duluth is dreadful dull, with no prospect of improvement in the near future.

E. A. Ranson, a deputy organizer of the order of Modern Woodmen of America has been in the city this week trying to establish a camp here, and is meeting with much encouragement.

It is hinted that A. E. Koeppe, who went to Los Angeles a few weeks since is not dead in love with that country. Predictions are freely made that he will return to Crookston eventually.

Gov. Nelson came up on Thursday morning on the Great Northern road and took the train north. He is examining the state ditches, and will look up the matter complained about at Edna before he returns to St. Paul.

While playing about the depot platform on Friday evening, the young son of S. Sundit, the Fletcher street saloon keeper fell and broke his leg. Dr. A. E. Cooke was summoned and attended the little sufferer who is now doing nicely.

Jesse P. Farley, well known to all old-timers as receiver for the old St. Paul & Pacific R. R. and prior thereto gained some notoriety as plaintiff in a suit against J. J. Hill and others for $5,000,000, died at his residence in Dubuque at the age of 81. Mr. Farley was a life long railroad man.

A. C. Wilkinson returned this week from a trouting excursion to Wisconsin. He appeared prompt on the fishing grounds May 1st, the date that trout in Wisconsin are legally ripe and took 42 of the finny beauties on the first day. He reports having had three or four days rare sport.

Hans Sampson was in from Fosston over Sunday and Monday returning home Tuesday morning. Reports farmers nearly all through seeding. About the usual acreage of wheat was sown but not very much flax owing to the scarcity of that article for seed. Says farmers will plants lots of potatoes, having plenty for seed.

Geo. Eaby returned last week from a winters sojourn in the southern states and says he is glad to be home again. George says we don't know anything about hard times compared with some places where he has been; says about four months down there would cure the most chronic grumbler we ever had up here.

Present prospects indicate that potatoes will be a profitable crop to raise this year. At 25 cents per bushel there is many money in potatoes than in wheat at 75. Every farmer we have talked with says he is going to plant every bushel he has or can procure for seed, and will go into it like that, it is liable to make potatoes cheaper than prospects now indicate.

Ten years is a long time for a play to hold the attention of the people, but "Monte Cristo," as now presented by James O'Neill, has held the stage for the length of time, and the fact that Mr. O'Neill is worth over a quarter million dollars is a sign of its immense popularity. "Monte Cristo" will be given at the opera house May 16th. The scenery is all carried by Mr. O'Neill, and represents with fidelity the famous scenes of Dumas' great work.

The rumor was abroad early in the week that master mechanic, P. E. Adams, had been discharged from the road. The rumor, probably, grew from the fact that "Buck" Adams, a brakesman at St. Cloud, had been discharged.

Albert Helmich drove in Monday with a pair of colts, which will be three years old in July, one weighing 1275 and the other 1350 pounds. These colts were sired by Collins' "King David," and show the kind of stock this horse produces.

The populist county central committee met at the court-house on Monday to arrange for a call for their county convention. They will do all their nominating under one head and have but one convention the date for which will be fixed as soon as they find out the date for their state convention.

Andrew Steenerson came up from his farm on the west side on Wednesday with six fine hogs for the market, which porkers weighed 200 to 300 pounds, and netted him 6 cents per pound dressed. Andrew says this bents wheat raising all out of sight and he was chasing Fontaine all about the city during the afternoon trying to engage some of those Hill pigs.

The case of A. C. Haugen vs. Oscar Youngreen, which was appealed to the supreme court from the decision of Judge Ives, was decided last week and the decision of the lower court was sustained. The case involved the construction of the exemption laws. Defendant had seized certain property which plaintiff claimed was exempt—and the court thought so also.

There will be a district lodge convention of the Independent Order of Good Templars for the 13th district, at Crookston next week. Reception and banquet to the delegates on Tuesday evening. On Wednesday the delegates will be in session all day. The exercises will consist of the reading of papers and the discussion of them. Grand Chief Templar, Geo. W. York, of Minneapolis, will be present and preside over the sessions.

Although the American public has been accused of being fickle minded, its unswerving fidelity toward an actor who, by his artistic achievements has got a firm hold on its affections, has been proven in two cases. It has been busied on seeing Mr. Joseph Jefferson in Rip Van Winkle for twenty-five years, and Mr. James O'Neill as Edmond Dantes in "Monte Cristo" for the last ten years. This standard romantic character has been played by the former, Mr. James O'Neill more than three thousand times and this record he has obtained without missing a single performance. He is booked to appear at the Grand Opera house, May 15th.

MERCHANT OF VENICE.

As Presented by the Shakespeare Club Last Friday Evening.

The presentation of Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice," by home talent, at the opera house, last Friday evening was a huge success in every way. It was expected that this play would prove too heavy for amateurs, most of whom had never taken part in a dramatic performance of any kind before, and the audience was agreeably disappointed in the play.

The costumes were handsome and appropriate, each character was well cast, and the play passed off without a single hitch of any description, which latter was due largely to the efforts of W. L. Wilder of Grand Forks, who acted as stage manager.

Shylock, the leading character in the play, was portrayed by John Crawford in a manner which would have done credit to a professional, and showed that he has a good dent of talent in that line. As Mr. Crawford never saw the play produced before, the conception of the character was purely his own, and therefore all the more meritorious. Miss Ida Hancock was a charming Portin and her interpretation of the learned doctor in the last act was indeed splendid. Miss Ida Johnson, who sustained the character of Nerissa in a graceful manner has a good voice, and spoke her lines very distinctly.

R. W. Hitchcock did the part of Antonio, the merchant, and Fred Ellis that of Bassanio in a creditable manner. R. S. Knudson as Gratiano and B. A. Strawbridge as Lorenzo did some good work giving a brilliancy to the play with their gorgeous costumes.

To Charles March was given the humorous character of Lancelot, and it is needless to say he did ample justice to it. Miss Minnie Tisdel as Jessica, Will Marsh as Salanio, S. F. Murray as Salarino, W. L. Vannett as Gobbo, Will Munch as Balthazzar, and J. Montague as Leonardo performed their parts exceedingly well. Geo. F. Stone made an imposing Duke of Venice, and the trial scene in the last act was grand.

Take it all in all, it was a very creditable performance, and demonstrated that Crookston has got plenty of good material for a dramatic club. The receipts were $125.

Hood's Cures

In saying that Hood's Sarsaparilla cures, its proprietors make no idle or extravagant claim. The advertising of Hood's Sarsaparilla is always within the bounds of reason, because it is true it always appeals to the sober, common sense of thinking people, and it is always fully substantiated by indorsements, which in the financial world would be accepted without a moment's hesitation.

The Superlative

Of Hood's Sarsaparilla is due to the tremendous amount of brain work and constant care used in its preparation. Try one bottle and you will be convinced of its superiority. It purifies the blood which, the source of health, cures dyspepsia, overcomes sick headaches and biliousness. It is just the medicine for you.

Hood's Pills are purely vegetable, carefully prepared from the best ingredients.

Mr. Ned Hindley, a prominent farmer and stockman of Washington county, Neb., says: "After trying your Heller's Barb Wire Liniment, I am satisfied that it is the best thing on the market. I have seen horses cut so badly by wire that they were thought to be worthless, cured in cured in three weeks. I would not be without it, and can sincerely recommend it to all farmers and stockraisers." F. L. Durand sells and guarantees it.

17th of MAY.

A Few Words Concerning This Day and What it Commemorates.

It has for years been the custom of the immigrants and their descendants in this country to celebrate certain days which for one reason or another is full of sweet memory to that special nation. The sons of Norway have selected the 17th of May, other nations other days. I will herewith try to set forth for the American readers of lessons for the Norwegian celebration of the 17th of May, in connection with some apology for this celebration.

The breeze of liberal thought which in the latter part of the last century swept over almost all of the civilized countries, also touched the rugged shores of the country of the ancient Vikings. Norway had for 400 years been a neglected and tyrannized province under the Oldenburg rulers of Denmark. When this country took part in the settlement of the chaotic affairs that the Napoleonic wars had left Europe in, it concluded by the treaty at Kiel to sell Norway to Sweden. When the news of this was brought to the knowledge of the Norwegian people they rubsed a loud protest against it and went on a war with Sweden which brought that country to the conclusion that the Norwegian nation was not on any terms for sale. The 17th of May, 1814, the constitution of Norway was then adopted by their first legislative assembly, which for about two weeks met in a little country town, Eidsvold, in the interior of the country. This constitution was with some necessary alterations again agreed to on the 4th of November the same year, when Norway and Sweden united on equal terms under one king as brother nations, which union since that time, with blessings for both countries, has lasted to to this day. The constitution of Norway, which was adopted the May named, may in many respects be defective, but it showed that the people awoke then from a century of prolonged sleep and realized the sweetness and some of the advantages of liberty. The people arose with energy and commenced the grand progress towards mental freedom and political independence. The destination is not yet reached, but one day the task may be accomplished and the people will have the bright noonday sun shine over them. The gray of the dawn was observed at Eidsvold 89 years ago, and the love of freedom is now gleaming gloriously in the morning sun.

Why should it not be right for the sons of Norsetlund, when they have come and settled over here on the far off land, to remember the day when their forefathers arose and embraced the goddess of liberty? Should it not inspire them to remember the liberal constitution of their adopted country and awake kindred feelings in their hearts? Should it not make them better citizens of a country where liberty should reign supreme? I feel with confidence that so is the result. The celebration of such days is a revival of the spirit of liberty.

EUCLID, May 16, 1894.

Wheat seeding about over with.

Seed barley is very scarce, but about the usual average will go into either barley or oats.

H. C. Stuhr took in Crookston and "Monte Cristo" Tuesday evening.

Mr. Kelsey, of Crookston, was taking in the sights of Euclid on Monday.

Chas. Vue intends running a meat wagon through Euclid this summer.

George Messick, an old time Euclidite, was shaking hands with friends here on Friday and Saturday last. He is doing a large commission business at Duluth, and his pile is growing much faster than George is himself. We wish you success, George.

Miss Fannie Walker, of Grand Forks, and Miss Rose Kennedy, of Crookston, have been doing a flourishing business here the past week in the dressmaking line.

H. C. Misner has sold his trotting mare, Daisy. He has had her long enough to know that there is speed in her, but being too slow himself to get what there really was in her, in the way of speed, before the people, he finally yielded to the entreaty of friends and consented to the sale. No names are to be used, but there is no doubt but the Northwest will be treated very soon with a new record-breaker.

Dr. McGillan and wife and Mr. and Mrs. B. S. Chaplin, of Warren, have been visiting friends here the past few days.

Miss Lillie Losey has been visiting at Argyle the past few days.

Mr. Fairweather is not busy these times between the Euclid and Argyle farms. He says Euclid is to the front this year.

Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Misner and son Harvey, Mrs. Wells Misner, son and two little daughters, Dr. and Mrs. J. S. Chaplin and little daughter, Clare, start Wednesday night for Ada to visit Mr. Misner's father, Mr. Wells Misner and family to remain there permanently, the latter will visit at their old home for two or three weeks.

McGuire for County Auditor

In an interview with P. J. McGuire this week that gentleman said: "I noticed that the JOURNAL mentioned my name in connection with the candidacy for State Auditor last week, saying that I would no doubt accept if tendered the nomination. You were partly right in that, as I would accept a nomination should it be the unanimous wish of the party, but I would not think of it unless I can have the harmonious support of the republicans in Polk county. I esteem the interests of the party of greater value than the honor of any single individual in it, and harmony is the great desideratum in the coming campaign. If by any chance will contribute to that end, I am willing to allow the use of my name; but if it should be cause of strife or wrangling in the party, I am most emphatically opposed to having anything to do with it."

Succeeded at Last.

Last week an account appeared in the St. Paul and Minneapolis dailies of what was supposed to have been a case of accidental asphixiation, but which, in the light of subsequent events seems to have been an attempt to commit suicide. The story goes that Peter Siebel, a carpenter of Ashland, put up at the Pauly house in Minneapolis one night and in the morning it was discovered that his room was full of gas and he was nearly dead from asphixiation. He was revived and shortly afterward left for his home in Ashland, Wis., and now comes the news that he shot himself through the heart soon after his arrival. Domestic troubles is given as the cause. Peter Seibel was for a time a resident of this city coming here with Peter Heyth. He worked for Joseph Neizer in the carpenter business for awhile, afterward going into business for himself. He went with Moser & Moeckel to Ashland when they went, and has been a resident of that city ever since.

Count of Monte Cristo.

A large audience greeted Jos. O'Neil and his company at the opera house Tuesday. And those present saw a clean cut drama produced in first class style by a good company. No low guys are introduced in "The Count of Monte Cristo," As is so often the case with the production of dramas now-a-days. As Edmund Dantes, O'Neil does not appear to advantage and one would get the impression that he was overestimated but as the Count of Monte Cristo he is superb, and gives to the character all the dignity the author could desire. In the third and fourth act his talents are given full scope, and it is then that his ability is displayed, and one can see what he is capable of. His support is good, the costumes and the scenery effective, the throwing of the body of the supposed dead monk into the sea, and Hotel de Morcerf being particularly striking.

Notice to Contractors.

Sealed proposals will be received at the office of the City Clerk in the City of Crookston, Minnesota, until 12 o'clock Monday the 24th day of May A. D. 1894, for the building of sidewalks on the Stephenson Addition bridge, Crookston, Minn.

Forms of proposals, copies of specifications, and instructions to contractors may be obtained of the City Engineer.

The City Council reserves the right to reject any or all bids.

City Engineer.

WM. A. LANCTOT,
City Clerk.

The Great Northern controversy, that has been on since the strike terminated on Wednesday by the acceptances by this company of the terms proposed by the A. R. U. and the boys win the bridge. The wages are to be restored and the strikers are all to be retained.

GOOD TEMPLARS' CONVENTION.

Held at the M. E. Church in this City on Tuesday and Wednesday, May 15th and 16th—Banquet Tuesday Evening.

The Good Templars held their District Lodge and Convention at the M. E. church in Crookston on Tuesday and Wednesday, May 15th and 16th, 1894. Delegates from lodges in Polk, Marshall and Kittson county began to come to the city on Monday. The Grand Chief Templar of Minnesota, Geo. W. York, of Minneapolis, came in Tuesday morning. On Monday was the stirring odor of cakes baking and pies cooking on every Good Templar street and avenue, and on Tuesday the Good Templar cows gave free cream instead of milk. Result—the Crookston lodge gave a reception and banquet on Tuesday evening in honor of their guests. At 9 o'clock, Wednesday morning, a regular session of the District Lodge was held, presided over by Grand Chief York. Lodge delegates were on hand from Argyle, Warren, Fertile, and other towns.

The election of district officers for the ensuing year resulted in the choice of Rev. R. H. Battey, District Chief Templar, Crookston; A. D. Tice, Counselor, Mentor; Miss Maggie McKinde, Vice Templar, Northcote; B. S. Chapen, Secretary, Warren; Carl Hvidsten, Treasurer, Argyle; Rev. L. W. Squier, Past Chief, Crookston; Mrs. Judge Hull, Superintendent of Juvenile Templar, Warren. The above officers constitute the executive committee for one year.

Wednesday afternoon a public session was held and addresses had on the relation of parents to the temperance movement, the public school workers and their temperance, etc., Mr. York conducting a question-box exercise. At 4:15 Mrs. R. H. Battey conducted a children's rally. In the evening Past Chief Rev. L. W. Squier conducted a devotional meeting from 7:30 to 8:30, which was followed by addresses given by Grand Chief York, and by Rev. J. G. Smith, of the Congregational church of Crookston. There were also some drum-corps songs by the children, a recitation by Mrs. Judge Hull, of Warren, and music by the Good Templar male quartette. After the District Lodge went into closed session and nine additional candidates took the district degree. Also in this closing session A. D. Tice, of Mentor, read a paper on "Duties and Qualifications of Lodge Deputies," and Grand Chief York addressed the meeting on "Work." Over thirty brothers and sisters took the degree of Charity during the District Lodge sessions. The membership in Good Templar lodges has increased by about 200 in the district since Jun. 1, 1893, and four strong new lodges have been formed at Warren, Kennedy, Fertile and Mentor, during this period by Rev. R. H. Battey, D. G. C. T. Rev. L. W. Squier was chosen district delegate to the Grand Lodge which meets next month at Minneapolis. All present agreed that the convention was the best ever held in this part of the state. The homes of our city were thrown open to welcome the delegates in a hospitable manner, and the resolutions of gratitude for same passed by the convention were heartfelt and sincere. The district meets twice a year.

Rev. Fr. Lawler, who used to officiate in St. Mary's Catholic church this city, is in the city this week visiting his old parishioners and friends. While in Dr. Farley's office on Wednesday morning he was attached with vertigo and for a few moments it looked as though his last hour on earth had come. He recovered, however, and now seems to enjoy as good health as ever.

Wilson had a unique advertisement in one of the show windows of his Fair Store yesterday. In the window sat a young man playing an accordion, and surrounding him on three sides hung a lot of ladies' underwear, hosiery, etc., and a large placard with the inscription: "Special Sale of Accordion To-day."

OH WOW!

Mayor Knute Knocks the Blind Sights Plum off the Spirit of Liberty and orders "Gen." Wilson to Move on!

Again the spirit of Liberty in the person of "Gen." Wilson, who a few weeks since appeared in this city leading a forlorn hope of 13 Coxeyites, has received a deadly insult and this time it was Mayor Eustis of Minneapolis who hauls the faithful few to move on. The Minneapolis Evening Journal of the 14th says:

"Mayor Eustis's method of dealing with Coxeyism, if adopted by the mayors throughout the country, would dissolve the armies of the Commonwealth in a week.

"General" Wilson listened to the most sensible lecture he ever heard on Saturday and was given, free of charge, an incisive analysis of the real quality of the Coxeyite movement, which ought to make him a wiser man. The mayor did it all in a fatherly way, but he was firm in his insistence that the "general" and his contingent should "move on" and disturb the public peace by incendiary harangues to street crowds. And "General" Wilson and his gang moved on.

The mayor's firmness prevented the squatting of this "army" within the city limits definitely. Every "contingent" should be treated with equal firmness."

Now let the populist press strike the tocsin and sound the hew-gog and howl till everything gets blue over this "terrible" deed, and—let us have peace if we have to fight for it!

W. E. Kelsey started for Fargo last night on receipt of a telegram, that his father was not expected to live.

MINNESOTA REPUBLICANS.

The State Convention Will Be Held in St. Paul July 11.

ST. PAUL, May 11.—The Republican state convention will be held at the auditorium in this city on Wednesday, July 11, beginning at 10 o'clock a. m. The convention will be composed of 1,003 delegates. Rioting.

It was a woman of the world who said: "Kissing is like any other intoxicant; once you cultivate a taste for it there is no such thing as getting enough of it." And it was a young matron with a heart full of love for her firstborn who declared in the very face of the crusty old doctor's learned objections to baby's kisses so long as there were mothers and babies in the world there would be kissing ad libitum.

SENSATIONS OF DROWNING.

The Experiences of a Man Who Barely Escaped a Watery Grave.

When the water rushed into my lungs and stomach, it felt for all the world like a pleurisy pain, which has also given me a fossile in later years, but was over in a second, writes a man who was once nearly drowned. Then my body settled quietly to the bottom, and my arms fell limp by my side. In my half conscious condition I could see all my relatives and acquaintances crowding about me and looking down on me with tearful faces. All the events, it seemed, of my career passed slowly in review, and the good, bad and indifferent acts stood out before me in bold relief. I knew I was drowning and remember thinking, "Why, this is not so hard, after all!"

I wondered where my body would be found and shuddered at the thought that it might never be found. I also wondered whether or not my companion had become alarmed and run away and left me to my fate, or whether he was living here and there to find me. Then I pictured my burial, and the calls that would resound on my coffin when it was lowered into the grave, and my face would be pointed out to other boys by anxious mothers as a warning.

At the next stage I could hear bells softly ringing in the distance, together with little tinklings and chirrups sounding in my ears. Then I began to see pretty pictures. The colors of the rainbow danced before my eyes and intermingled and formed into all sorts of odd shapes. I had no pain and no fear of what was expected to follow. I seemed to be enchanted at the scene before me. Everything was light and calm and moved about without any visible propelling force. It was like looking into a large mirror with every beautiful thing that the most vivid imagination could conjure up revealed thereby.

The last stage that I entered increased the beauty of the surroundings. All discordant noises ceased and were superseded by the softest, sweetest music that could be thought of. Apparently I had been transported to a place flooded with bright, calm sunshine. It was neither too hot nor too cold, but seemed like the clear autumn day. Then I seemed to rise from the ground and float off into space like thistle down. Higher and higher I went until I seemed to look down on the world from a great height, and then came a blank.

The next thing I knew I was lying on the rails with my companion looking down on me with a pale face.—New York Journal.

Chinese Women's Feet.

It is the common understanding among Americans that the women of China have dwarfed feet. From the time that China was opened to explorers books of travel, and especially school textbooks, have been filled with descriptions of the dreadful agony to which Chinese women were subjected to make their feet small. According to these stories and according to the popular belief in America, the feet of Chinese girl babies are put in compresses until their growth has been stunted.

Travelers in China have described the attempt of Chinese women to walk as something very painful. No one would be shocked at Mrs. Yang Ju's pedestrian style. It is true, the interpreter of the legation tells us, that in the southern provinces of China women's feet are dwarfed, but it is only in the southern provinces that small feet are considered a mark of aristocracy.

Mrs. Yang Ju's feet were never put through the dwarfing process. Neither are the feet of her children undergoing that painful operation. The little tots run about the legation halls freely, and on the day when I was there one of them took a long pedpat me through the doorway of the reception room when I was not supposed to be looking in that direction. This little fellow was dressed in the gaudy silks which are an invariable feature of the Chinese custom.—Washington Star.

Strange Captivity.

The springbok of South Africa migrate in vast herds, moving in a compact body and carrying everything before them. If a flock of sheep be in the line of march—as it sometimes happens—it is surrounded, enveloped and becomes, willingly or unwillingly, part of the army. An African hunter tells the strange story of seeing a lion in the midst of the antelopes, forced to join the march. It is supposed that the lion had sprung too far for his prey, that those upon whom he alighted recoiled sufficiently to allow him to reach the ground, and then the pressure from both flanks and the rear prevented him from escaping from his strange captivity.

If the springbok travels in such armies, how can those in the middle and rear find food? In this wise: Those in the front ranks, after they have eaten greedily of the pasture, gradually fall out of the ranks to rest, while the hungry ones in the rear come up, and so the columns are all the while changing.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Adirondack Lakes.

One of the most striking phenomena of the Adirondack region is the carrying power of the human voice in still weather upon the lakes great and small. Persons seldom hear the ordinary conversation of others who are so far out upon the lake as to be indistinguishable, and as a result many Adirondack visitors habitually violate the law touching the slaughter of deer all such offenders are extremely careful not even to whisper a word that might betray their guilt when rowing upon the lakes. —Exchange.

An Inference.

Cora—You want me to describe my friend, Miss Pleiners? She's a charmingly vivacious and witty girl, an excellent conversationist, accomplished, bright and intellectual.

Tom (disappointed)—Oh, pshaw! Why didn't you tell me she was ugly in the first place.—Chicago Record.

FRIENDLY WIT: THE SHAH.

Truxton Beale Is on Very Good Terms With the Persian Monarch.

TRUXTON BEALE.

Truxton Beale, who married Miss Harriet Blaine, youngest daughter of the late James G. Blaine, in Washington recently, was a close friend of his brides brother, the late Walker Blaine, and the two families have been intimate for many years. The bridegroom is the only son of the late General A. F. Beale, who was minister to Austria in President Grant's time. His grandfather was Commodore Truxton of the United States navy. One of his sisters is the wife of John R. McLean of the Cincinnati Enquirer, another is the widow of General William B. Hazen, and a third is Mme. Balmostoff, whose husband is Russian charge d'affaires at Athens.

Mr. Beale inherited a large fortune from his father, among the property being the famous Decatur house, which General Grant sent the horses given him by the sultan of Turkey when the general was making his tour around the world. Mr. Beale and his bride will spend their honeymoon on this ranch rather than take a trip abroad, which would promise no novelty for either of them. Mr. Beale is about 35 years of age. He was graduated in 1874 from the Pennsylvania military academy at Chester and later from the Harvard law school, after which he studied for some time in Paris.

After his return to the United States Mr. Beale practiced law for a time with Wayne MacVeagh in Philadelphia, but gave it up to go to Persia, to which country he was appointed minister during the early part of President Harrison's administration. While in Persia he obtained a concession from the shah enabling American missionaries to hold real estate in that country. He also obtained a remission of the duties on goods sent over by Persian merchants to the Columbian exposition, and in recognition of this latter service the shah presented him with a blooded stallion of a famous stock.

GOING AFTER PEARY.

An Expedition to Bring the Explorer Back to the United States.

Before Lieutenant Peary started on his polar expedition last year he prudently made arrangements for an auxiliary expedition to start north this summer to bring him and his party back. The details of the enterprise were left to the president of the Philadelphia Geographical club, Professor Angelo Heilprin, was, if possible, to take command of the expedition. Professor Heilprin not finding it convenient to go to the north, the direction of the expedition has been assigned to Mr. Henry G. Bryant, the recording secretary of the club, who with Lieutenant Peary's second choice for the leadership. The expedition will be under the auspices of the Geographical club, though Lieutenant Peary himself provided most of the funds. The party will not exceed seven in number.

They will leave New York about June 24 on one of the passenger steamers sailing to St. Johns. At that port the steam whaler Falcon will be in readiness to sail north on or about July 4. The first stop will be made at Godhaven, on Disco island. Continuing north, Melville bay will be crossed as quickly as the condition of the ice permits, and a brief visit will be made to the settlement of primitive Eskimos near Cape York. Then a direct run will be made to the Peary headquarters at Bowdoin bay, in Inglefield gulf, in latitude 77 degrees 43 minutes, which point, it is hoped, will be reached by July 26.

As Lieutenant Peary is not expected to return to his headquarters before the last of August, the ship will be available for purposes of original research and exploration for nearly a month. If the conditions are favorable, the plans of the auxiliary expedition contemplate an examination of the Daffin bay shore of Ellesmere Land with a view to looking for records of the two ill fated Swedish naturalists, Bjorling and Kallstenius, whose schooner was wrecked on the Carey islands in the summer of 1892.

Reputable arctic authorities affirm that a tribe of Eskimos live on Ellesmere Land the members of which have never come in contact with a civilized man. A study of the habits and mode of life of these isolated northern natives would prove most interesting and instructive to the standpoint of an ethnologist. It is probable that Mr. Bryant will attempt to examine and chart the 800 miles of coast line forming the western border of Ellesmere Land, the outlines of which have never yet been ascertained. The ship is due at Bowdoin bay, however, on Sept. 1, and nothing in the way of side expeditions will be allowed to interfere with the main object of the voyage, the safe return of the Peary party to the United States.

THEY SWORE OFF.

When He Resumed His Libits. Then, She Took Up With Her Own.

A prominent young man of this city has been an inveterate cigarette smoker for several years past, and he indulged in the habit to such an extent that it was injuring his health. His has a girl of whom he thinks all the world, and it's a case of vice versa. This young lady has a very good complexion, but has an inordinate love for the use of powder, which habit the young man detests as heartily as she does his cigarette habit. They finally agreed that each would swear off, the one from using powder and the other from smoking cigarettes.

It was hard work for the young man, but every time he hungered for a brad of nicotine his mind pictured the form of his fair one parading down street with her face looking like a pan of dough, and he desisted. This went on for several weeks, and each time wanting how much better the other was looking, but the old craving for the coffin nail came upon the young man once more, and one day last week he broke over. He thought no one would ever find it out, but he was mistaken. Some was carried to the girl, and she prepared to get even.

They were to go to see a certain popular comedian the last night she was here, and the young man called with a cab. The young lady came at the door, her face closely muffled, and in her hand the bonquet that once was his. Arrived at the opera house, they were entering the door when the young man turned to speak to the fair one by his side. Oh, that face! She had smeared it with powder until it had been necessary to cut eyeholes. It was frightful. He stopped. "Are you going in looking like that?"

"Just as you say," was the response. "Well, I say no. I'm not traveling with freaks now. We'll go back home."

And they did. It was late, but there were two vacant seats at the opera house, but the young man has not smoked any cigarettes since.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

The Night For Sleep.

Man, in common with most of the animal creation, has accepted as a fixed suggestion of nature that the approach of night should imply a cessation of effort. If he ignores this principle, his work is done against inherited habit and so far with additional fatigue. It follows, too, that he must use artificial light and sustain its combustion at the cost of his own atmosphere. Naturally, therefore, when he does rest, his relief is not proportioned to his weariness.

As in many cases, however, sensation is not here the most reliable guide to judicious practice. Established custom affords a far truer indication of the method most compatible with healthy existence. The case of the overworked and the invalid lends both a deeper hue color to the argument of the daylight sleeper. In them excessive waste of tissue must be made good, and sleep, always yields to scanty, is at any time useful for this purpose.

For the healthy majority, however, the old custom of early rest and early waking is certain to prove in future, as in the past, conducive to health and active life.—London Lancet.

Charity at a Parsonage.

A man who had been to his uncle's said: "No one can claim that charity is not widely distributed in this city after seeing the contribution boxes that are hung up in conspicuous places in the smaller of the parsonchurches' halls. The particular relative to whom I spoke of it told me that the little boxes were put up every year about the beginning of the autumn and generally were for the benefit of some Hebrew charity.

"They are taken down just before the holidays, and he said that for the past 10 years the one in his shop had averaged between $13 and $15, mostly in 5 and 10 cent pieces, although once the agent had found a $5 piece in it. 'One doesn't look for much charity among persons who have to pawn their goods,' he said, 'but I've seen the very poorest class of men and women look at the box with interest and then drop something into it.'"—New York Mail and Express.

Trees Five Thousand Years Old.

The oldest as well as the most interesting botanical monuments now growing upon the earth are the baobab and sour gourd trees of Africa. This remarkable tree has a short branching trunk which seldom attains a height of over 70 feet, while its diameter is often as great as 30 or 40 feet. Adanson, the naturalist who gave the gigantic its botanical name, calculating from scientific data, says that the age of some of the oldest of these trees is little if any short of 5,000 years. The hollow trunks of these forest giants, which are often of a capacity sufficient to furnish room for 40 or 50 bodies, are used as tombs by the native Africans, who suspend the remains of their departed friends and relatives on hooks fastened upon the interior of such trees for that purpose.—St. Louis Republic.

Space.

If there was no dust haze above us, the sky would be black—that is, we would be looking into the blackness of a limitless space. When in fine, clear weather we have a deep rich blue above us, it is caused by a haze. The particles in the haze of the heavens correspond with those of the ruby in the microscope, and the blue color is caused by the light shining through a depth of fine haze.—London Million.

Too Severe.

Police Magistrate—This case shows unusual depravity. The sentence of the court is that the prisoner be confined in jail for 30 days and fed on bread and water.

Penitent Vagrant—Judge, for heaven's sake, make it just bread.—Chicago Tribune.

The Village Blacksmith.

The village blacksmith is quite an important personage. In 1890 there were 26,000 "smithies" in the United States, who employed therein being 254, 500,000. They afforded work for 50,807 people, who earned $20,796,927 annually, over $800 each. But the hard times have affected the blacksmith shops. There are not so many carriages in use now. People have to walk more. There are not so many horses to be shod. Those that do own jobs of repairing which they used to send to the "smithy." It is hard to earn money now, and people hold on to it when they get it.

Modes of Divination.

If a Scottish maiden desired to summon the image of her future husband, she must, the third verse, seventeenth chapter, of the book of Job after supper, washed the supper dishes and retired to bed without uttering a single word, placing underneath her pillow the Bible, with a pin thrust through the verse she had read. On All Hallow eve various modes of divination were in vogue. Pennant says that the young women determined the figure and size of their husbands by drawing cabbages blindfold, a custom which lingers still in some parts of Scotland. They also threw nuts into the fire, a practice prevailing also in England, as Gay has described: "Hither the nutting lads and lasses throng,
And to each nut I gave a sweetheart's name,
Which in the flame of brightest color blazed,
As lasted the nut, so may the passion be."
Or they took a candle and went alone to a looking glass, eating an apple and combing their hair before it, whereupon the face of the future spouse would be seen in the glass peeping over the fond girl's shoulder.—All the Year Round.

Dwarfing Bamboo Trees.

The dwarfing of bamboo trees is an important branch of the Japanese nursery business. A few weeks after the young bamboo has grown where the trunks measure about 3 inches in circumference and 6 feet in height the bark is removed, piece by piece, from the joint. After five weeks, when the trees have got somewhat stout, the stem is bent and tied in.

After three months, when the side shoots have grown enough, they are all cut off five or six inches from the main trunk, they are then dug up and potted in small pots. Care should be taken not to use any fertilizer, but plenty of water should be given. Cut off the large shoots every year in May or June, and after three years the twigs and leaves will present admirable yellow and green tints.—Garden and Forest.

THE TALE OF A TAILOR.

The Free Trade Times Have Nearly Cooked His Goose.

I was in Pennsylvania last week and had occasion to visit Germantown. That used to be one of the busiest sections of the country. It is full of factories, which used to be all running full time, and many of them overtime, in 1892. But the fear of free trade played havoc with Germantown, its stores and its wage earners. Thousands of hands have been idle or working only on part time, and many of them have not had a dollar to spend in a retail store for months, being dependent upon relief societies and soup house organizations for their very existence.

While in Germantown I met a friend and asked him how things were. He used to have a fine position in a factory, and I was astonished to hear him say:

"Times have been very bad with me. I lost my job at the factory because it closed down, and I have been trying to keep up the payments on our nice house for my wife and children by working as a bill collector. There has been plenty of business in that line, but it is hard work to make shoe leather because the people have no money to pay their bills."

"I am indeed sorry to hear this," was my reply, "but is there no chances of your factory reopening?"

"I don't like to think when that will be," said my friend, the new bill collector. "I would rather think of the troubles of other people than my own."

"Are the people here in distress and trouble with all these factories, emblems of industry, around us?" I asked.

"Yes," he said, "they are emblems of idleness now. I have just left a sad case. Let me tell you about it."

"Certainly," I said. "Try a good domestic cigar." He lighted up and began:

"A few years ago a humble tailor came to Germantown. He had a few hundred dollars saved up and rented a room in the mill district where he could do work and take odd jobs of repairing. He had an industrious wife, who assisted him, and they got along nicely, adding to their savings.

"Finally he had his window enlarged and bought a few portions of pieces of cloth at a time, with the necessary trimmings, and paid cash for his purchases. He did well and was able to buy a whole piece of cloth from the manufacturer, and as his custom increased he bought several pieces at the same time. His trade was among the mill hands; he gave them good satisfaction and had quite a nice little business, becoming more and more prosperous every year and always paying promptly for all his purchases.

"After the panic of last summer he became somewhat slow in his payments, to such an extent that the cloth house has at last sent me to collect their bill and to seek information as to the cause of his failing behind.

"He explained that some of the mill operators in the district in which he was located were his customers. They had ordered suits of clothes to be made the mills had shut down; they were thrown out of employment and were unable to take the clothes that they had ordered. They asked him to carry the garments for them until the mills started up and their circumstances became brighter.

"The cloth and trimmings that he had purchased were lying in his store in the shape of suits of clothes that had been made up for bona fide orders; his customers had been unable to take the clothes; he was without payment for them. Therefore he was cramped for means to meet his obligations to the cloth house. That is about the whole story in a few words, and it illustrates the condition of many thousands of others similarly situated, many of whom I am sure are daily forced into contact with through my new business as a bill collector."

"It is a hard case indeed," I said. "It shows how the loss of work affects the manufacturer in the round of trade, a condition that will be remedied only of better if the Wilson bill becomes a law and allows large foreign importations to come into our markets. Our manufacturers must make less goods and our men must work less. Free trade must always cook the tailor's goose."

New York, April 20.

Before and After Election.

We have had enough experience in laborers flocking here to take the employment of our own workingmen.—New York Herald, Aug. 3, 1860.

This was The Herald's opinion before the last presidential election, when fishing for votes. But during the last 18 months The Herald has not done a thing to drive the employment of our own workingmen." It advocates larger importations of foreign goods, which only help "to take the employment of our own workingmen." It advocates free ships to take labor from the workers in our shipyards, anything that will injure the United States and take from it "the employment of our own workingmen."

The Fruits of Protection.

"When Freedom from her mountain height
Unfurled her banner to the air,"
She vowed to keep Home's hearthstone bright
And to protect the loved ones there.

"Beneath these starry folds," she cried,
"No oppressed of all the world shall meet,
And rising and poor shall side by side,
Learn Liberty's allegiance sweet."

Lo! at her word across the land
The forger fires inflamed the sights,
And Capital, with kindly hand,
Led eager Labor to the fights.

Each infant industry built up
Its home and homes for all whose skill
And faith and toil filled Plenty's cup
And bade the Nation drink at will.

Peace smiled above the smiling scene,
Contentment wreathed the matron's face,
While boys and girls of ninety-nine
In virtuous knowledge grew apace,

Freedom, with heart and rote and voice
For any peasant to the throne,
And unborn millions this thy choice
Shall yet rise up to bless!

THE NEW CRUSADERS

"ON TO WASHINGTON" THE CRY OF THOUSANDS OF MARCHING MEN.

They Are Called "Cranyites," Though Coxey Neither Originated the Idea Nor Was First In the Field on a March to the Nation's Capital.

No matter what you may think of the motive, or the reasoning, or the probability of ultimate accomplishment through the new crusade of the so called Coxeyites, you must admit that the movement is an important one, and that something is out of kilter in this broad republic. If there wasn't, there would be no such thing as Coxeyism. It wouldn't be possible. If employment at good wages offered itself in all parts of the country, men could not be found to march half way or all the way across the continent in hopes of setting things to rights. It doesn't help matters to say that many of the crusaders are tramps, and it wouldn't affect the proposition if they were all tramps, unless indeed it made it all the stronger.

COXEY ON THE CAPITOL STEPS.

If everything were O. K. in the United States, there wouldn't be tramps here.

Of course there might be an occasional "old struggler," as our fathers and grandfathers used to call the occasional tramp of antebellum days, but no vast army of "spinks" and "hoboes" such as now exists would be possible if there were no cause for it. I do not propose here and now to discuss the nature or the origin of the present trouble, for history is long and newspaper columns are short. I may be pardoned, however, I trust, if I call the reader's attention to the true starting point of the "On to Washington" movement. It is scarcely eight years ago that Joseph R. Buchanan, now a writer of sometimes true and sometimes false civilities, was engaged in making addresses on the labor question in California. Speaking in San Francisco one night, he dilated upon the need of legislation such as he understood the effort of the righting of some of the workingmen's wrongs. A man in the audience who agreed with the speaker cried out:

GENERAL FRYE.

"That's all true, but what shall we do now?"

In answering this totally unexpected question Mr. Buchanan made use of the term "On to Washington." Governor Bowers, now Controller, was in the crowd. The phrase and the answer made a deep impression upon him and finally bore fruit in his joining the fortunes with the unfortunate Coxey in his march to the City of Magnificent Distances.

GENERAL RANDALL.

It was the good or bad fortune of Coxey Browne and Quarryman Coxey to number among his acquaintances a lively young newspaper man in Massillon, who saw that the starting of a crusade of the unemployed from that town in the direction of Washington meant plenty of space for him in the columns of the larger journals of the big cities. It was this young man's special dispatches and articles that finally made the leading ideas of the present crusade has doubtless made it immortal.

Notwithstanding this and the fact that he robbed Washington first, Coxey's movement capitalward was antedated several days by that of General Lewis Frye, himself a workingman, who started with a petition from California. Frye has been an organizer of labor unions "off and on" for several years, and, it was this side show that would soon, has had to show far more shorter distance between Massillon and Washington. Frye's army is larger than Coxey's, and Frye has labored under the disadvantage of having no money of his own, but he was not weighted down with a Field Marshal Browne and his extraordinary theories as to reincarnation.

Some of the "armies" from the Pacific coast and the Rocky mountain region, aside from Frye's, are in command of General Cantwell, who started from Tacoma with 1,000 men; General Sheppard, who began his march from Kent, Wash., with 700; General Wayne —his real name is Shrigley—from Troutdale, Or., with 500; Captain Grayson, hailing from Colorado, with 120; General Nolan, also from Colorado, with 75; General Carter, from Salt Lake City, with 550; General Barker, from California, assisted by Mrs. Commander Smith, with 340; Commander Duff, with 83, and General Hogan, from Montana, with 350. The experiences of the last named have been quite as interesting as any of his brother leaders, especially his arrest when asking for a train at St. Paul to carry him east. It was confidently predicted in many quarters that the men of each contingent would cause a deal of trouble to the authorities as they marched, but these predictions have so farfailed to come true in the main, the crusaders con ducting themselves as a rule in quite an orderly fashion as the inhabitants of towns through which they have passed. It is quite possible that this good conduct has been partly due to the fact that in most places where food and often of clothing have) been freely given, though not always through sympathy, but rather for the avowed purpose of hastening forward the "industrial" march. That there has been and is a very considerable amount of moral support of the movement is, however, true, and it has nowhere been more plainly manifested than in Denver, where the women have organized a "relief corps," and in Chicago, where General Randall organized his forces of over

GENERAL KELLY.

1,000, with Mrs. Nile C. Smith, his daughter, acting as his Jeanne d'Arc of the army. Mrs. Smith is comparatively young and, as her picture shows, of rather aggressive personality. It will be remembered that Mr. Coxey's daughter desired to ride in advance of his "commonwealers," and with his approval, as Mrs. Smith leads General Randall's, but Mrs. Coxey No. 1 objected, and the young lady was not in evidence as an "industrian" till she "commonweal" reached Washington, when she ran away from her mother and headed the May day parade along Pennsylvania avenue. General Randall is a physician by profession, is 54 years of age and was a Greenback man in 1870. A year afterward he organized the Sovereigns of Industry, but he went on the stump for Blaine in 1880. At one time he published a paper in Greenback paper in New York, and in 1886 he was associate editor of the Chicago Express. He is a master workman in the Knights of Labor.

GENERAL HOGAN.

General Charles F. Kelly, not to be confounded here, whose army is perhaps as numerous as any in the field, is a strict disciplinarian and has had ample opportunity to show his powers, for major has more than once broken out in the ranks of his "industrians." He is a young man—only 32—by occupation, and has been more successful than most of the other leaders in securing railroad transportation for his men, does not believe thoroughly in to foreigners, to irrigate it and to sell it to American citizens. It would not cost over $3,000,000 or $4,000,000."

General M. D. Fitzgerald, who dislikes with Morrison I. Swift the credit of organizing and commanding the New England contingent, is a native of Kilkenny, Ireland, 36 years old and a brilliant talker. Swift is also a young man, and was born in Ravenna, O., is a grandson of William Colegan, has taken special courses of study in philosophy, ethics and political economy at Johns Hopkins university and has studied the same line of subjects abroad.

General Christopher Columbus Jones, the aged leader of the Philadelphia contingent that joined Coxey's "army" just before it reached Washington, is another man of note in the crusade, and there is a host of lesser lights, all seeming bent on terminating General Meyer, Commander Benamont, both of western men, Captains Murray and Sweetland of Connecticut and Commander Smith from New York and New Jersey that are not so well known.

Altogether the most singular incident connected with the movement has been the start for Washington on May 3, from Harrodsburg, Ky., of C. Peter Springer and a few friends in a balloon. Springer is the man who sent a $100 bill to Miss Pollard during the trial of her suit against Breckinridge, and he took with him in his airship $1,000 which he said he proposed to give to Coxey.

THE Tribune congratulates its readers upon having secured Mary Yellin Lease to speak in the opera house some day in the near future. That's a good idea. That party ought to secure a good speaker in Polk county even though it has to import one—and a woman at that.

IT is said that the Hon. Wm. Westerman, of St. Cloud, has a long pull for state treasurer. The story goes that he will combine with W. W. Rich, to knock out Rob Dunn, as two candidates on the state ticket can hardly be taken from one district. Rich is a candidate for auditor from the southern part of the state and is said to have a long pull.

The republican state central committee met on Thursday of last week and decided on July 11th, as the day for the republican state convention and the auditorium in St. Paul as the place. The convention will comprise 1017 members. Polk county will be entitled to 12 delegates. The date fixed was a compromise between those who wanted a June convention and those who wanted it in September.

THE bills providing for appropriating money to fight the Russian thistle have all been reported back adversely. That congress makes a mistake in not paying sufficient attention to this important matter is quite obvious to all who fully understand the ravages and the nature of the Russian thistle. It was hoped that a small appropriation could have been made by way of an experiment if nothing more, but what do the democrats care what becomes of the country? They don't expect to inherit it any more when Cleveland's time expires.

THE St. Hilaire Spectator says that the pops have three living candidates for congressman in Polk county, viz: A. R. Holston, E. E. Lommen and Andrew Stenerson, and urges the party to take its strongest man and a Polk county man. We suggest A. R. Holston as his experience with C. P. DeMers seems to justify us in the idea that he would be the strongest man to make the race—that experience demonstrated that he ain't worth a cent to Mr. DeMers and he is strong to make the run on the theory that every man is good for something.

THE Times made a wonderful (?) discovery last week. Says that Governor Nelson came up on a politicel mission the week and took John Cromb home with him on Friday evening, to make a congressman of him. The fact is that the governor came up to see for himself in relation to the state ditches that are being made. He spent all day Thursday inspecting the one near Stephen, returned to Bemidji Thursday evening, where he stayed all night and next day inspected the one at that point, and looked into the matter complained of at that point last spring. John Cromb happened to take the train for St. Paul on Thursday evening, and that is all there is to the Times' wonderful discovery.

Elsewhere in this issue it will be seen that P. J. McGuire gives a partial consent to the use of his name as a candidate for state auditor. Mr. McGuire has been a resident of Minnesota from boyhood, has a thorough education and is eminently fitted in every way to discharge the duties of the office should he be nominated and elected state auditor. He came to Crookston in 1879 and engaged in the sale of agricultural implements, building up a big trade, and a reputation for square dealing. Upon the death of of auditor John Christianson in the fall of 1891, he was appointed to fill the unexpired term. At the following election he was elected auditor which position he filled with credit to himself and the county until 1893. In 1890 he was the nominee for state auditor. So popular was he in Polk county that at one election he received 1700 majority, and the last time he ran there was no opposition at all. He was beaten for state auditor by Iberman, who was one of the most popular men in the state at that time and who was endorsed by the independent party, which party had one of the most popular men among the farmers at its head. McGuire's candidacy would do more for the republican party in the northern part of the state than anything that could be done and he is really deserving of consideration from the manner in which he was beaten the other time—being the only candidate upon the republican ticket who was defeated. Should he be nominated he would lend strength to the ticket; and should he be elected he would be a credit to the state.

WORK OF THE DIVISIONISTS.

East Grand Forks Courier:—The sum of $1,100 was raised for the purpose of bringing to this city the Red River Daleu. Citizens of East Grand Forks contributed one-fifth of the amount. McIntosh one-third and Red Lake Falls the balance. The presumption is that the Daleu, being printed and published in the Norwegian language, will easily influence the Scandinavian vote, which in this section of country predominates. It is now understood that the divisionists will also publish a French paper in the French settlement, thus being in a position to attack the enemy in all quarters and upon all sides, and in all languages.

The above is the only one of the many schemes which the county seat boomers of East Grand Forks, Red Lake Falls and McIntosh are promulgating in order to further their county division schemes, and fasten upon the taxpayers of the county four times the expense of the present county government, and all for the purpose of enhancing the value of the real estate in these villages by the location of a county seat in their midst.

Here we find them buying a newspaper at the county seat to work for their iniquitous schemes, and that the said paper may have more influence with the people who read it, it is moved to one of the proposed county seats, so that it may more consistently advocate county division. This move on their own statement, has cost the divisionists $1,100, and will undoubtedly cost them as much more before the campaign is over. Who is furnishing this money? Is it the farmers, in whose benefit the move is said to be? Well, hardly. We might guess from the business men of the proposed county seats and the prospective office-holders of the proposed new counties. The JOURNAL is also informed that the city and village treasuries of the proposed county seats are to be looted to help carry the schemes through, and that several thousand dollars will be expended, if thought necessary. Now, we would like to know if there is any farmer who is simple-minded enough to believe that these schemers are putting up their good money in these hard times for his benefit? The farmer is the one who is being played for a sucker. Should the schemers carry, the property at the county seats would for a while time at least, be considerably enhanced in value, and while farmers would therefore be able to stand additional taxes they would have to pay. But where does the farmer come in? Is his property increased any in value? Not the slightest.

The boomers are working every card they can. In their petitions to the governor and secretary of state they have named their first set of county officers. These men—who are selected with a view to the amount of strength they can get among the farmers—are talking county division at every opportunity. Each of these men have probably got a few friends who are anxious for an office, should get an office and they are putting in a word for the cause wherever they can. On the opposition of the schemes are very cunningly hinted that the background as much as possible, and allowing these farmers to advocate the propositions among their brethren.

A little investigation will convince anyone that the divisionists are making a strong fight, and were it not for the absurdity of their propositions, they would surely win. But if the matter is only gotten before the people in its proper light, at least three-fourths of the farmers in the county will be opposed to division.

REAL ESTATE TAXES.

On or before June 1st, taxes on real estate must be paid or go delinquent. It has always seemed strange to us that in a farming county like Minnesota the taxes should be made payable at a time of the year when farmers as a rule, have the least money. While we have been worrying the life out of ourselves at every session of the legislature trying to devise ways and means to furnish relief for the agricultural interests of the state, this very important matter has been struggely to have been overlooked entirely. The time should be changed so as to make personal taxes delinquent December 1st, of real estate and real estate taxes January 1st. This is the case in many states where agriculture is the chief industry, and is found to be far more satisfactory to the average taxpayer and very much better for the interests of the state. This matter should be attended to at next session.

The JOURNAL learns that a committee of citizens will solicit a subscription for the purpose of having the band join in Memorial exercises. Heretofore the Post has generally attended to this matter, sometimes paying the expense out of own treasury but this year it was decided to let the citizens arrange for this matter if they cared enough for the event to do so. If it is worth while for the city to have a band they should improve such opportunities to support it and we trust that they will do so in this case.

The Alexandria Post-News says: "The Lake Review, is five years old. Editor Brandon has been in charge of its destinies for a year and has made it in every way a creditable publication. It seems to be well supported and certainly should be."

That's all right except that the name of the paper is the Battle Lake Review, and its editor's name is Bronson Strand and that he established the paper and has "been in charge of its destinies" ever since it had any destinies, ten years ago. With these few exceptions the article from the Post-News is all correct.

DUNN'S BUDGET.

Interesting News and Gossip from the National Capital.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—The democrats gave an exhibition the other day of how little interested they are in the silver question. They had an opportunity to do something practicable by compelling England to agree to a method of bimetallism or surrendering our markets. But it is the object of the democratic tariff smashers to open our markets to Great Britain; that is the reason British money was furnished for the democratic campaign. The republicans all voted for the proposed amendment, as it is the most practical proposition that could be made at the present time to compel England to recognize silver as money. We might force her by shutting our markets but we could not by going upon a silver basis.

By the way there is every indication that the people of England would be glad to have a good excuse for recognizing silver. The present governing policy, or should adopt free coinage, England as the creditor nation would never recognize silver as money metal. She must be coerced in every manner and like the republicans of the senate I should prefer to see it done by shutting out English goods; by using some force.

* * *

As a matter of fact the feeling toward silver has taken a different turn. There are very few men who study the question, who do not believe that bimetallism is dearer than free coinage, even many silver men. There have been some very freely voiced for the white metal, and it has not been for effect either. After the democratic majority had voted down the amendment the republicans had voted down the democratic proposition to coerce England to recognize silver I was talking with Senator Washburn, who keeps pretty close watch of the senate and he stated that there was never such a feeling in the country among business men and among men of the old world that the time was ripe to secure the restoration of silver among all commercial nations as now exist. "I am a bimetallist," said the Minnesota Senator, but have always recognized the fact that the United States alone of all the great nations could not sustain silver.

THE FOREIGN POOL.

FRANCE JOINS ENGLAND IN A TARIFF LOBBY AT WASHINGTON.

A French Manufacturers' Committee For the Repeal of the McKinley Bill—Wilson Hopes That "Our Laborer Will "Benefit Both of Them."

The influence of the Colsden club of London has for many years been a potent factor in American national legislation, materially aiding the Democratic party in its free trade campaign. Backed by the wealth of English manufacturers, it has endeavored to secure tariff legislation more favorable to Great Britain. But since the meeting of this congress last August a new organization has come into being across the Atlantic. This new Democratic ally bids fair to outstrip at least in boldness the efforts of the Colsden club to influence and control tariff legislation in the United States.

Members of congress have received at the postoffice of the house a pamphlet containing 37 pages of printed matter. On the fly leaf is printed in large type these words:

France and the United States
French Committee
For the repeal of the McKinley bill,
15 Document published by the French Committee, Paris.
Comite Francais,
Rue Rue D'Uzes,
1894.

On page 35 of this document there is printed a letter from M. Henry Petit, the president of this French committee for the repeal of the McKinley bill. This letter is addressed to the chamber of commerce and syndical chambers of France. In it M. Petit said:

I have the honor to inform you that the French committee for furthering the abolition of the McKinley bill has completed Nov. 16 in the sitting held at the Grand hotel.

This committee, organized to old the Democratic party to abolish the McKinley bill, is intended to be a permanent organization, and as appears from M. Petit's letter is constituted as follows:

President, M. Henry Petit, manufacturer in the firm of Gros, Roman & Co.

Vice president, M. Louis Tabourier, manufacturer.

Delegate in France and in the United States, M. Leon Chotteau, barrister, publicist, member of the Colsden club, London.

Treasurer, Messrs. Gros, Roman & Co., manufacturers.

Assistant treasurer, M. Prosper Staehle, cashier of the firm of Gros, Roman & Co.

Secretary, M. Leon Guillemet, manufacturer.

Here we see arrayed against the American policy of protection and reciprocity not alone the wealth and influence of the Colsden club of London, but also the organized wealth and power of the French bankers and manufacturers, manufacturers of the one article being offcers in the other, the two co-operating in their efforts to break down the barriers which have hitherto protected the American producer and restricted the privilege of those foreigners to sell their products in our market.

These French manufacturers are powerfully represented in Washington, their president, M. Petit, saying that:

Our delegate, M. Leon Chotteau, will attend the legislative debates, give us an account of the proceedings and endeavor to obtain the modifications which we have imparted to him incorporated in the law.

What do our Democratic friends who claim to be and who are good American citizens think of this proposition? What information ought to arouse the American people to a sense of the danger that threatens their industrial independence and their markets by the adoption of the Wilson-Gorman tariff amendment to the bill. Who will ever know the extent to which the wishes and desires of these French and English manufacturers have been incorporated in this bill, and at the suggestion or request of their representative, M. Leon Chotteau, who is not their delegate only, and who does not come to represent this French committee, but is also the agent of the British trade Colsden club of London, representing that organization as well, and who is in Washington with instructions as to what the wishes and desires of these foreign manufacturers are, and to have the same incorporated in the bill which is now being considered.

The pamphlet of that pamphlet is printed a "Letter From Leon Chotteau to Hon. William L. Wilson, Chairman of Ways and Means, House of Representatives," dated June 4, Sept. 4, 1893.

In this letter the author recites the interest these foreign manufacturers have in the proposed change in our tariff laws and instructs Mr. Wilson as to his duty in the premises. In it also are many facts tending to show the influences influences at work here and the effect upon the export trade to the United States of the principal European countries. Says the Panama:

In 1890 $460,000,000 worth of goods and $381,000,000 in 1892. The result is a decrease of $85,000,000, lost by the foreign manufacturers.

If the foreign exporter lost $68,000,000 on account of the McKinley bill, the American producer has gained more than that sum in consequence of that measure.

That sum shows the influence exerted by the McKinley bill on this side of the Atlantic.

This is undoubtedly true, but it shows also the influence exerted by the McKinley bill on this side of the Atlantic which was to increase the consumption of American products to the amount of $85,000,000:

Of these $86,000,000, 36 were wrested from England, 15 from Germany, 6½ from France, 2 from the Netherlands, 1 from Switzerland and 1 from Austria-Hungary.

Wilson goes on to say:

These Belgium, which gains $600,000 in its exports with you in 1892 over 1893, is compelled to buy from you for spread of $21,000,000.

As for France, she loses on both sides, since her sales are $8,000,000 in excess, while her purchases amount to $48,000,000 in excess.

If this is so, the gain to the United States must have been on both sides, and we can understand why France is one of the financiers in the panama legislation, and to this letter we find on page 27 of the pamphlet that the hon-

LODGE IS A CONVERT.

HIS STRONG SPEECH DELIGHTED SILVER MEN.

Senator Platt Indorses His Views—Latest About Cosyegan—A Glance Over the Political Field — Jerry Simpson's Many Friends—Gossip From the Capital.

WASHINGTON, May 17.—[Special.]—"I have taken this Coxey business as a sort of test case," said Congressman Livingston, "in judging how far the people would go and how much foolishness they would stand. Here is a law, and a perfectly reasonable one, that the front of this capitol shall be reserved for specific uses and no processions or mass meetings allowed there. These men came with expressed intent to violate the law and did violate it so far as they could, and the law must be enforced, no matter what it costs. The thing to notice is how many people there are in the country who will take up this cry that Coxey and Browne have been oppressed." This was directed to Colonel Hedstrom, who had made his usual address to a group of members in the house just after adjournment. There was and is a general agreement that the law should be enforced, but it is easy to see that each member's views of Coxeyism are more or less influenced by his politics.

Symptoms of Disease.

All agree, however, that the various movements are symptoms of a deep seated disease. As each day brings its quota of news as to the troubles, the other industrials are having, the officials of this city as well as the railroad men smile significantly and say that these troubles and hindrances will steadily increase as the democratic party comes to Washington. Every day we are assured that no more of them can get here unless they come individually, as other means of transportation will not transport them at less than regular rates, communities will not feed them, and local officials will hinder them in every lawful way. So far these statements seem to be true and the result very likely to be as predicted.

If the weather had been made to order, it could not have better suited the various social and official arrangements for mid-day May. Death, however, has continued his work and added one more to the already very long roll of changes in the Fifty-third congress. Even before the death of Representative Outhwaite the changes in membership had been greater in this house than in any previous one, and only a little over one-half of the 356 has yet passed.

Senator Lodge on Silver.

The house has had its fun with the natural appropriation bill and is about finished with that sort of business in which each latitude of discussion is allowed, and the next great excitement, the tariff debate, will be over the new silver bill. As to Mr. Hatch's bill for holding up agriculture by not buying it, they do not excite so much interest as was expected. It would seem that there is no end to surprises and new moves on the silver question, and Senator Lodge has furnished the latest. He has come out squarely with the avowal of statements in regard to the relations of foreign trade and ner declining prices of farm products which were thought to be utterly wild when uttered by Mr. Stewart and Mr. Wolcott a few months ago. His speech in support of his proposed amendment to the tariff bill is the greatest comfort to the silverites they have received for many a day, and they say that millions of copies of Lodge's seldom used say figures less than millions—will be scattered by the democrats. The Lodge amendment provided that on all goods imported from British countries a double tariff should be collected and 36 per cent on goods admitted free from other countries until Great Britain should consent to join with us in bimetallism. Mr. Lodge in supporting this amendment that Mr. Lodge outdemocrated Stewart and made a stronger silver speech than Lafe Pence.

Silver Not Pleased.

The silver men are particularly delighted with these sentences from his address: "I believe that the condition of the world's business and the decline in the general level of prices, accompanied by a corresponding appreciation of the debts of the world, are due to the enormous contraction of money which has been forced upon the world by the legislation which has thrown silver out of use and closed the mints of the world to it. Statistics proved that the gold standard favored the creditor class was a creditor nation. Why does it pay her? Because gold is constantly appreciating, and for $1,000 that England loans she gets back every cent reflecting the interest annually to take back in 10 or 15 or 20 years. Under the legislation which contracts the world's currency, $1,000 when the bond calls for but $1,000. Our agricultural products have been brought very low in the world's market by England's forcing down the prices in gold."

Senator Platt followed, substantially indorsing this view. Our western friends in his high glee over these admissions and tell us that these sentiments will be greeted large and placarded on every barn door and fence corner of every place of public resort between the Mississippi and Pacific on the confession of Massachusetts on the iniquity of demonetization. Some of the more radical prophesy that the Lodge speech will be the death knell of Senator Chas Brenhard's "rum, Mesmerism and rebellion" cry, and that they have been very foolish to have ever accepted it. Certainly looks that way if one may judge from the glee of the radical silverites.

After the silver bill and a few minor matters are disposed of the house will realize very little or nothing to do until the tariff bill comes back from the senate. And already there is much discussion as to what relief will be given on that bill.

Political Matters.

In the present lull in the house the members are attending to their political fences at home with unusual diligence, and the prospects in every state are figured down fine. From all the gulf states—in fact from nearly all the southern states—come assurances that the populace have been weeded, and the Democrats will stand about as usual in the next house. Now all the northeast of the Mississippi a landslide is expected and many generally admitted. It is in the new west that all is chaos. Both sides claim everything, but it is plain that they claim it with mental reservations. In this connection it is melancholy to note that the political career of Jerry Simpson is thought to have rendered his further activity in politics impossible, and already more than one orphanage is figuring for the nomination to succeed him. His sufferings, and they have been very great, have excited much sympathy among his fellow members, for despite the queer reputation with which he entered congress he has gathered friends steadily and has proved himself a genial gentleman.

The Best Medicine.

J. G. WILSON, Contractor and Builder, Sulphur Springs, Texas, thus speaks of Ayer's Pills:

"Ayer's Pills are the best medicine I ever tried; and, in my judgment, no better general remedy could be desired. I have used them in my family and recommended them to my friends and employes for more than five years. To my certain knowledge, many cases of the following complaints have been completely and by the use of Ayer's Pills alone: Third day chills, dumb ague, bilious fever, sick headache, constipation, flux, dyspepsia, constipation, and hard colds. I know that a moderate use of Ayer's Pills, continued for a few days or weeks, as the nature of the complaint required, would be found an absolute cure for the disorders I have named above."

"I have been selling medicine for eight years, and I can safely say that Ayer's Pills give better satisfaction than any other Pill I ever sold."—J. J. PERRY, Spottsylvania C. H., Va.

Every Dose Effective

WORK OF CONGRESS.

Tuesday, May 8.

After some routine business in the senate the tariff bill was taken up and Mr. Hoar made a speech in opposition. He was followed by Mr. Quay, who resumed the speech he has been delivering since April 5.

Mr. Hatch, of Missouri, from the committee on agriculture, reported his anti-option bill to the house. The bill making an appropriation for the purchase of a new site for the government printing office was considered at length by the whole.

Wednesday, May 9.

In the senate speeches on the Coxey resolution were made by Senators Allen of Nebraska and Sherman of Ohio, the former for and the latter against. The resolution went over without action, and the tariff bill was taken up. As executive session the treaty with Hawaii pending ratification of seals was ratified.

The house considered the naval appropriation bill in committee of the whole.

Thursday, May 10.

The Coxey situation occupied the morning hour in the senate, but was laid aside to transact action. When the tariff bill was taken up Mr. Gallinger offered the amendment, conserving the tariff operations between this country and Canada. The resolution went over without action, and the tariff bill was taken up. As executive session the treaty with Hawaii pending ratification of seals was ratified.

The house considered the naval appropriation bill in committee of the whole.

Friday, May 11.

The naval appropriation bill was discussed in committee of the whole in the house.

The principal feature of the senate proceedings was the vote of Republicans for several amendments to the tariff bill. It is said the Republicans will continue to vote for amendments wherever the rates of duty are raised from those in the original bill and where changes have been made from advalorem to specific duties.

Monday, May 14.

The senate spent the day in discussing tariff schedules.

The house considered District of Columbia business, passing a few unimportant measures.

Washed Up For From Home

JANESVILLE, Wis., May 16.—There was a jubilee at Edgerton, in this county, over the return of Supervisor Henry Marsden, who disappeared four weeks ago from Rush Medical college in Chicago. He left school the last week in March and he was sick and was going home. He came to his senses in a small hospital at Savanah, Ills. His name was unknown. He was very weak and emaciated when he reached home.

Destroyed Many Villages.

WASHINGTON, May 10.—Secretary Gresham has received the following cablegram from Mr. Imbrie, at the United States charge at Caracas, Venezuela:

An earthquake on the 28th of April destroyed the cities of Egido and Merida, and several villages. The loss of life is said to be heavy and assistance would be appreciated.

Cheap Locomotive.

Dutchguard has been informed that cabs are going to be fitted with automatic distance counters, and that the fare for the first kilometer is to be 75 cents, and 25 cents for each succeeding kilometer.

"Capital!" he said, tapping his forehead, as if inspired with a happy thought. "Next time I have to go any distance I shall walk the first kilometer and take a cab for the rest of the journey."—Journal de Vienne.

FAVORED THE MEN.

GREAT NORTHERN ARBITRATION COMMITTEE AGAIN ACTS,

Interpreting the Disputed Clause in the Agreement Between Mr. Hill and the Men—Demands of Employes Granted and Old Rate to Be Reinstated Today Proven Guilty of Some Misdemeanor.

ST. PAUL, May 15.—The arbitration committee of St. Paul and Minneapolis business men who were instrumental in settling the strike on the Great Northern held a lengthy meeting yesterday and handed in a report which practically concedes every demand of the men. In relation to the discharge of employes connected with the former strike the committee report says:

"As to article 5, it was agreed between Mr. Hill and Mr. Dehe that all the employes of the company might return to their proper employment without prejudice for having taken part in the strike, except those men who had maliciously injured or destroyed the company's property, or were in the hands of the law; as no other exceptions were made, this committee is of opinion that the men who abandoned their trains between stations, as claimed, however reprehensible such conduct may have been, have a right to be restored to the under the terms of the agreement. The committee's interpretation of the meaning of the term, "Those in the hands of the law," was, and now is, that the men now in the hands of the law, if found guilty, should not be employed by the company in the future, but pending the determination of their cases they should not be excluded from employment by the company because of the charges brought against them.

In connection with this matter, we wish to refer to the mutual agreement and understanding, in a broad sense, between Mr. Dehe, as representing the employes of the Great Northern road, and Mr. Hill for the company, that, as the business of the company warrants, all the old employes of the Great Northern road would return in good faith and give to the company their best efforts in the discharge of their duties. The Great Northern, on the other hand, should not employ any new men so long as there are a sufficient number of their old employes to properly conduct the business of the company.

The report is signed by B. F. Nelson, Richards Gordon, F. G. Winston, T. L. Schurmeier, James T. Wyman, Charles P. Noyes, George R. Finch, D. H. Moon and Frank R. Hubachek.

President Hill of the Great Northern and a committee of the employes were present at the rooms of the jobbers' union during the session of the committee and were called on to explain their construction of the agreement.

A Charge Against Engineer Best.

WEST SUPERIOR, Wis., May 15.—Engineer Best has been notified by United States Marshal Shortall that he was wanted in St. Paul on a charge of obstructing the United States mails. Best is ill at present but says he will go as soon as he is able to answer the charge.

PULLMAN STRIKE.

Two Thousand Employes of the Car Company Quit Work.

CHICAGO, May 12.—Two thousand employes of the Pullman Palace Car company quit work. Those who went out asserted that the entire force of 4,300 people would be on strike before night. Trouble has been brewing for some time, the men demanding the restoration of a 32 1-2 per cent cut in the wages made last year. The officials of the company refused the demand, and asserted that they were running the plant at a loss, for the purpose of giving the men employment.

The Works Closed.

A notice has been posted on the gates leading to the Pullman works declaring that the works were closed and would not resume operations until further notice. The notice was signed by General Manager Middleton, who said: "We told the men that we were not running for profit but to give them work. We now propose to show them that we meant what we said."

Big Hole in a Whaleback.

WEST SUPERIOR, Wis., May 16.—The whaleback steamer D. Thomson, which was injured in the collision with the S. S. Curry in the Soo river, eleven miles below the locks a few days ago, arrived at the ship yards and was at once dry docked. She has a hole in her bow through which an ordinary box car could easily be taken. It is expected that the owners of the Curry will libel the Thomson and also that a suit be brought against the latter vessel.

Harrison Less a for Home.

NEW YORK, May 16.—After spending 10 days in this city, attending to private business which the politicians declared meant working up a presidential boom for 1892, ex-President Harrison left town for his home in Indianapolis during the afternoon. Mr. Harrison spent the morning at his own apartments at the Fifth Avenue hotel. He did not leave that hostelry until it was time to take the train for home.

Caged Express Orders.

BOSTON, May 14.—The police are investigating a series of forgeries on the Wells-Fargo Express company in this city. Since morning over 40 forged money orders for $50 each have been presented at the company's offices for payment. They were sent in for collection by banks in the suburban towns.

Anti-Breckinridge Meeting.

LEXINGTON, Ky., May 16.—The best people of Lexington and Fayette county, including several hundred ladies, turned out to the anti-Breckinridge meeting at the opera house. There were no hoodlums present and the meeting from a standpoint of morality was a tremendous success.

NATIONS AT OUTS.

The Brazilian Government Severs Diplomatic Relations With Portugal.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—Senor Mendonca, Brazilian minister has received the following cablegram from his government:

The president of the republic has cancelled diplomatic relations with Portugal, giving passports to Count Paranay and the personnel of the legation in Brazil, and withdraws the Brazilian legation in Lisbon to withdraw.

Cause of the Intermission.

This interruption of diplomatic relations is the direct result of the naval commanders in Brazil in affording asylum to the Brazilian rebels. When Da Gama abandoned his fleet in harbor March 13, last, he took his followers aboard the Portuguese men of war Mindello, and Alfonso de Albuquerque, where they were sheltered.

May or May Not Mean War.

A rupture of diplomatic relations is sometimes tantamount to a declaration of war, but it is scarcely thought to be so serious in this case. It is difficult to see how the Portuguese government can conciliate Brazil, although this might be accomplished by the surrender of Admiral da Gama, who is reported to be en route to Portugal, and ample apology. Portuguese pride, historical in its obstinacy, will probably stand in the way of any such concessions, and it is more than probable that the two nations will continue to stand in an unfriendly attitude towards each other until time mollifies the enraged feelings of the Brazilians.

DECIDED AGAINST M'KANE.

The Graveseud Bon Gets No Relief From the Federal Courts.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—The appeal of John Y. McKane to the United States supreme court was decided against McKane, Justice Harlan delivering the opinion.

McKane, in his appeal, contended that he should have been allowed to go out on bail pending the appeal, as the constitution intended to confer that right in all but capital cases. The justices held that the matter of bail in such cases was entirely within the jurisdiction of the state court. Also that the warden of Sing Sing prison had no right to ask Mr. K—e to the sheriff of New York pending the appeal, as the appeal had no effect upon his imprisonment.

Mr. K—e was overruled at every point without a dissenting opinion from any of the justices.

THE OMAHA WRECK.

Disobedience of Orders Responsible For the Collision at Menomonie Junction.

ST. PAUL, May 12.—The collision on the Omaha at Menomonie Junction, Wis., in which two men were killed and many others injured, was caused by disobedience to train orders. The express had received orders to wait for the freight at Menomonie Junction, but for some reason these orders were not obeyed. Two trainmen were killed outright—Engineer James Jeffrey of the passenger train and Express Messenger W. T. Burt. Fireman Seth Gardner escaped with a cut and bruised leg. The two mail clerks on the train, H. C. Harlow of Janesville, Wis., and W. S. Rees of Dodgeville, Wis., were injured. The latter has a broken leg and other injuries. Harlow's injuries are not serious. Engineer McKoy of the freight escaped injury. The fireman, William Simonds of St. Paul, had his right arm injured. They both jumped when they realized that a collision was inevitable.

MONUMENT UNVEILED.

Honor Paid to the Memory of Washington's Mother.

FREDERICKSBURG, Va., May 10.—The unveiling of the Mary Washington monument occurred here during the day in the presence of a distinguished assemblage of people. The programme for the dedicatory exercises included addresses of welcome by Mayor A. P. Rowe and Governor Charles T. O'Ferrall; Masonic ceremonies; an address by Lawrence Washington, a descendant of Mary Washington, and an oration by Senator John W. Daniel, orator of the day.

Among those present at the exercises were President Cleveland, Secretaries Gresham, Carlisle, Lamar, Bissell and Morton and Chief Justice Fuller.

Columbus Statue Unveiled.

NEW YORK, May 12.—The beautiful bronze statue of Christopher Columbus executed by the Spanish sculptor Suñol, was unveiled with imposing ceremonies in the Central park. The statue is located at the southern end of the Mall, and almost immediately facing that of Shakespeare.

White House Family Off.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—The White House is at present deserted by its distinguished occupants. Following the departure of the president on a fishing trip, Mrs. Cleveland left at 8:10 p. m. with her two young daughters for Buffalo, N. Y., where she will make a brief visit with her mother, Mrs. Folsom.

Lucky Dog Starts East.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 16.—Lucky Dog, the best 3-year-old Coltto ran a race this spring, has started for Chicago, where he will start in the American Derby with thousands of California dollars bet on him. The horse has been especially prepared for the big race, and is said to be in fine fettle.

No Grasshoppers This Year.

WASHINGTON, May 9.—The department of agriculture has sent out a circular to correct an erroneous impression that destructive broods of locusts are due to appear this season. Two or three broods are due this year, but they are not of a voracious kind and will do very little if any damage.

Manitoba Village Scorched.

WINNIPEG, May 16.—Fire at Helmfield, Man., destroyed three dwellings, two general stores and all their contents. Loss, $80,000.

STILL STEAL TRAINS.

COXEYITES CONTINUE LAWLESS ACTS IN THE WEST.

Their Latest Exploit Occurred at Colville, Wy., Where a Deputy Marshal's Train Was Appropriated — Federal Troops Asked For—Speculations as to From the War Department.

GREEN RIVER, Wyo., May 14.—When Marshal Pinkham of Idaho started to board his train to go to Coleville for the commonwealers arrested there, 300 other commonwealers rushed upon him and his deputies and took their train from them and are coming east. Troops have been called for and the entire army will be arrested. The greatest excitement prevails at Montpelier, many citizens sympathizing with the commonwealers, among them Constable Dick Williams, who was arrested. The commonwealers attempted to release him but were cowed by three dozen Winchesters in the hands of deputies. A public meeting of citizens was held to confer with the opposing forces, but the marshals could do nothing as their duty was imperative.

TO HEAD OFF COXEVITES.

Special Instructions From the War Department.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—Reports of a disquieting nature were received during the day by Attorney General Olney respecting the lawless acts of various armies of Coxeyites in the West in seizing trains and interfering with the mails. The attorney general consulted the secretary of war and it was decided to adhere to the line of policy pursued last week in dealing with these cases. While general instructions had been sent to the military commanders in the disturbed districts to give all lawful and necessary assistance to the officers of the United States courts in repressing these outrages, it was felt proper to send specific instructions to General Otis at Vancouver barracks and to General Brooke, commanding the department of the Platte, to take active steps to head off the marauders in their destructive acts, acting as auxiliary to the United States marshals.

Coxey Moves Again.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—The "Commonweal of Christ" is now encamped in historic Bladensburg, a village famous for duels years ago. Encouraged by the protests of the indignant citizens of Hyattsville, where camp was pitched last week, the army crossed the eastern branch of the Potomac and pitched its tents in the large yard adjoining the George Washington hotel. Coxey has said that he anticipated no trouble in Bladensburg.

Marshal Asks for Troops.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—General Sheafield has received a telegram from the United States marshal at Montpelier, Ida., stating that a gang of Coxeyites have seized the property of the Union Pacific at that point with the intention of holding it until transportation is furnished them. The marshal says that he and his men are guarding the railroad property and asks to be relieved by United States troops.

Captured Colorado Commonwealers.

SALINA, Kan., May 13—The "war" is over. The intrepid Colorado contingent of the commonwealers which left the Colorado and Kansas in an uproar for two days has surrendered unconditionally to Marshal Hoy. They were too strong and every man put under arrest. The surrender was made peaceably and the entire army are being taken to Topeka for trial.

Ditched Coxeyites.

PROVO, Utah, May 12.—Carter's Salt Lake Coxeyites, numbering about 500, who camped at Geneva, marched into Provo, seized a Union Pacific engine and a number of Rio Grande western box cars and started east over the Rio Grande Western. Before they got out of town the train ran into an open switch and was derailed.

LARGEST WELL ON EARTH.

Rich Strike of Gas In a Supposed Worthless Territory In Ohio.

TOLEDO, O., May 14.—The largest gas well in the Ohio or Indiana fields was drilled on the Wallace farm, three miles west of Fostoria, Monday. The lease is owned by the Chicago Oil company and the well was started last week in territory which was considered worthless. The well was finished at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and when the tools were thrown out the workmen had to run for their lives. The well is estimated at 50,000,000 feet of gas per day, the largest well on earth. The gas caught fire from the forge and the derrick was burned to the ground. The woods are blazing in many places and flames can be seen shooting up 100 feet above the tree tops.

An Amendment by Davis.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—Senator Davis has given notice of an amendment to the tariff bill providing for a discriminating duties upon silks, velvets, plushes and laces, also upon wines, delaines, cheesemen, billiard goods, dolls, toys, brandy and other spirits, against countries imposing discriminating or prohibitory duties upon grain or its products or other agricultural productions exported from the United States.

Iron Hall Claims.

INDIANAPOLIS, May 11.—In the superior court Judge Winters notified all the attorneys interested in the Iron Hall receivership case that he would dispose of all the claims against the order on May 17 and that all claims must be filed by the 16th. Judge Winters further said that if the claims are not prosecuted they will be disallowed.

LIABLE TO COLLAPSE.

YET CONGRESS DELAYS PROVIDING A NEW PRINTING OFFICE.

Uncertainty Regarding the Site For the Proposed Building—A Problem That Confronts the New Public Printer—Liability of Another Fearful Theater Disaster.

WASHINGTON, May 10.—[Special.]—Chairman Bankhead of the house committee on public buildings and grounds, after long wrestling with the subject and getting pretty hard fall, gives it as his opinion that the uncertainty about the new government printing office is greater than ever. Others assert that senate and house, to say nothing of other contestants, are no nearer an agreement than when the discussion began years ago. Just at present the matter is so tangled up with politics and local interests, railroads and real estate speculators, that it is not easy to get at the merits of it, but out of the muddle several facts can be picked of interest to the public and among them these:

Looking For a Site.

The senate committee, after what it considered an exhaustive study of the situation, selected what is called the Kurtz Johnson lot, which contains 106,000 square feet and could be got on $1 a foot. This is the lot which was once recommended by a joint committee of the senate and house and is the one favored by Mr. Richardson of Tennessee and his supporters in the recent debate. About the time, however, when an agreement seemed very near, General and ex-Senator Mahone appeared upon the scene. There was a delay. The senate overruled its committee and voted for the Mahone lot, which is at the corner of North Capitol and L streets, three squares north of the present government printing office. It contains 213,615 square feet. Favoritism and corruption were charged, of course. Senator Vest succeeded in getting a reconsideration of the vote, and so the matter rests in that body.

The house committee, after a long and careful examination, brought in a bill for purchasing the square just north of the Baltimore and Ohio station on which the senate stables and a government engine house now are. It would cost $300,000, and to grade the lot and locate the stables elsewhere would probably cost $50,000 more. Its great advantages are its nearness to the capitol and the fact that the Baltimore and Ohio railroad could easily put a switch into the basement. It is quite safe to say that when one considers that the office receives 9,000 tons of freight yearly. On the other hand, this would give that road a sort of monopoly, and this, with the cost, caused the house to fall on the Bankhead bill with unrelenting fury. Another lot which has its advocates is the so called baseball ground, which contains 170,648 feet and would cost $242,000, and is now owned by Mr. Livingston of Georgia. The Mahone lot, by the way, is offered for $250,000, and the sale of 4 would, it is said, make quite a snag fortune for the wily little general and enable him to retire from politics once more. Indeed it is charged by advocates of other sites that part of the agreement between the general and certain senators is that if he sells this lot to the government he is to meddle no more in Virginia. But then you cannot believe half you hear in Washington.

A Shuttlecock For Both Houses.

After knocking all around the field the congressional wolves in both houses lay down to the proposition to extend the present building, paying $1,500,000 for an addition of 52,000 square feet of ground, but the engineers answered with one voice that the present building is liable to collapse at any minute, and that an addition would involve a calamity equal to the one which carries then turned to another lot not far south of the capitol, where 312,000 square feet could be bought for $800,000, but the other fellows succeeded in proving the site so unhealthful that it would be criminal to place government employees there. The present building at the corner of North Capitol and H streets is also pronounced very unhealthful, so there you are again. All this is well worth the study of Americans as showing what a slow, clumsy machine this thing called government is and how those who wait on congress for better times will not breathe the air nor perhaps drink the waters of despair. The matter has been a shuttlecock between the two houses for years.

Mr. Bryan advocated the use of the government land lying between Sixth and Seventh streets just north of the fish commission building, whereupon the other side immediately proved that the ground was a quagmire exhaling the vapors of death, and the new foundation would be made there, that it was sometimes overflowed by Potomac backwater, and that fish had been caught swimming in the Pennsylvania depot! Others proposed using one of the parks, especially a part of Judiciary square, which was met with an indignant protest from the people of that section of the metropolitan grounds. When it was proposed to take that part of Garfield park not far south of the capitol, which is not a park at all, there was an indignant outcry on the ground that it was sacred to the memory of the martyred president. Mr. Coombs proposed a general change of square, by which government buildings yet to be erected might be near together and pointed out the enormous saving caused by the great distances between the different departments. The end of the whole matter is the house was that on motion of Mr. Holman the committee was instructed to select a site on some ground already owned by the government. As the senate will not consent to this—at least so all the committees consulted say—it really looks as if Mr. Bankhead's opening statement were the truth.

Public Printer Benedict's Dilemma.

All this time Mr. T. E. Benedict, the new public printer, is struggling with the problem of how to discharge one-half of his employes and not offend any congressman or any employes who has a "pull." He says that when he left the office some four years ago there were but little over 2,100 employes on the rolls, and when he returned there were 3,694, of whom 800 must go at once and nearly as many more in a few weeks. The newest type in knowledge of buildings can see that the present building is unsafe, but the business conducted in it and, in fact, unfit for the use of heavy machinery of any kind. And yet it looks as if the heaviest machinery were on the top floor. The men say they do their work with legs called ready for a jump, but it is certain that there could be no effective pumping, for if the building does go it will be a Park place disaster and a Ford's theater disaster both in one, with somebody horrors of its own. If we wonder at the delay of congress under such circumstances, what shall we say of the great pressure to secure or retain employment in such a building?

VICIOUS VOORHEES.

HE HATES PROSPERITY FOR AMERICA AND FOR AMERICANS.

The Cries and Falsehoods Furnished His Entire Speech—A Clever Exposure of His Quibbles and Prevarications—His Vulgar Abuse Recoils Upon Himself.

The rabid remarks made by Senator Voorhees during his opening debate upon the tariff bill in the senate have strong earmarks of Clevelandism, and many opinions have been expressed that the senator's speech was at least prompted by the president, even if not actually inspired by the White House tenant. Such words as "greed," "stealthiness," "crime," "selfishness" and the like always abound in the speeches and addresses of the president when he discusses a protective tariff. They are almost as frequent as the "I's" and "Me's" that have now become a part of American history, and the tautology of the expressions referred to in the speech of Senator Voorhees affords good reason for the suspicion that it was, before delivery, submitted to the approval of Mr.

According to Senator Voorhees, the tariff taxes that are now paid to the extent of $76,670,000 annually "on the wants, necessities and daily consumption of the laboring men, women and children of the United States" will be removed. If it be proper to wipe out $76,670,000 of duty that has been collected under the McKinley tariff, which Senator Voorhees stigmatizes as "a gigantic crime," is the senator not equally guilty of covinances at crime by retaining a single dollar's worth of such duty? Is it that "his lust for riches takes alarm" when he sees so much revenue slipping away from the treasury, and that his "sordid, brutal selfishness" impels him to keep up grasp even upon some of the McKinley dollars, although they make him a participator in "a gigantic crime?"

On the basis of a population of 68,000,000 people, which is the total, according to present estimates of the treasury department, the amount of promised relief is $1.12½ per capita of burdensome and oppressive taxation, divided among the different schedules as follows:

Chemicals	$1,000,000
Pottery	1,000,000
Glass	1,800,000
Metals	12,000,000
Wood	200,000
Tobacco	3,300,000
Agricultural products	3,300,000
Spirits, wines, etc	1,200,000
Cotton manufactures	3,450,000
Flax, hemp and manufactures	6,000,000
Woolen manufactures	25,000,000
Silk manufactures	5,500,000
Paper and pulp	300,000
Sundries	2,500,000
Transferred to free list	12,170,000
Total	$76,670,000

Senator Voorhees claims that the proposed reductions in the tariff will save $76,670,000 in taxation to the laboring people. This would be correct upon the supposition that our imports of foreign goods would be no more and no less during the years to come than they were during the year of protection, upon which his calculations were made. But he omits an essential feature in his data. The mere fact of our having a protective tariff has been to prohibit the foreign importations, and the mere fact of lowering the tariff will very largely increase such importations to an extent that will also increase the "burden of taxation." The senator claims that every dollar collected under the McKinley tariff is a tax. Every dollar collected under the free trade tariff will be equally a tax, and more of it, because the imports will be greater and the ultimate "burden of taxation" greater.

Take an invoice of $1,000 for manufactures of cotton imported from England and now paying 50 per cent ad valorem duty, the McKinley tariff thereon is $500. Take the free trade tariff of 35 per cent ad valorem, which will permit $3,000 of foreign cotton to be imported where only $1,000 are now imported, and the duty will amount to $700, an increase of $200 in the "burden of taxation" laid upon the poor people by the Wilson tariff bill. The same rule may be applied to all other commodities, and the greater the difference between the present and the proposed tariffs the larger will be the imports of the foreign goods. This view of the case has not been presented by Senator Voorhees or any member of his free trade army. They endeavor to make the people believe that our imports will not be larger when the tariff is lowered, and that the British trade is not waiting impatiently to flood our markets with his cheap goods.

But there is still another view of the case that Senator Voorhees has entirely overlooked—the question of wages, every important phase in the labor. Where we now import but $1,000 worth of cotton goods and will, with a lower tariff, import to the extent of $3,000, there will be just $1,000 worth less manufactured in our own mills, and $800 less of this to be distributed in wages. This means that 400 men earning $2 per day will be deprived of their opportunity to earn. Two hundred men are to receive a remission of $1.12½ in a year from the tariff taxes that they have been paying, yet in a single day they are to lose $2 in wages. This will be a great relief, no doubt. But there may be some workers and wage earners who would prefer to retain the $2 per day and pay the $1.12½ per annum tax. Such a natural desire on their part is characterized by Senator Voorhees as "sordid, brutal selfishness," and a "lust for riches."

Senator Voorhees claims to desire the relief of the people from unjust taxation and proposes to relieve them to the extent of $76,670,000, or $1.12¾ per head. At the same time he argues in support of a bill that will provide a surplus of revenue to the extent of $29,885,245 and says "there is no terror to us in surplus like this." Perhaps not. Men who juggle with millions can regard millions with complacency. But it seems hard upon the poor laborer who is to be deprived of his work and not have the means wherewith to support himself or his family. It will be small satisfaction for him, without a loaf of bread in the house, to contemplate a surplus of $29,885,245 hoarded up in the vaults of the treasury.

Such a policy as is advocated by Senator Voorhees and his free trade associates will be regarded by the mass of the people as "a gigantic crime." It may lead to crime, and who could blame a poor man without work if he were impelled to crime at the sight of $29,885,245 in gold hoarded in the treasury? "There is no terror" to Senator Voorhees "in a surplus like this," but all men are not made like Senator Voorhees, and some even are thankful that they are not. To quote his own words, he has "declared a policy so flagitious in principle, so rotten in morality and so ruinous in its exactions on the absolute wants in life that its possible duration is only a question of time when the next election by the people should occur."

CHARLES R. BUCKLAND.

A COMPROMISE TARIFF.

The Democrats Tried It Once Before, and the Country Suffered Severely.

In view of the compromise nature of the Wilson tariff bill it is well to refer to the tariff act of 1833, which was intended as a compromise and conciliatory measure. The south was on the verge of open rebellion, so determined were they not to submit to the protective system. Mr. Clay and congress did not intend to give up the protective principle of the act of 1828. But, like all such compromise measures, it yielded just enough to completely destroy its efficiency, as was subsequently learned to our sorrow. It provided that by a sliding scale of one-tenth biannually all duties in excess of 20 per cent should be abolished within a period of 10 years. In its results and effects it was really an abandonment of the protective principle, for the reductions allowed were soon found to afford "insufficient protection," which is practically no protection, as was so terribly proved under the tariff of 1816. Industry and trade soon decline, and again foreign goods poured like an inundation into our markets.

Financial depression followed, assignments and bankruptcies resulted everywhere, manufacturers suspended operations, and business grew worse and worse till the culmination was reached in the financial crash of 1837, one of the most appalling and disastrous financial revulsions ever known, several even than that which followed the repeal of the first tariff in 1816.

The revulsion of 1837 produced a far greater havoc than was experienced in the period above mentioned. The ruin came quickly and fearfully. There were few that could save themselves. Property of every description was parted with at prices that were astounding, and, as for the currency, there was scarcely any at all.

"In some parts of Pennsylvania the people were obliged to divide bank notes into halves, quarters, eighths and so on and agree from necessity to use them as money. In Ohio, with all her abundance, it was hard for money to pay taxes. The sheriff of Muskingum county, as stated by the Cincinnati Times, in the summer of 1842 sold at auction one four horse wagon at $8.50, 10 hogs at 62½ cents each, 20 sheep at 12½ cents, five cows, two steers and one calf, the lot at $3.25; 20 sheep at 12½ cents each; 24 hogs, the 23 at 25 cents; one eight day clock at $2.50; lot of tobacco, seven or eight hogsheads, at $5; three lots of hay, each at 25 cents, and one stack of fodder at 25 cents" (Colton's "Life of Henry Clay," Vol. 1).

The whole country went into liquidation, bank loans and discounts fell off more than one-half, the money lost to the country was not less than $1,000,000,000, to say nothing of the tremendous strain upon the moral sense of the people. All prices fell off ruinously, production was greatly diminished, and in many departments practically ceased. Thousands of workingmen were idle, with no hope of employment, and their families suffering from want. Our farmers were without markets. Their products rotted in their barns. Their lands, teeming with rich harvests, were sold by the sheriff for debts and taxes. The tariff which robbed our industries of protection failed to supply the government with necessary revenues. The national treasury in consequence was bankrupt, and the credit of the nation very low. In the first six years after 1834 the revenue fell off 25 per cent, and the government was obliged to borrow money at high rates of interest to pay current expenses.—American Economist.

The Turkeys of Tiffin.

Friend Kimmol, writing from the Heidelberg university, at Tiffin, O., says that there seems to be an analogy existing between our present free trade Democracy and two old time turkey gobblers used to reside in that vicinity. One of the trappers built a pen, and succeeded in catching three fine wild turkeys. But while putting them into the pen one got away from him, so he foolishly threw down the two he had in his hands to run after the one that got away. The other trapper, seeing the race, exclaimed, "Run, Boltie, run!" But Boltie failed to run fast enough, and so lost all his turkeys.

In like manner our free trade friends want to throw down our large, steady and profitable home market to risk acquiring a small share in the sometimes unprofitable and always uncertain so called "markets of the world." The only difference seems to be that of the two the free trader is the bigger fool, for the trapper risked losing only 66⅔ per cent in order to seek 33⅓ per cent, while the free trader risks losing 99 per cent in order to acquire the meager and uncertain 2 per cent.

ENGLAND AND SILVER

THE WHITE METAL IS USED TO FOSTER BRITISH INTERESTS.

The Demonetization of Silver Is Discrimination Against an American Product—Our Only Relief Is to Tax British Freight and Shipping.

We, with our near neighbor, Mexico, are the principal producers of silver. Nearly all the world's supply comes from North and South America. The production of all Europe is insignificant. Until lately neither Great Britain nor any British colony produced any silver. Under these circumstances England saw that by demonetizing silver it would decrease the value of a commodity it did not produce and conversely increase the value of the goods it wished to sell in American countries. Some 14 years ago Germany, which proposed by the aid of protection and subsidies to its mercantile marine to become an exporting nation, followed England's lead and also demonetized silver. Lately England, seeing that we were staggering under the effort to hold up the price of a product common to so many American countries, tried to give us a coup de grace by demonetizing silver in India.

The demonetization of silver by England and Germany was an effort to discrimination against one of our products, to obtain an undue advantage in trade with us. The demonetization of silver in India was as distinctly a hostile act as any warlike proclamation of war could be. It was the second time that old pirate of Jefferson's or Jackson's political breeches were left in the White House this action of England's would have been resented as the orders in council were.

With these long continued hostilities to one at least of our interests apparent to the whole world and fully understood by all of our legislators, a large part of the Democratic party and apparently all of the Populists propose to reward Great Britain, principally, and Germany by opening our markets to their manufactures, increasing the amount of silver, debased in value by their action, which we will have to export to pay for service in transporting our ocean freights and goods received from them. And almost concurrently with the demonetization of silver by India by England that unconscionable Judas, Pithius, proposes to reward Great Britain by destroying our shipbuilding industry in favor of British shipbuilders. As an excuse for his treason for not trying to hand our coasting and lake trade to the English is his fear that by trying to do too much at first he may not be able to do anything for the interests of the nation to whose capitalists he is so grasping.

All Americans will welcome Senator Lodge's declaration of opposition to this supersubservient attitude of Gorman and his satellites in our congress and will agree with his reasons for opposition. He says in part:

It is England which is today the great enemy of any effort for the monetization of silver by the world's currency. I do not mean the whole of England, but the bankers and the mighty moneyed interests of London.

England is held by her private position by the banking and moneyed interests of London, speaking in a broad and general sense. She is in great difficulty with her Indian exchanges. She is in great difficulty with her manufactures. She needs relief. No one will have followed the English newspapers or the discussion of the Indian currency question not to see that the movement in favor of silver is growing in England all the time. The reason is governed by her attitude toward silver solely by her own interests. She is not governed by maintaining the gold monometallic standard because she is in love with that standard, but desires to do so for economic truth. She is engaged in maintaining it because she is engaged in it for capitalists believe it pays. The rest of the world simply follows meekly or ever does something far silver, and the gold monometallic policy of Great Britain is not following all the great civilized nations is, I believe, the great factor of gold monometallism in the world today at this moment.

Therefore it seems to me if there is any way in which we can strike England's trade or strike her moneyed interests it is our clear policy to do it in the interest of silver. Nothing, in my judgment, as the senator from Colorado (Mr. Jellison) pointed out the other day, can help England so much to her present difficulties as to open the markets of this country to her under the proposed tariff bill.

The senator advocates striking her with prohibitive duties on the produce of her colonies, saying, "There is only one way to deal with England on this question, and that is to make her feel it in her pocket."

Possibly, however, the senator is not making his attack on the most vulnerable point. A differential duty on all goods from England would undoubtedly be unpleasant to that country. But she would not care greatly for the imprisonment of her colonies. His she not for the past year added to the value of her gold brought from India for imperial taxation an additional sum of $9,946,200 in silver under the present unsatisfactory for exchange by the low value of silver? This low value she has procured. She would see all of her colonies bound to her by the strongest commercial ties or less equanimity if it would injure us. The most vulnerable point of England is her shipping, that Fithian wishes to protect and foster. If we would give notice of a termination of the agreement which prevents us imposing differential duties on imports in British ships, that prevents our imposing differential harbor and dock dues on her shipping, we would see the Indian mints reopened instantly.

If Mexico and the silver producing countries of Central and South America, which are invited to increase the taxation of their people that British bondholders may still receive exclusive full pay of gold, would combine to lay differential charges on the shipping of all countries that discriminate against silver, the mints of Great Britain and Germany would be open to the coinage of silver at any ratio the silver producing countries were unanimous in demanding.

Then the thinkers, who have been explaining that inasmuch as gold alone has prevented the two metals circulating freely together all other complaints for their superfluous labor.

EDWARD P. NORTH.

Our Favorable Balance of Trade.

A free trader is nothing if not inconsistent. If we have a favorable balance of trade, the tariff, he tells us, has nothing to do with it. If we have an adverse balance of trade, it is all due to the "robber tariff." But he hardly knows how to explain our present excess of foreign trade. No two free trade organs explain it alike, and yet the explanation is simple. The McKinley law has been in force between three and four years, and as long as we are only threatened with free trade so long will our industries of foreign trade continue favorable. Foreigners do not care to sell so much in our markets when they must pay a high tariff, and they do pay it now. But once the tariff is taken off the balance in our favor will disappear in a twinkling. Every long commercial cruiser is waiting most hopefully and expectantly to dump its accumulated goods on our shores. The following from the Dublin Telegram is a sample of what the foreign press is telling its readers:

"The time to be in the field is now when the new tariff has been in operation some time, but on the first day that it comes into play. The English and Scotch and other woolen makers will make a rush for possession. But while a favorable foreign trade balance is most desirable it is insignificant compared with our home trade, of which we have already lost hundreds of millions of dollars because of threatened free trade. Actual free trade means a loss of thousands of millions. Let us continue to protect our home market, and our foreign trade will take care of itself."—American Economist.

Wool Growing In Italy.

The free trader who believes that wool can be grown as cheaply in this country as abroad, and who would have American woolgrowers conform to the same conditions as to the method of living, wages, etc., as the foreign grower, should read the following verbatim report taken from the first annual report of the United States commissioner of labor. The report gives the condition, wages, etc., of sheep-raising in Italy. It is as follows:

"Condition—Lives in hovel; looks like a hovel; leads a solitary life; cannot read; possesses but little intelligence.

"Diet—Breakfast, bread, red oil, water; dinner, black bread, oil, water; supper, black bread, oil, water. This monotonous and meager diet is varied at infrequent intervals by a very small piece of bacon, salt pork or macaroni, and on special occasions (Immaculate) on great fete days by a little wine.

"Earnings at 7 cents a day, $25.55.

"Cost of living for two years—Bread, $14.60; oil, $5.47; other food supplies, $1.82; clothing, $3.66.

"Expenditures, $25.55.

"Earnings, $25.55."—Texas Stockman.

A Countryman's Suggestion.

A countryman who boarded the freboat New Yorker at her berth at the Battery was struck with interest as he observe the completeness of her equipment for fighting fire along the river front and commented upon the ingenious arrangements for directing the streams upon burning buildings or into the holds of vessels in which fire was in nitration. Then he asked the engineer to show him the workings of the searchlight, of which vessels in this city have was one and was amazed to learn that there was no electrical plant at all on the boat. The countryman's surprise was declared a boon for the kitchen and the family.

The Human Electrical Forces!

How They Control the Organs of the Body.

The electrical force of the human body, as the nerve fluid may be termed, is an especial feature of the treatment of science, as it asserts so marked an influence on the health of the organs of the body. Every nerve is produced in the brain and conveyed by means of the spinal cord to the various parts of the system, thus supplying the latter with the vitality necessary for the performance of its functions. The sympathetic nerve, as shown here, may be said to be the most important of the nerves, as it supplies the heart, lungs, stomach and bowels, with the nerve force necessary to keep them active and healthy. As will be seen by the cut, the nerve descending from the brain passes down the neck and connecting at the base with the pneumogastric, which is shown here. It then passes down the body, supplying the latter with the vitality necessary for the performance of its functions. The pneumogastric

THE FINANCIAL END.

TRIALS OF THE BOX OFFICE MAN AND THOSE WHO WATCH HIM.

Story of the Bill of Cardboard That Admits One to the Theater.—The Manager on the Road Has to Keep His Eyes Open, Says a Man Who Has Been Through the Mill.

There is something about the wear and tear of the duties incidental to the box office that prematurely ages a young man. Stay by him a single day, and you'll know what it is. When he comes to the theater in the morning and arranges his tickets in the rack and counts out his change and the advance sales on that day, it is with an air of resignation such as kings and queens need to wear just before they were carted out for execution.

There are so many tickets of various kinds and prices prepared for each performance and duly dated and numbered and marked with a big letter or number for the day of the week. This large designation is with the view of handling rapidly. There are fifteen cases containing the tickets of the following days, each day by itself, and when an advance sale is made he puts the money received for it with the tickets for that day. When the day is over, he puts that tray of tickets and money in the safe for the night. The advance money is thus usually kept until the day comes around and then goes into the pile received for the night's performance.

The peculiarity of this business is that everything connected with the box office is cash. The sales are cash sales, and if a combination show is in the house the settlement with the combination treasurer is made in cash at the close of every performance. Simply put, therefore, at the close of the day the difference between the number of tickets on hand in the morning and the tickets left unsold is represented in the cash drawer.

As a matter of particular fact, however, there are numerous complications incidental to the operation, and the treasurer of the house and his assistant —the box office young man before alluded to—become prematurely old and abnormally smart grappling with them.

On the rural circuits the traveling manager is obliged to be very wary in his dealings with the box office man. As soon as the theater doors are thrown open to the public the combination manager or treasurer looking after the interests of the company playing in the house makes his appearance and takes up his stand at the door, where he can watch both the box office and the ticket taker. When you enter any theater where a combination is playing, you'll see this wary individual at his post of duty. He is there on the presumption that the local people will "do" him if they can. He knows all the tricks and wiles of the box office young man and the doorkeeper and takes nothing for granted.

He sees that every comer hands in a ticket of some kind, and that the doorkeeper puts that representative of so much cash in the padlocked box. The pasteboard in that tin box represents the receipts of the house, of which his company has a certain percentage unless playing on a certainty. He carries the key to that box and if he is "done" over lets the box go out of his sight. There is another watcher at the gallery door taking the same precaution. Of course he knows the nice box office young man wouldn't cheat him—not for the world! but all the same he is on guard against a possible lapse of conscience.

"On the road," said Billy Keogh, who has had experience in the box office and as traveling manager and ought to be pretty well up in the tricks of both, "the traveling manager goes on the principle that every box office is going to 'do him up' if it can. The first thing he does is to go to the theater and get his mail and 'size up' the local man. And the first thing the local man does is to get 'fly,' and if so it will be diamond cut diamond. That process we call 'jollying' begins at once.

"The traveling man is always on the defensive. He can't beat the other man. All he can do is to prevent the box office from heating him. He must be up to the tricks and as hard as nails. You know in small towns the local treasurer gets a yearly benefit and the doorkeeper gets a benefit. So these two men will 'play' traveling companies for the benefit of their friends at every opportunity.

"The collusion between the box office and the doorkeeper is perfect. Sometimes they are very sensitive about being watched, and sometimes they pretend to be indignant. The most indignant treasurer I ever met was in a place where we caught the doorkeeper, who was on the landing just above the box office, sliding tickets down a crack in the floor into the box office. He said:

"'Take a popular price house and big audiences of from 1,100 to 1,500 people, and in the rush it is hard to prevent the 'done.' If I can manage to hold them down to 810 or 820 margin, I'm pretty well satisfied. A new pocket register has come into use that helps keep run of the admissions. You can stand at the receiver, and with your hand in your pocket count every person that goes into the house.

"When the ticket seller and the doorkeeper are close together, there is the most danger, for then they will communicate with each other with a nod or by signs or words that the company's representative will not understand. No, I don't think the house itself often profits by these tricks. It is considered a rule that the house is 'done' along with the traveling company, though this is not always the case, to my personal knowledge."—New York Herald.

A GOLDEN JUBILEE.

The Y. M. C. A. Aleet to Celebrate Its Fiftieth Anniversary.

The golden jubilee of the Young Men's Christian association will be celebrated on June 6 by appropriate exercises in every country where the organization has gained a foothold, but the celebration in London, the cradle of the association, will have special significance and importance. The exercises there will last for a week and will include the meeting of the thirteenth international conference of the association, with public thanksgiving services in St. Paul's cathedral on jubilee day and a public reception at the Royal Albert hall, Kensington.

George Williams, the founder of the organization, now nearly 73 years old, will attend these exercises and tell how he came to start the Y. M. C. A. Delegates will be present from every one of the United States and from 17 other countries, and there will be almost as many languages spoken as there are countries represented. The corporation of the city of London has appropriated £2,000 for the entertainment of the delegates, so that something of a civic aspect will be added to the religious character of the celebration.

The first Y. M. C. A. was organized June 6, 1844, at a meeting of the 80 clerks of the big London dry goods house of Hitchcock & Co., and its stated object was "to improve the spiritual condition of young men engaged in the drapery and other trades." Now there are 70 branches in London alone and 848 in the United Kingdom, while in the world at large there are 5,143 branches, with a membership close to 600,000 souls.

The North American branch was organized in Boston Dec. 29, 1851, and within two years there were branches in 26 other American cities. The convention of the American branches in Buffalo in June, 1854, was really the first conference in the history of the association, and the first international conference, which met in Paris in August, 1855, was also called under American auspices.

It is a notable coincidence that the Salvation Army was also started in London in June, 1844, and that organization, too, will have a big anniversary celebration in London next month.

A CANADIAN PATRIOT.

Joseph Royal Advocates Independence For the Dominion.

Joseph Royal, whose pamphlet in favor of Canadian independence has stirred up so much excitement in the Dominion, is a man of striking personality and remarkable strength of character. He was born in Montreal in 1837 and began his career as a journalist. It was in Lo ndon alone that he first attracted attention to his trait of thinking and acting for himself. Although a Conservative, he fought against his leader, Sir George E. Cartier, and the powerful corporation of the Sulpicians on the question of the division of the Catholic parishes of Montreal. It required much independence of character and energy to enter a campaign against such powerful opponents as Cartier and the Sulpicians, who wielded at that time an immense influence in Montreal.

Mr. Royal was elected to the Dominion parliament in 1880 by a Manitoba constituency and succeeded in having a committee appointed to study the feasibility of a railway from Winnipeg to Hudson bay. Out of this came the incorporation of the Hudson Bay Railway company, which will probably one day exert an immense influence on the development of the Canadian northwest. In 1883 Mr. Royal was appointed lieutenant governor of the Northwest Territories, a position which he held for the regular term of five years to July 1, 1893, and in which he was continued until last December.

In his social life Mr. Royal is charming, and his conversation is most attractive. He is possessed of a thorough and varied learning, speaks with facility both French and English and is equally popular with the leading men of both political parties. His intimacy with Lieutenant Governor Chapleau is personal as well as political, and a significant rumor has it that the manuscript of his pamphlet was submitted to and approved by Mr. Chapleau, at whose residence Mr. Royal spent a few days just prior to its publication.

This is not a matter of surprise in Canada, as it is well known that Mr. Chapleau has on several occasions pronounced in favor of independence, and that he went out of the Dominion government on account of serious disagreement between himself and his former colleagues on questions of the highest import.

Souvenirs of Babel's Tower.

ON THE BATTLEFIELD.

The sun rose over the field of wheat
And warmed the breath of an early spring.
The smiling furrows made the morning sweet;
And there were carolling birds to sing;
And by the brook were children at play,
Planning their childish games for that day.

But the sun sank over a field of red,
Leaving no wheat nor a farmhouse there,
Only the ghastly lines of the dead
And blackness and ruin every where;
And along the brook, instead of play,
Were the silent forms of men and prey.

Wine In Bottles.

The increase of the strength of wine by keeping depends upon whether it is kept in cask or bottle. If stored in cask, there is a constant increase of alcohol. The ancients knew that wine improved if kept in leathern bottles, and the same result is obtained by keeping it in wooden vessels, for both leather and wood are more easily penetrated by water than by alcohol. Evaporation causes from both, but more freely from water, and the wine consequently becomes richer in alcohol. On the other hand, the opinion that wine has grown old in bottles and therefore become stronger is thoroughly false. Evaporation is very much hindered by the cork, even when this is not covered with resin and sealing wax. The simple explanation is that a bottle of old bottled wine rich in alcohol is that only the stronger wines can be preserved and the weaker ones cannot resist the effects of time. At the same time, although all wine must eventually be spoiled and weakened by keeping it in bottles, yet some kinds acquire, as a first consequence of that cause which gradually destroys them, and which is neither more nor less than the chemical alteration in their constituents, properties which render them more agreeable both to smell and taste.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Uniforms to Scare the Enemy.

According to the report prepared by the war department, red uniforms are adopted by the Emperor Vaiz Maximus in order that the Roman soldiers might not be frightened by the sight of their own blood. To this day the children of England are told that this is the reason why French troops are red trousers, and French children are taught the same notion respecting the red coats of the British. The legionaries of ancient Rome were the skins of bears on the field of battle to make them look fierce. For the same reason they put figures of frightful beasts on their shields and helmets. From this odd custom springs modern crests and armorial bearings. The idea of carrying the enemy by such devices has been perpetuated up to quite recent times. Tall bearskin hats were originally adopted to make them look taller by the French cuirassiers, each of whom carried a handful of grenades for scattering among the ranks of their foe.—Troy Times.

Sun Spots.

It has been observed that after the sun spots have been at a minimum for summers are hotter, just as though there was more heat coming from the sun at such periods, and the fact has been accounted for by supposing that sun spots are caused by vast clouds of matter erupted from the sun and condensed in the surrounding space. These act as screens and prevent the sun's heat from radiating freely through them. From an examination of statistics A. B. McDowall, M. A., has found that in England during the hot summers, following the minima of sun spots, the month of August is hotter than the effect due, in all likelihood, to accumulation of the heat.—American Register.

The Giant Guards.

The distinction of having the greatest number of tall men in one company belongs to the Scots Fusilier Guards. Scots guards. The "A" or right flank company of that battalion has over 90 men on its roll, and their average height is 6 feet 3¼ inches. There are 12 men in the company over 6 feet 4 inches, and one stands slightly over 6 feet 7 inches. No individual member of the company is less than 6 feet in height.—London Court Journal.

Workmen's Tools of Moses' Time.

A collection of tools used by workmen in building the pyramids of Egypt that is owned by a famous Egyptologist indicate that many tools credited to modern ingenuity were in use when Moses was troubling the pharaohs. It is announced that a furnace has been unearthed somewhere along the Nile in which hot blast was used centuries before the modern Neilson formulated the same idea.—Age of Steel.

It is put forward as one proof of the change of climate in England within the past centuries that the grapes here fruit. In the Deanery garden, at Winchester, is a fine old fig tree, from which James I picked fruit in 1620. At West Tarring, in Sussex, a large fig tree still stands, said to have been planted by Thomas a Becket.

An impure condition of the blood and an irritated state of the nerves which arises from it are common causes of sleeplessness. There is at least an ingredient of the liver want of sleep and bad dreams are very common.

Louis Kossuth did not like the name by which French affix is known. Said he, "I do not like the idea that you call this place 'the cradle of liberty,' for cradle scents of mortality, and liberty is immortal."

Newton abandoned the idea of publishing several of his works for fear of criticism. They were left in manuscript and were published after his death.

Neither Gray, Fielding nor Alexander sat for a portrait, and their features are known to later times by pictures painted from memory.

Harold, the great French dramatist, has written 800 dramatic pieces between the years 1000 and 1087.

THE CHICAGO STOCK EXCHANGE.

It Has Prospered Under the Administration of President Walker.

The new Chicago Stock Exchange building is one of the handsomest and most complete of the modern skyscrapers in that city. It is 13 stories in height and contains over 400 offices as complete in detail as latter day ideas of comfort and convenience can make them. It occupies an area of 101 by 180 feet at the southwest corner of Washington and La Salle streets, and the rent line is 161 feet above the sidewalk. The boardroom is exceptionally bright, handsome and complete and spacious enough for the purposes of the exchange. It is a two story room, taking up half of the second and third floors of the building, and is handsomely decorated. The cell-

WILLIAM B. WALKER.

ing is supported by four octagonal pillars of Sienna marble, with gilded capitals, and the prevailing colors of the decorations are green and gold.

Though built especially for the Stock Exchange and tailored to its uses, the new building is not owned by that body, but by one of its members, F. W. Peck, or rather by the estate of his father, which he represents. By a very simple arrangement with the owners the Stock Exchange secures the use of its handsome new quarters for 15 years at the nominal rental of $1 per annum. The owners, of course, look for adequate reimbursement from the class of tenants who will naturally be attracted to the offices by the presence of the exchange in the building.

The first president of the exchange was Charles Henrotin, who is still an honored member, and the chairman of the board then, as now, was Joseph L. Wilkins, who resigned a similar position on the Philadelphia Stock Exchange to take charge of the floor at Chicago. William B. Walker, who is now president, was with the exchange from the start and was one of its first governors. He is a New Yorker by birth, but has lived in Chicago practically all his life and made his fortune there. He is a very popular man in Chicago social circles as well as among his business associates and is unalienably devoted to the best interests of the big enterprise over which he presides.

SHE SAW THE ALAMO MASSACRE.

Senora Candelaria Is the Sole Survivor of That Tragic Event.

A scantily furnished little adobe hut in the Mexican quarter of San Antonio, Tex., is the home of the Senora Candelaria, one of the women who lived through the hell of Texan massacres in the Texan war for independence and now the sole survivor of that dreadful event. The senora is now 103 years of age and until a recent illness was quite active and alert, quick to perceive and understand. Wrinkled and seamed, almost toothless and with but little hair, she is not a pleasant object to contemplate, but is still a wonder and is regarded with superstitious awe by the people of her race among whom she lives. The old woman was nursing Colonel Bowie, who lay ill of a fever in one of the rooms of the Alamo, when it was end in and butchered him in his bed. She shows upon her chin the scar of the wound inflicted upon that occasion. When the massacre was completed, she was one of three survivors, the other two being a little girl and Colonel Travis' negro servant, and her name will ever be linked in Texan history with those of the heroes of the Alamo.

The famous old fortress was originally the Franciscan mission of San Antonio de Valero, and at the time of the siege its buildings covered about an acre of ground. Nothing is left of it now but the old stone church, the convent which formerly adjoined it having been long ago dismantled, together with the wall which surrounded its garden. On one side of this historic building is a square, now used as a second story annex, and immediately adjoining it is

H. F. BROWN.

H. C. Misner drove down from Euclid on Saturday with his wife, his son Harvey, and spent the day in this city. He says wheat is nearly all sowed and that the balance of the grain will be about finished this this week.

From the unusual demand for barley one would imagine that very much more of that cereal will be sown this year than ever before—but the lack of ready cash will prevent many sowing who would do so, if they could procure seed on time.

Regular session of Col. Cobham Post on Friday (to-morrow) evening. Every comrade who can do so should make it a point to attend, as those meetings are very interesting, while preparations are going forward for Memorial Day services. Let every comrade make it a point to turn out on that day at any rate.

Chas Teel Sr., of Euclid, was in the city on Saturday. Says he has the wheat on his land all sown but will sow a quarter section belonging to somebody else and expected to finish it this week Wednesday. Says he finishes his seeding this year at least ten days earlier than ever before, and has been able to get in his crop in better shape than usual.

Mrs. Ed. Musson died at their residence on Sompson's addition on Friday, of consumption. The remains were taken to Fisher on Saturday for interment. She was a cousin to Mrs. Amy Grundysen and was Mr. Musson's second wife. They had been married scarcely two years.

Geo. Berthiaume was up Terrebonne way last week and says they seed rain up there badly. Have their seeding all finished and now if they could get a few good warm showers things would just hum. He says that about the usual amount of wheat has been sowed as well as oats and barley. No flax to speak of.

Hon. E. B. Lemmon received a box of strawberry and raspberry plants on Monday morning from Mr. Somerville's nursery, at Rochester. The senator says he has no trouble raising rasberries, got 100 quarts from a small patch last year and expects to double that yield this year from the same patch. He thinks a little palms in this direction pays a big interest.

Manager Hertz is treating the amusement loving public of this city to a grand revival of that famous spectacular drama, "The Black Crook." This production is exactly similar to that at the Academy of Music, New York, where the piece ran an entire year, and crowded houses greeted it at each performance.

This week will doubtless see the wheat all in throughout the county and most all of the oats, leaving flax to sow yet. This is somewhat earlier than last year when many could not commence sowing wheat before the 16th of May. The prospects are that not very much flax will be sown this year as no reliable seed can be procured and this seems a pity as flax promises to be far better than wheat. About the usual acreage has been sown in Polk county.

The strong features in "Black Crook," are the Children's Ballet, with its four clever pirouetts from Vienna; the three grand ballets and the celebrated French Quadrille Dancers. Among a host of European novelties are the Brothers Hosford, from the Circus Ciniselli, St. Petersburg, Russia. The splendors in the transformation scene are marvelous, include an illustration of the city of America, with a picture of the World's fair. We are to have it here Friday evening May 18th.

R. P. Pierce: "I wish the JOURNAL would suggest the passing of an ordinance forbidding farmers and others hitching teams on any business street, so to give the owners of such time full scving. As it is now a horse tearing through the street at full speed is liable to collide with a team hitched somewhere and somebody's gewns to be hurt first thing you know. And there is another ordinance that ought to be passed and that is one obliging pedestrians to keep off the sidewalks so as not to interfere with the riders of bicycles—who are very liable to get a tumble should they happen to collide with a pedestrian. These improvements are as sadly needed as are paved or gravelled streets."

Comrade F. B. Chapin, of Colchoute Post, Detroit, paid Col. Cobham Post a pleasant visit on Friday evening of last week, and gave the comrades a very entertaining talk. Among other things he spoke of how Col. Cobham Post is progressing. Says the comrades purchased a building awhile since and have it fixed up in good shape and are living rent free and having great times. Says Detroit was first discovered by old soldiers who made the first settlement there and old soldiers have naturally gravitated to that point. That they have a flourishing Post of over 60 members and their Post meetings are seasons of refreshment. The boys are well satisfied with the experiment of owning their own home and Comrade Chapin advised Col. Cobham Post to do the same thing.

O. H. Richardson: Speaking of hogs I believe farmers are making a big mistake again. Instead of selling pork now while it commands a good living price, every man I know is straining every nerve to save up a big drove of hogs for next fall, and the result will be successful enough to knock pork down to 3 or 3½ cents by next fall. Why I know lots of farmers who have big droves of hogs, but they cannot sell one unless they can get $2 or $3 cash planked down for it, and Pootles that the pig trade at these figures is not exceedingly thick. No doubt if these same farmers were willing to take what a four weeks old pig is really worth they could work off their surplus to good advantage. Unless there is a change in the methods of farmers I want to go on record as prophesying that pork will be a drag in this market next fall."

August George went down to Ada last Thursday, and returned on Saturday with his trotter.

The mother of Rev. H. H. Battey left Monday night for Salem, Oregon, where she will spend the summer with a couple of daughters.

Oscar Lindquest—just over from Denmark—has opened in the office of Probate Benson. He is a linguist as well as a Lhuquest, and speaks several languages fluently.

Collins Bros. delivery clerk ruptured a blood vessel while lifting a barrel on Tuesday. Dr. Just was called who fixed him up in good shape and left him feeling quite comfortable.

The funeral of John Locken took place on Friday, attended by a large concourse of people from far and near. The remains were taken to the old homestead in the town of Rooms for interment.

On Monday Dr. Dunlop went to Thief River Falls, where he assisted Dr. Dundy to re-set a limb for a man who had his leg broken last winter in the woods. On Tuesday Dunlop was summoned to Warren to attend a son of Mr. McIntyre, the landlord of the hotel at that place.

Will Himmelsbach: "I have 125 acres in flax this spring and a greater acreage in oats than usual, also double my usual acreage of barley and shall only sow 225 acres in wheat. Shall endeavor to have plenty pork for the fall market as I am beginning to have more confidence in other kinds of fruit except all wheat. Our flax was our best money crop last year and I believe it will be all right this year."

Chris Ingeberg came over on the N. P. train on Monday evening, and left on the Great Northern for Minneapolis. He has resigned his position in Grand Forks, will rest for a month and then go to Fergus, where he has a situation engaged. Chris had a severe wrestle with typhoid fever last winter, but is strong and hearty again. Says the half has never been told about the epidemic at the Forks last winter.

The Children's Ballet now being presented in "Black Crook," is a delightful feature of the incomparable revival of that famous spectacle. It is especially admired by ladies and children. During the last year's run of the drama in New York, at the Academy of Music, the Children's Ballet was a favorite feature of the performance. Every woman and child should see this interesting and beautiful ballet. It is booked here for May 18th.

Jim. Waring, Nick Funk, Nic Enschield, Nick Thoeson and Dick O'Brien were arraigned in Justice Gossman's court this week charged with the robbery of the freight car during the strike. A search of the premises of Jim Waring by officers revealed various and sundry articles supposed to have been taken from the car and when Jim was arrested he weakened and implicated the others. Waring, Funk and O'Brien were required to furnish bonds in the sum of $400 each or await trial in the county jail and the other two will appear before the justice for examination on Tuesday next. Steenerson and Ed. George appeared for the prisoners.

Superintendent of Schools, F. B. Chapin, of Becker county, was in the city on Friday on his way to visit schools in Beltrami county, which county is the way is under his charge. Mr. Chapin is one of the best superintendents in the state, has been for a long time in that office in Becker county, and as a result that county has a school system to be proud of. He is thoroughly competent, and takes great interest in the work, and that county will no doubt keep him in the work as long as he will consent to attend to it. He called at our den to talk up the good points of Billy Morrow for state auditor—but he need not have taken that trouble for Billy is already our second choice as we have known him for years.

Lawrence Larsen had a little circus down at Fertile last week. He went there to collect a balance due on a note given by J. S. Nichols to Larsen, Carpenter and Co. Mr. Nichols said he couldn't pay the note and refused to renew the paper. Whereupon Larsen proceeded to take the seeder with the help of a constable. Nichols' friends had gathered and were going to re-take the seeder by force. But Larsen slowly pulled a pop out of his pocket and the aggressors let the outfit go. They then had Larsen arrested on a complaint charging him with assault with a dangerous weapon with intent to kill. He was given a bonding and bound over. It looks as though Larsen had a nice little case against the people who interfered with an officer while discharging his duty—if he waits to push it.

Major Crumb visited the twin cities last week.

O. O. Christianson visited with friends in Ada this week.

Ed. George is in St. Paul this week on supreme court business.

Mr. and Mrs. Deforest Buckley welcomed a little girl at their home yesterday morning.

H. B. Loughlin and wife came up from Fisher to take in Monte Cristo on Tuesday evening.

Halvor Steenerson left for St. Paul on Tuesday evening, to attend to cases in the Supreme court.

Mrs. Smith a sister of Mrs. Frank Bivins, died at her home in Wabasha, of heart disease on Friday of last week.

Dr. M. Legnee was summoned to Beltrami on Wednesday to attend to some veterinary work at that point.

Mr. A. D. Tice and wife and Mrs. J. E. VanTuyl, were delegates from Mentor to the I. O. G. T. convention this week.

B. S. Chapin, Mrs. Hull and Miss Cruse, represented Warren in the Good Templars convention this week.

H. C. Misner sent a cow down for the butcher on Monday. The cow dressed over 600 pounds and brought $30.95.

Post Casey was down from Red Lake Falls last Saturday and purchased two beef cows from Dr. Chaplin.

Hugh Thompson drove out to the town of Hammond on Wednesday afternoon.

Gus Anderson and Carl Hvidsten, enterprising merchants in Argyle, attended the convention here Tuesday and Wednesday.

Mr. G. W. York, of Minneapolis, Grand Chief Templar of Minnesota I. O. G. T., was in the city attending the Good Templar Convention.

J. O. Bahn, of Mentor, who is now a Good Templar in good earnest, attended the convention as a delegate from his home lodge.

Pastor Smith will take for his subject next Sunday: "Quartet of Impossibilities." In the evening there will be a union meeting of the Polk County Bible Society. Secretary Evans of the American Bible Society will be here and deliver an address.

Among the ladies visiting the city and attending the Good Templar convention this week were, Misses McFarlane and McKenzie of Northcote, Misses LaDue, Cartright and Barboltz of Fertile, Mrs. Judge Hull and Miss Lease of Warren, Mrs. Bagrell of Argyle, Mrs. A. D. Tice and Mrs. Van Tuyl of Mentor.

It is rumored that Mrs. Lease is sick—threatened with tyhoid fever. What a disappointment that will be to some of our good pop brethren who expected to hear Mary Yellin in the opera house in the city some evening in the near future. Mrs. Martha Battey, Rev. R. H. Battey's mother, who has spent the winter here with her son and his family, took the N. P. passenger on Monday evening for Salem, Oregon, where she has two married daughters.

The banquet given by Crookston Lodge, No. 336, I. O. G. T. on Tuesday night was a most enjoyable affair. So said the sixty guests. The Good Templars are a happy set of folks, any way. When they do a thing they do it up brown.

Charlie Misner, while butting beneath two opinion-bicycle or equine, finally decided it should be a horse, so on Saturday last H. C. sent down Daisy from the farm, and the funny part of it was that on her arrival everybody in once recognized her—or appeared to as they all said: "Look at that Aint she a daisy?" But Chapin says: "Never mind, I'll fool you, fellows yet. I'll put her in a good pasture for a month and then you will see!" To our reporter he said confidentially: "To tell the truth I think Daisy has done enough hard work for us on the farm to entitle her to a lay off for the rest of her days so I persuaded H. C. to send her down to me and I mean that the old mare shall take it easy for the balance of her natural life." That is indeed a laudable resolve, but how few are ever think of that, in this busy world of ours. Charlie's idea is worthy of emulation

Ed. Ransom, a former resident of this city, has been endeavoring to organize a lodge of Modern Woodmen of America and has met with encouraging success, and will organize the Lodge on Monday evening, May 28th. He goes to Warren this week to organize a lodge there.

It is likely that a daily train service will be put on the Fosston branch for the summer months to accommodate visitors to Maple Lake. It is expected that the trains will run from Grand Forks, leaving there about 7 o'clock in the morning and returning about 3 p. m. The round trip rate to Mentor from Crookston has been reduced to $1, good only on Saturdays, to continue in effect till August 28th.

Holston had Better be Careful.

The Tribune advises the followers of Donnelly to "avoid fusion with democrats like a pestilence." Holston should remember the fate of Dr. Fish, who persistently advocated the same doctrine and Donnelly drove him out of the state. Donnelly favored fusion, and the Democrats, Doc Fish fought it and Donnelly became his bitter enemy and after Fish had gone to South Dakota, as a result of the row Donnelly says of him:

"And there is no artesian well hole in South Dakota into which Fish can crawl deep enough to hide him from the scorn and contempt of all honest men."

Donnelly is still persistently laying the wires for fusion, and Holston has the temerity to object and that program. Holston better have a cure or pretty quick there wont be a hole big enough for him to crawl into. He had better remember the fact that Donnelly is the populist party, and the populist party is Donnelly, if he don't want to go to South Dakota—and oblivion.

Affects the Saloons.

There will not be as many saloons in Crookston during the coming year as heretofore. They have all been able to wear on the times until the time has come for them to renew their licenses, and although it is not known how many will be able to produce the $500 required by the city in order that they may continue in business another year, it is certain there will be several less.

Wm. Crouin will move out of the Commercial hotel into the building vacated by K. K. Austin. John Bergquist has closed his place on Main street and has gone in with his brother on Robert street. The saloon in the Central house has not been opened since the fire in the hotel and probably will not be opened up again. The place on Fletcher street will probably be closed, and it is said Hilla's place on Second street will also be shut up. G. M. Huot has closed his place and formed a partnership with Wm. Crouin.

CHAPTER I.

THE PATIENT.

A fixed and changeless expression. A single sentiment in the dark eyes, rising restlessly from one serious face to the other. A single sentiment in the timid trembling of the pale lips, in the expression of the delicate nostrils, in the nervous contraction of the brows that accompany it.

For a mind which betrays itself in a countenance such as this, all the possibilities of existence, all that remains of life and happiness, can be summed up in one terrible word—fear. Henceforth this was all that the infinite world of thought and all the endless pleasure of being could mean to this poor creature. In the midst of the sunshine, the free air, the song of the birds, the whisper of lovers, the voices of friendship, she must continue to live on as unconscious of them all as if her life had been narrowed down to the darkest dungeon of an inquisition.

To deprive a face that beams with intelligence and beauty of the one light that makes it priceless, to blot out in the twinkling of an eye that unmeasured universe that exists in the brain of an individual and leave in its place a solitary candle like this glimmering in the night—what a measureless crime! And such a crime has been committed. Does it add anything to the depth of the infamy or to the burden of the guilt that the poor victim was but 19 and had been crushed in the fullness of health and strength?

The patient sat on the edge of the bed from which she had lately arisen in an alcove chamber opening into a large apartment, furnished like a sitting room. Two grave and interested physicians, one gray haired and advanced in years, the other of middle age, were watching her. There was no evidence that either of these men comprehended anything of the unutterable pathos of the situation. Their problem was merely a physiological one. The moral aspects of the case concerned them only where they aided a diagnosis. The ceaseless, uneasy motion of the poor girl's hands, clasping and unclasping themselves in her lap, the pathetic cry, without an attempt at articulation, that she uttered from time to time, these were the matters that interested them.

"I have observed a very curious thing," the elder physician was saying. "It is possible, of course, that I may be mistaken, but if I am not then this girl possesses a certain curious power in a remarkable degree."

The younger man repeated the phrase with no little wonder, "A curious power?"

"Yes, a very curious power, I should say, of which, for want of a better term, I will call optical retension. You know, what I mean?"

"No."

"I mean the faculty of retaining a scene in the mind after the eyes are closed or the scene removed. We all have it in varying degrees. You mention the writing table at my office, and immediately an image, tolerably distinct, of the size, shape and general appearance of the table rises before my mental vision. I mean simply, if this girl were familiar with the looks of that table and she could be made to understand what I am talking about, she would see the object in question so vividly that it would be to her almost the reality—perhaps, I might say, practically the reality."

The younger physician regarded the speaker in silent wonder.

"You don't take my meaning?"

"Oh, perfectly! My term for it is visualization. What puzzles me is that you should see any evidences of it here. What has she done to show it?"

"Not any one thing so much as everything. I generalize it from a careful observation of her movements."

"Do you call it a symptom?"

"No—that is, I don't know. It may be abnormal, or it may be natural to her in a state of health. I have studied several cases, the very young child who could find his way unerringly about a familiar place blindfolded. His faculty called it instinct, but it was simply a phenomenal power of retaining the picture of the room in his mind, combined with an accurate idea of distance. Unseen by him, I disarranged the furniture, and he lost his head at once."

"Yes, but I didn't suppose an idiot could possess such a faculty."

"Nor I. But is this an idiot?"

"Hum—ha"—The younger physician was altogether too cautious to commit himself, but he fixed upon the pale face of the patient a look of doubt and uncertainty that was plain enough of itself. He shrank as much as did his gray haired colleague from the humiliating confession. "I don't understand the case at all."

The elder physician was certainly in no haste to pronounce a verdict. Called for the purpose of aiding his younger associate to arrive at a positive conclusion as to the nature of the mysterious malady under which the patient suffered, he had as yet refrained from expressing an opinion, and now he spoke in the most guarded and cautious manner.

"It seems to me, Lamar, that the problem in this case narrows itself down to a question as to whether the patient's present condition is due to the blow she is known to have received upon the head or to the purely mental results of the terror caused by the accident."

"Surely," said the younger man, "you do not wish me to understand that you believe it even possible that such a condition should be the result of simple terror or any mere mental action of any kind. It seems almost certain to me that there was some structural or functional disorder prior to the accident."

"Very possibly. I did not say to the contrary. Some of her symptoms almost indicate a pressure on the brain, but a long experience in an accident hospital has made me wary of jumping to a conclusion when the symptoms are so vague and unpronounced. I have known such widely different and unexpected mental states to result from the slight incident to a loss of consciousness, under a pressure of excitement, that I am almost ready to attribute any abnormal mental state to the shock or the terror, pure and simple. Last year we had a man who had been thrown from a carriage while his horses were running away. The man completely recovered, but he always persisted in a denial that he had ever gone out to ride. The accident robbed him of his memory, not only of the time after he fainted, but of the time preceding that event by some hours. He never has been and undoubtedly never will be able to recall that time. Three or four years ago I was called to attend a lunatic who had been troubled with a suicidal mania. He had at last succeeded in eluding the vigilance of his keepers and had hung himself. We restored him, and he has been the sanest of same men since. I have seen a person absolutely an idiot from fright. You have doubtless yourself noted insanity or mania from that cause. In view of these facts I say it is well to think twice before dismissing that hypothesis in a case like this."

The younger man listened attentively, but he did not seem convinced.

"Donteleus terror is a powerful factor—sometimes," he said, "but nevertheless I do not see how it can be all in this case. The patient is not exactly an idiot, and in a very sure that in her way she thinks."

The older physician made no reply, but he laughed inaudibly.

"I do not mean that she can follow a conscious train of thought, but that there is an unconscious intercourse, so to speak, which never rises into consciousness. It is the upper surface of the mind only that establishes itself in intelligence, and in my opinion there is something more than reflex action in the great undercurrent that flows on in its little waves, the tops of which only we call reason. This mind is not dead, even though it appears to be."

The elder physician looked both puzzled and amused.

"I am afraid, Lamar," he said, "you read too much Herbert Spencer and are inclined to ignore us plain fellows."

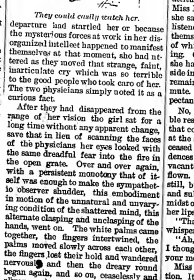
The younger man shrugged his shoulders at this mild sarcasm, and he answered without the least show of sensitiveness:

"At any rate, you would not object to trying an experiment with me?"

"Certainly not."

"Very well. Let us conceal ourselves. I believe that our presence irritates her."

The younger man arose from the chair in which he had been sitting and went into the larger room. The gray haired physician followed him. They retired into the farthest corner and concealed themselves from the patient's view behind a curtained bed, where, by slightly disarranging the drapery, they could easily watch her. Either because their departure had startled her or because the mysterious forces at work in her disorganized intellect began to manifest themselves at that moment, she had ceased as they moved that strange, faint, inarticulate cry which was so terrible to the good people who took care of her. The two physicians simply noted it as a curious fact.



They could easily watch her.

After they had disappeared from the range of her vision the girl sat for a long time without any apparent change, save that in lieu of scanning the faces of the physicians her eyes looked with the same dreadful fear into the fire in the grate. Over and over again, with a persistent monotony that of itself was enough to make the sympathetic observer shudder, this embodiment in motion of the unnatural and unvarying condition of the shattered mind, this alternate clasping and unclasping of the hands, went on. The white palms came together, the fingers interwined, the palms moved slowly across each other, the fingers lost their hold and wandered nervously and then the dreary round began again, and so on, ceaselessly and always.

"Is she never still?" the elder physician asked.

"Never wholly so. Nervous motion of some sort is necessary. Nothing but actual interference from without will stop it, even for an instant."

It happened then that an external interference unexpectedly occurred to illustrate the practitioner's statement. A cat, which had been curled up by the fireside, crossed the floor and sprang into the girl's lap. With a repetition of the peculiar cry and a sudden cessation of the dominant expression in her face, the patient started to her feet. The cat jumped down and ran away. The girl gave no heed to his departure. Her gaze was fixed immovably on the spot where she had seen him, and she continued uninterruptedly for several minutes to move her hands as if driving from some palpable object which persisted in remaining in her lap.

"She sees the cat still!" whispered the elder physician. "Just as I thought. The impression produced on the retina by an object that startles her is destined to leave her even after its departure. This is a more remarkable case than I had deemed possible. But there is no evidence that she thinks at all."

"Not as we think. No."

Gradually the repulsing motion of the hands gave place to the old nervous clasping and unclasping. The time was when the poor creature seemed to forget the special terror caused by the cat in the general dread with which it had inspired her. But she still continued to stand.

"Think!" murmured the elder physician. "Why, she doesn't even know enough to sit down when she is tired."

In truth, at that moment the girl began to sway violently, and had not the foremost physician gone promptly to her assistance she would probably have fallen.

"Her limbs are too weak to stand so long," said the younger man. "But don't put her to bed yet. I want to try an experiment."

"Of what nature?"

"Simply to see what effect music will have. I have known downright idiots, who responded to no human appeal or provocation than the sight of food, to have their interest visibly aroused by the sound of a musical instrument. Miss Maxey will favor us with a few selections. I'll speak to her."

He rapped at the door of his adjoining chamber and exchanged a few words with the person who responded. In a few minutes a pretty young girl with black eyebrows and a damask color in her cheeks had taken her seat at the piano. The two physicians had retired to their former position behind the bed curtains, and the patient, as before, sat on the edge of her bed.

"What shall I play?" the young lady asked.

"Something loud and energetic."

There was a rustling of leaves, and then the dreamy opening chords of a Liszt rhapsody made the house tremble to the mantel. The sounds startled the patient as a blow would have done. The dark eyes seemed to grow; distended, the pale lips quivered more perceptibly with the utterance of that inarticulate cry, the pitiful all that was left to her of speech and speech. But she seemed to realize the origin of her fright. Her glance went immediately in the direction of the piano and remained there, fascinated, as if she momentarily expected some unknown horror to rise up out of the cheerful red cover which adorned the case of the instrument. And such a constant was the forlorn monotony of the moving hands interrupted. Nevertheless the younger physician seemed encouraged.

"We've got her attention. Now let us change our humor. No more of that kind, please, Miss Maxey. Something quieter and more soothing."

Miss Maxey chose a volume of Beethoven and began a performance which the clasping hands still moved; the dark eyes still watched for the coming of the unknown horror, but there was a change in the indescribable details that went to make up the dominant expression of the patient's face—slight, gradual, hardly perceptible except to practiced eyes detecting it—but still a change.

The younger man whispered energetically, "She's listening!"

Slowly, so slowly that it seemed an age to those who hoped to see the end, the clinging fingers forgot to separate themselves and take up the monotony of the heretofore incessant motion of the nervous hands became less and less; ceased altogether; the palms rested against each other, quite still.

The younger physician's growing excitement could restrain itself no longer.

"See!" he cried. "She sits quite motionless! Is it the first time in days. And there is another mean now that she does not yet tried. Won't you sing to us, Miss Maxey? Sing us the most tender and pathetic thing you know."

The sound of the piano stopped abruptly. But the patient did not change her attitude. In all the many minutes that Miss Maxey was searching for the song, she sat, seemingly unmoved, as if she listened still. The men of science found themselves in the presence of something of which their books made no mention. Gradually, as the music went on, she had inclined her head a little to one side in the poise of a listener. She still remained, now that the instrument was mute. It was hardly the posture of expectation.

No, it seemed more as though the feeble response of the mysterious faculty that could rise up in a mind such as hers, save that in lieu of scanning the faces of the physicians her eyes looked with the same dreadful fear into the fire in the grate. Last year we had a man who had been thrown from a carriage while his horses were running away. The man completely recovered, but he always persisted in a denial that he had ever gone out to ride. The accident robbed him of his memory, not only of the time after he fainted, but of the time preceding that event by some hours. He never has been and undoubtedly never will be able to recall that time. Three or four years ago I was called to attend a lunatic who had been troubled with a suicidal mania. He had at last succeeded in eluding the vigilance of his keepers and had hung himself. We restored him, and he has been the sanest of same men since. I have seen a person absolutely an idiot from fright. You have doubtless yourself noted insanity or mania from that cause. In view of these facts I say it is well to think twice before dismissing that hypothesis in a case like this."

The younger man listened attentively, but he did not seem convinced.

"Dontelesu terror is a powerful factor—sometimes," he said, "but nevertheless I do not see how it can be all in this case. The patient is not exactly an idiot, and in a very sure that in her way she thinks."

The older physician made no reply, but he laughed inaudibly.

"I do not mean that she can follow a conscious train of thought, but that there is an unconscious intercourse, so to speak, which never rises into consciousness. It is the upper surface of the mind only that establishes itself in intelligence, and in my opinion there is something more than reflex action in the great undercurrent that flows on in its little waves, the tops of which only we call reason. This mind is not dead, even though it appears to be."

The elder physician looked both puzzled and amused.

"I am afraid, Lamar," he said, "you read too much Herbert Spencer and are inclined to ignore us plain fellows."

The younger man shrugged his shoulders at this mild sarcasm, and he answered without the least show of sensitiveness:

"At any rate, you would not object to trying an experiment with me?"

"Certainly not."

"Very well. Let us conceal ourselves. I believe that our presence irritates her."

The younger man arose from the chair in which he had been sitting and went into the larger room. The gray haired physician followed him. They retired into the farthest corner and concealed themselves from the patient's view behind a curtained bed, where, by slightly disarranging the drapery, they could easily watch her. Either because their

CHAPTER II.

A HALT IN THE ROAD.

"You are an artist," said the man on the front seat of the sleigh, turning about that he might talk more easily with the young man who sat beside the pretty girl on the rear seat. "You are an artist. What do you think of the workmanship of this?"

He had taken from an inner pocket a small leather case, which he now passed to his companion. When the young man had brought to light the contents, he held in his hand a medallion, set in a jeweled frame—a medallion upon the convex surface of which was graven the effective features of a handsome woman. The work was so delicate, the setting so rich, the effect of the whole so exquisite that the artist involuntarily uttered a cry of pleasure.

"Why, this is really admirable, Lamar! What is it? Where did you get it?"

The man in the front seat answered in a voice as cold and unemotional as a machine's.

"Inasmuch as this is the woman whom I am to marry, I thought a tolerably fair colorlessness of her face would be interesting to my friends."

The pretty girl, who had been admiring the dainty medallion, became, as he spoke, somewhat pale.

"Oh," she said in a constrained, conventional way, "this is Mrs. Forsythe."

"Mrs. Forsythe," assented the man on the front seat.

"She is very pretty," said the girl in the same tone.

But she spoke she put the medallion quickly into the hand of the young man who sat beside her and averted her head.

"Another choice," exclaimed the man on the front seat as he bridled the two, glancing at a fork in the white road preceding. "Shall we take the middle road direct or go by the roundabout sea road? We shall see more life by the first way, but we shall have the fresh breeze and plenty of cold wind by the second. Which will it be, Ellen?"

"Which shall it be, Ellen?" repeated the young man to the pretty girl.

"It makes no difference to me."

"Then let us have the sea road and the sleighing. We are in no hurry, and I know that you love it."

"Jacta est alea. The sea road it shall be."

The sleighing party was now within eight miles of the city, the location of which was marked by a vague glow in the misty sky. Gradually the laughter had ceased and words had become infrequent. The bells on the horses jingled in merry accord, and the rapid beat of the hoofs on the hard crust came to the ear through the biting air in the same inspiriting pulsations, but for all that it was a cold riding after sundown along the sea road, with the bitter breath from the darkening ocean full in the face.

Every moment the fences and hedgerows were becoming more indistinct, and the dreary white landscape seemed to the observers and the fading streak in the west, where the sun had lately been, was rapidly losing all significance or intelligibility as a prospect. Truly the Rustic Lamar had forgotten the flight of time in his enjoyment of the exhilarating sport, or he had easily miscalculated the distance. Not that there was anything to be dreaded in the ordinary course of events of a ride in the pale light of the three mellow rays of the moon. The road was a good one, and very soon it would be well lighted. And if the three pleasure seekers were a little cold they could console themselves with the comforting reflection that there was a cheerful fire waiting for them in the agreeable sitting room of the apartment flat at 20 Ballaroine place. It was not an absolute affair, this shade of Julian Maxey, the artist, but it was a pleasant, interesting and certainly on a cold night like this very comfortable and desirable place in which to be.

Perhaps it was not owing altogether to the cold that an unwonted silence had fallen upon the occupants of the sleigh. Ellen Maxey, the artist's sister, who sat beside her brother on the rear seat, had dealt a deathblow to the conversation when she ceased to take part in it. But she was not asleep, and her face, protected from view by abundant wraps and the growing obscurity, had gradually settled into an expression at once wistful, pathetic and resigned.

Maxey, whose power of observation was not wholly a matter of eyesight, had become annoyed and solicitous, but he took pains not to betray the fact.

As for philosophic, middle aged, Rustic Lamar, his prime cause of the whole trouble, he was supremely unconscious of any unhappiness on the part of his friends. He sat bolt upright all by himself on the front seat, his hands busy with the reins and his attention apparently completely absorbed in scanning the road as far as he could see in front of his swift team. The truth is that Dr. Lamar had blundered and unwittingly touched upon a topic exceedingly disagreeable to his friends behind him when he mentioned his approaching marriage with the wealthy Widow Forsythe.

If Dr. Lamar had only known how fine and handsome he appeared in his pretty neighbor's eyes, how he had astonished him a great deal, and he would discreet in his remarks. The pretty Ellen Maxey had imagined how well her keen and penetrating brother had guessed her secret, undoubtedly she would have been stimulated a great deal of glee and merriment by a disquieting undercurrent to have thrown him off the scent, for the heart beats promptly in the breast of a girl like her, and this was such a secret as she would wish might die with her.

They were all young. The doctor was the oldest, and he had barely reached 40. He was a brilliant young man who had made something of a name in the medical world by a recent remarkable publication, and whose practice was already established on a firm basis.

Julian Maxey was 28. He had painted several hundred very unsuccessful pictures. Their merit, however, was pleasingly recognized by his friends, by reason of which accomplishment he was called an artist. He was troubled to keep up his nonlucrative pursuit and to satisfy the craving in his soul for counterfeiting the beautiful by a comfortable annuity which he had inherited from his grandmother.

Miss Maxey was 24. Since the death of her parents she had held the proud though exacting position of her brother's housekeeper, in which there was only one other place in the world she would have been better satisfied to occupy.

The sleighing party, which had been merry bells jingled and the steam spoored rhythmically in four evanescent streams from their nostrils, and the feet falls beat time on the hard crust. The distinct black shadow settled down slowly over the sea and the land, but there was a growing flush in the east which might herald a coming moon, and a fading glow in the west which denoted a departed sun, but these were but poor substitutes for a wayfarer groping in the dark, and the stars crowded, shivering by a pale mist, were puny candles against the obscuration of the deepening gloom.

On went the mettled span toward the fatal halt in the heavens made by the distant city, held up to their steady gait by a right rein in the doctor's guiding hand and encouraged by an occasional reinforcement of the whip, accidentally sent from the base of the cliff into the darkness above by a sudden start of fright, grew more inky from moment to moment, and the flaring white landscape upon the left became indistinct and soon entirely incomplete.

Still the four sporting clouds of steam and still the merry jingling of bells and hoofs beats.

All at once there is a break in the rhythm of the hoof beats. From a steady, onward movement the slight the sleigh suddenly moves laterally and almost stops with a jerky abruptness, narrowly escapes overturning, trembles, jars, recovers its even joint and moves ahead again.

"What was that?" asked Julian Maxey.

Dr. Lamar was on his feet, and his strong arms were reining in the frightened horses. In another minute he was out in the snow, running beside them, clinging to the bridle. A plunge, a snort, a shiver, a great jingling of the bells, and the sleigh had come to a standstill.

"Whoa, Polly! Gently, Dolly!" said the doctor, persuasively soothing the noises of the trembling and greatly frightened animals, while his two companions, who had jumped into a snow bank, struggled out into the road and began to put themselves to rights.

"Now, what the deuce do you suppose made those horses shy so?"

"There is something back there on the road, I am very positive," said Ellen.

"And I—I thought I saw somebody jump over the fence and run across the field," added the sister.

"What you saw on the road were the old scissors on the edge of the cliff probably," said Dr. Lamar, "and you, Miss Somerset summer hotel is just back of us here, and in the warm weather there is a row of seats just above the bath houses by the roadside. I noticed what I took to be the gangway leading down to the beach just before the horses jumped."

"Oh, no. What I saw was in the middle of the road," insisted the artist. "But it's only a minute's work to find out." He turned back.

The doctor ejaculated: "Pshaw, what does it matter? We're wasting time!"

"No. I am sure there's something wrong!" exclaimed Miss Maxey.

"Wrong!" echoed the physician. "What an idea! You surprise me, Miss Maxey. I didn't know you were so easily alarmed."

"I was right," called the voice of Maxey a little tremulously. "See this."

They dimly saw him standing in the road outlined against the sky, holding up a shapeless something to their view.

"What is it?"

"A woman's shawl."

Miss Maxey cried out in alarm: "We must go back at once. I know something is wrong. I felt it before we reached it."

"Absurd!" exclaimed the doctor.

But Miss Maxey did not wait to hear the comment. She had already rejoined SAILORS GO DOWN.

STORM ON THE GREAT LAKES THE WORST IN YEARS.

Eight Vessels Went Ashore Within the City Limits of Chicago, and Ten Men Known to Have Been Lost—Schooner M. J. Cummings Wrecked at Milwaukee and Six of Her Crew Went Down.

CHICAGO, May 19.—Thousands of spectators watched from the lake shore the destruction of a craft that had been beached during the storm of Friday and Friday night. At 27th street the McLaren was pounding to pieces 30 yards from the shore, and her destruction will be complete before the surf ceases. The body of Joseph Stahlan, mate, was still on the wreck. He was killed on the vessel by falling spars.

Three wrecks were rolling in the breakers at 25th street. The Thompson has stood the strain fairly well and will not be broken to pieces by the waves. Nothing but the hull of the Evening Star remained after the heavy sea of this night. A few yards away the shattered hull of the Mercury was rapidly going to pieces, and

Will Be a Total Loss.

Half a mile from shore, off Twenty-second street, two vessels were laboring in the sea. One was thought to be the D. S. Austin, commanded by Captain Cassidy and manned by a crew of six. Four could i seen in the rigging. The vessel was apparently in little danger of destruction. About 200 yards farther another and smaller schooner was riding out the storm. Her condition appeared worse than that of the others, and the indications were that she was water-logged. The 27 men on the north crib, who were unable to reach land, hauled down their distress signal and signalled that they were all right. The men at the other cribs telephoned that they were safe.

A Total of Eight.

Eight vessels were wrecked within the city limits of Chicago and 10 men are known to be drowned, and in every instance boat and cargo are utterly lost. One schooner, the Myrtle, was wrecked just outside the government pier within a half mile of Michigan boulevard and six men of her crew went down to death in plain view of the hundreds of people who lined the inclosed walks or watched the awful storm from the windows of the big hotels which overlook the harbor. The wrecks extended from Glencoe, on the north, where the Lincoln D-ll went to pieces, to South Chicago, an air line distance of 40 miles.

AT MILWAUKEE.

Schooner M. J. Cummings Wrecked and Six Lives Lost.

MILWAUKEE, May 19.—Hanging to the rigging of the schooner M. J. Cummings, just south of Milwaukee lighthouse are the bodies of a woman and a man, the former the steward and the latter a sailor. Four others, including the captain, have been drowned, and Ons, Robert Peterson, a sailor, is saved. It was the fiercest storm that has swept the west shore of Lake Michigan since the crib disaster two years ago, when 14 lives were lost.

The Cummings and the schooner C. Barnee tried to enter the harbor early in the day and failed to make the piers and were soon driving towards the beach on Jones island. An unsuccessful attempt was made by the lifeboat crew to rescue all of the crew of the Cummings, but they were nearly drowned in the attempt, the lifeboat being overturned, the crew escaping almost miraculously. The crew of the Barnes escaped, and the vessel can be released.

YAWL CAPSIZED.

Four of a Rescuing Crew Drowned Near Port Huron, Mich.

PORT HURON, Mich., May 19.—The tug C. D. Thompson left here at 9 a. m. with a rescuing party in a yawl, and attempted to reach the schooner Schnpe. They found the Schupe on a sand reef six miles north of here, and about a quarter mile from shore. The yawl left the tug and finally reached the wreck. The pushing from the yawl was taken by the crew aboard the Schnpe, when the yawl capsized, throwing the wh party into the water. There were five of them, and all were drowned except Dan Lyon, who swam ashore and was taken out of the water nearly exhausted. The plan was to go to the wreck and take a line back to the tug or to the shore as might seem more feasible. The crew of the Schupe are all alive on board.

THE SKY FOR A ROOF.

Over Two Thousand Boston People Evicted by Flames.

BOSTON, May 15.—By the torch of an incendiary over $1,000,000 worth of property is in ashes, over 250 families of the medium and poorer classes consisting of over 2,000 people, are homeless, and many of them who had time to save a portion of their household furniture are sleeping in the open air. Women with babes in their arms and little children huddled close together, have only the sky for a roof and the few mattresses saved from the burned tenements for a bed, and no prospects of a breakfast in the morning. The fire and as far as can be learned only six persons have been injured and none fatally.

The fire started in the Boston League park in a pile of lumber which was lying under the right field bleachers.

An Anarchist Executed.

PARIS, May 21.—Emil Henry, the author of the explosion in the cafe of the Hotel Terminus, was guillotined at 6:14 a. m. As Henry emerged from the prison gates he shouted, "Vive la Anarchie," which he repeated just before was thrown on the guillotine. This as no disorder.

THE LAND OF RUBBER

IMMENSE WEALTH IN THE FORESTS OF MADAGASCAR.

The Concession to Ex-Consul Waller May Mean Much to Americans—Resources of the Island—Queer Customs of the Natives.

The discovery of a new rubber tree in Madagascar a year or so ago has proved a big bonanza for the natives and worked a commercial revolution in the island. Small traders whose most avaricious dreams formerly did not exhand beyond the possession of a few hundred piasters as the result of 15 or 20 years of hard work have suddenly achieved comparative riches and the price of raw rubber has been quintupled by the keen competition of purchasers. If the reported concession to John L. Waller, ex-United States consul at Tamatave, be confirmed, it is likely to make a great change in our trade relations with the Malagasian kingdom and may lead to some interesting diplomatic complications with France.

The French have for several years exercised a sort of protectorate over the country and are very jealous of other foreigners gaining any influence in its councils. This jealousy is particularly marked in the case of Americans, for our consul is the only foreign representative who takes his exequatur directly from the queen's government, thus acknowledging her as the ruler of the island. The other consuls take their exequaturs from the French representatives, though the island does not belong to France, and the French are quite powerless in its domestic affairs. They have considerable influence, however, in determining the foreign policy of the country and maintain there a resident general with a military suit, though the Madagascar government refuses to recognize their right to do so.

Madagascar is now nominally ruled by the native queen, Ranavulona III, a woman of 33 years, who succeeded to the throne in 1883 and the same year married her prime minister. The government is an absolute monarchy, in which the prime minister usually manages the sovereign and makes puppets of his subordinate ministers.

The prime minister, who rejoices in the simple and euphonious name of Rainilaiarivony, is not of royal blood. He is a shrewd old fellow, more than 60 years of age and very much alive. He came to power by assassinating the predecessor during the reign of the previous queen.

It has always been the rule that the prime minister should be the husband of the queen. The former queen was married to the predecessor of the present prime minister.

Another curious custom of the island is the compulsory duty imposed by the queen on all the foreign members of her court to render service once a month at her table. All these gentlemen carry rice and chicken to her majesty. They have the further pleasure of crawling on their knees before her once a month in the throneroom. On this occasion the queen sits on a throne and wears a solid gold crown which weighs 4¾ pounds.

Few people realize the vast area of Madagascar. It is the largest island in the world, counting Australia among the continents. Its greatest length is 400 miles, with an average width of 250 miles, and the population is variously estimated at from 1,000,000 to 1,200,000. The general name of the inhabitants is Malagasy, but they are divided into at least 45 tribes. It is a popular idea that the Malagasy are negroes. As a matter of fact, they are Malays.

There are wide differences between the tribes. The most numerous are the Sakalavas, who constitute about a third of the population and are most warlike and savage of any of the island peoples. They are averse to civilization. They are not cannibals, but they are naturally lazy and stupid. They have a fine physique and average over 6 feet in height, but they are by far the darkest aborigines from much mixing with the slave population.

The Hovas, the second largest tribe on the island, comprise less than a fourth of the whole population. They are much smaller than the Sakalavas, averaging only a little above 5 feet. They have straight, regular features and are very kindly to civilization. They are intelligent and quick to learn and have preserved the strong feeling of caste that exists among the natives of India. The Hovas are the ruling tribe, all the kings and queens of Madagascar having been Hovas. The Hovas do not mix largely with the other tribes, and their dark hair is straight, long, fine and abundant, while that of the Sakalavas is kinky, though it cannot be called woolly.

The concession granted to Mr. Waller is said to cover 325 square miles of the southern part of the island and to include the right to cut other valuable timber as well as the rubber tree. Mr. Waller, it will be remembered, was a prominent colored Republican of Kansas City and was appointed consul at Tamatave, the principal port of Madagascar, by President Harrison.

DISASTROUS FLOODS.

Pennsylvania Rivers Higher Than Any Time Since 1889

JERSEY SHORE, Pa., May 20.—Wind, rain and storm are causing grave trouble throughout this entire section. It has rained heavily, almost incessantly, since last Wednesday, and now there is a 20-foot flood on this branch of the Susquehanna river and it is expected to reach a height only equaled by the great flood of June, 1889, and may even exceed that, as at this hour the river is rising at the rate of one foot an hour. The water is now standing on Main street in this city. At Reuovo, Lockhaven, Jersey Shore and Williamsport the residents are moving to the second floors of their homes and merchants are all busy moving their goods to places of safety. Many families are leaving the towns and by going to the hills. At Williamsport there is a 29-foot flood and water is now rising at the rate of more than a foot an hour. The report from there is that the great boom, which contains 160,000,000 feet of logs, will break in a flood of 26 feet. This will be a terrible calamity, and the rain caused by such a disaster cannot be told. All the documents and valuable papers have been removed from the county offices and taken to places of safety. At Philipsburg the water is already higher than it was in the flood of June, 1889. At Clearfield the Beech Creek railroad is under water, which is higher than it has been for many years.

Seeking Safety From Floods

ENTIRE TOWN FLOODED.

The Susquehanna River at Williamsport Shows a Rise of Thirty-five Feet.

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa., May 21.—The flood reached its maximum at 8 o'clock, when it was 35 feet above low water mark on the river register, and was eight feet on the pavement of the courthouse in the center of the city. For an hour the water hung at that point, and then to the unspeakable relief of the thousands of anxious hearts it began slowly to recede. At 8 o'clock it had fallen a foot and was still going down, slowly to be sure, but surely enough to lift a terrible load from a multitude of hearts. The river has made a new record—35 feet above low water. A million and a half in property has been destroyed but so far as can be learned no lives have been lost. To give the losses in detail will be impossible. It cannot be even approximated and the estimate of a $1,500,000 is very conservative.

WATERS RECEDING.

Flood in Central Pennsylvania Now on the Wane.

PHILADELPHIA, May 21. — Advices from the flooded districts indicate that the storm has spent its fury and that the waters have begun to fall in those localities where the danger has seemed greatest. Sunbury is threatened with complete inundation as the water there is rising very fast. At Reuovo and Lockhaven the flood is rapidly receding and no further apprehension is felt. The same is true of Shamokin, Duncanner and other points which have been visited by the flood. Railroad communication, which has been greatly impaired is being restored, and, while there is a fresh rainfall of considerable dimensions, the flood in the central portion of the state may be said to be on the wane.

THE Minneapolis Tribune, a weekly, has a warning to the farmers of Minnesota to look out for the "green goods" men. It says that a number of these fellows have been operating in the state, and that they have been successful in getting money from the farmers. The Tribune says that the farmers are not the only ones who are victimized by these sharks, but that many business men have been caught by them. The Tribune says that the men who are working the game are "slick fellows, who are well dressed, and who have the appearance of prosperous business men. They are plausible talkers, and have no trouble in getting the confidence of their victims. They are generally strangers in the town where they operate, and they usually work in pairs. They have a scheme which they work to perfection, and which is as old as the hills. They have a package of worthless stuff which they sell for a large sum, and they have a scheme for getting rid of it which is very plausible. They are generally gone before the victim has had time to realize that he has been swindled. SIMULTANEOUS with the news of a big snow storm in Kentucky, comes the report that W. C. Breckenridge has decided to pull out of the congressional race. He probably thought if a few of his speeches would have such a cold effect he would be completely snowed under by election day. It is said that the son Desha will be the congressional candidate in lieu of the old man.

THE Pertile Journal trots out the name of A. R. Holston for congress, and says: "Mr. Holston would harmonize all the discordant elements in the party and lead us to a sure victory in November." Jes so. But you can't nominate him let alone electing him. You will have to take Boen, or Lammen or Andrew Steenerson and that fact will dawn upon your inner consciousness later on. Holston is too good a man for you to send to congress—you need him at home, and you will keep him there never fear.

THE Tribune man is getting nervous over the great number of candidates developing, fearful least the offices will not hold out, and sounds a note of warning to the faithful to beware of accessions from the ranks of democrats and republicans. He says that he understands that there is to be a regular begin from the ranks of the old parties this fall and that it is only caused by an itch for office. They are only going to join the pops to get an office—something that their own ability precludes them obtaining in the old parties." Well, Holston may be right: he certainly ought to be good authority on that question.

THE schemers who are trying to split Polk county into four parts are depending largely upon prejudice to carry thier point. For instance they will point to the grasping disposition of some business man in Crookston and advise farmers to cut loose from Crookston, because of the aforesaid man's bogishness! Just as if human nature would not be the same in any new county seat they might create, and just as if the changing of county lines would change human nature. The kind of men they complain of, as a rule are tied to no particular place and can go anywhere at a moment's notice, and will do it if any place offers better inducements for business. To fast the very men they complain of are themselves, either secretly or openly in favor of the scheme. It does not require a very deep mind to figure out the fact that four counties will cost at least twice as much to run as a one big one. And who is benefitted? Certainly not the furnisher who will bear the burden of taxation.

Minneapolis Journal: The Seventh Congressional district, that two years ago returned H. E. Boen, a populist, by a plurality of only 83, is getting ready to swing into the republican column this year, and one of the indications of the change is the number of republicans who are willing to take the nomination and make the fight. The populists will, with out doubt, re-nominate Boen, and the democrats will as surely endorse him. For the republican nomination there are mentioned S. G. Comstock, of Moorhead; Henry Feig, of Alexander; E. T. Young, of Appleton, and Halvor Steenerson, of Crookston. At this distance from the scene of action it looks as if Steenerson would get the place. Mr. Steenerson is a Norwegian and perhaps the ablest lawyer in the northern part of the district. He has a very strong following and his friends are claiming that he will be nominated on the first ballot.

THE JOURNAL can heartily endorse the above. Mr. Steenerson is not only an able lawyer, but an able speaker, a deep thinker and an earnest worker, and a man who could accomplish some good for his district. He would not only make a good run for the office, but would be an honor to his district if elected. He would lead straight to the ticket, and could do effective work on the stump. And among the Scandinavians in the Seventh district is where much work will be needed next fall.

But Mr. Steenerson has already intimated that he would not make a fight for the nomination. He has an exceedingly lucrative law practice—worth more than a congressman's salary—and he is not anxious to throw away a business which has taken years to build up, to accept a term in congress. But should Mr. Steenerson's friends place him in the field—and give him the nomination—he would undoubtedly be elected.

THE populist county convention, which is called for June 29th, will be entitled to 130 delegates—not quite all of which are candidates for some office. There will be very little fighting around there in such large-sized chunks that you could cut it with a cheese-knife. It is said that Harry Ives has now worked long and faithfully enough to entitle him to the office, and that he will be for the nomination for the House. J. P. Knudson did so well during the first term that he naturally will want to succeed himself in that body—on one point at least they are oil harmonious—they all want an office.

THIS state recently invested $350,000 in 4½ per cent. Tennessee bonds, and as the state has several hundred thousand dollars more to invest, and no more desirable bonds are on the market, Treasurer Bobleter advises putting the state money into municipal and county bonds, thus keeping the money at home. This would necessitate the changing of the law governing the investment of permanent funds of the state, and should sufficient restrictions be placed on the money thus loaned it would be a safe investment for the state, and a good thing for the counties and municipalities throughout the state wanting to sell bonds.

THE Brainerd Dispatch says a remonstrance against setting off no portion of the St. Cloud land district is being circulated and very generally signed on the grounds that the proposed annexation to the Crookston district would be a handship to the settlers." If the proposed tract were annexed to the Crookston district it would save every settler who has business to transact at the land office at least 470 miles travel by rail, a week or more in time and all the added hotel bills. If it is a handship to save the settler all these expenses then the Dispatch is right, but it is a fact that every settler concerned desires the change, and as they are the ones most vitally affected it should be made.

A TYPOGRAPHICAL error in the last issue of the JOURNAL misrepresented a note in Webster and Mr. P. J. McGuire. The JOURNAL had a short article last week on Mr. McGuire's candidacy for state auditor, and the heading of the article read "McGuire for County Auditor." But Mr. McGuire's boom for state auditor goes rolling right along just the same, and from republicans throughout the northern and middle portions of the state, he is receiving promises of support and encouragement.

Interesting News and Gossip from the National Capital.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—I have told several democrats that they cannot make a convert of me by the kind of tariff legislation that they now propose. If I wanted the tariff reduced so that it would do a-y good, I should want much greater reductions a would be felt. The reductions in the senate Vest-Jones amended Wilson bill will never be felt by the consumer. The owners of foreign goods will get a little higher price for their wares, the middle men will get a slightly increased profit, and when the goods get to the consumer, he will be informed that the reduction are so slight that he cannot get any benefit from them. It is known that every owner of foreign goods has already raised his prices in anticipation of the democratic tariff.

The democratic legislators for the foreigner, the republican policy is to legislate for the American people.

* * *

No one is now insane enough to claim that the silver purchasing law was the cause of the hard times. It was necessary to repeal it to show the country that such was the case. The democrats of the east made it the scape-goat for the disasters that were sure to follow the success of the democratic party in all branches of the government.

* * *

On the other hand if the law had been retained, or if free coinage or any other silver legislation had taken the place of it, the result would have been the same. The democratic success is the cause of the prevailing hard times and there is no other explanation. It will take the country some time to recover from the mistake of 1892.

* * *

Senator Davis intends to offer an amendment to the tariff bill which is similar to that drawn up by John and when he was here and provides for a discrimination duty against those countries which will not give our agricultural products a fair market. It is doubtful if it will be accepted, as anything that tends to increase our exports, if counted, is a show of force on our part to make the tariff too special, is met with opposition by the democrats, who seem determined to legislate for the foreigner and the trusts.

The proposed timber reservation bill has shown its head in the house again, this time in a modified form, yet in such shape that there may be a wood-cut in it. It will now probably pass the house, but when it comes to the senate it will go before a committee of which Senator Washburn is a member and he will never let it get out until it has been properly amended.

Maj. Baldwin has a proposition to make the streets of Washington better, or rather the side walks, for the proper move. The major wore out a great deal of shoe leather limping offices for the consentments, by reason of the bad sidewalks.

Col. Kiefer is still hopeful of getting his canal scheme through the house, but congress will be very apt to wait until the result of the Nicaragua canal gives encouragement to such a move. Besides the claim for a canal to connect the Great Lakes with the Atlantic ocean is just now of more overshadowing importance.

How to Care For the Teeth.

Cleanse the teeth thoroughly at least twice a day, after each meal being still better. A brush of medium stiffness and water from which the chill has been taken should be preferred. Two or three times a week some good tooth powder is desirable. Powder tooth picks are injurious, as the splinters may break off between the teeth. Endure all reasonable pain for a time rather than have a tooth extracted, as a partially restored tooth is better than a false substitute.

How to Make Cold Cream.

The basis of cold cream is always mutton tallow. Get that at the butcher's and select some very fine tallow. Cut into bits and put it into a saucepan without any water. Set the saucepan into a jar of boiling water and let all remain until the fat is thoroughly "tried" out of the tallow. Strain through a fine sieve, and while it is still warm stir in a teaspoonful of the essence of camphor to every cup of tallow; next a tablespoonful of your favorite perfume and stir until all is a sweet smelling liquid. Before it has had time to cool pour in a little tallow and set open the ice over night. It will keep indefinitely and will be found one of the best remedies in the world for skin that gets rough and "winter sore."

Articles of Incorporation

OF THE

RED LAKE MILLING COMPANY.

For the purpose of organizing a corporation under Title 2 of Chapter 34 of the General Statutes of the State of Minnesota, and the acts amendatory thereof, and supplementary thereto, we, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves as a corporation, and do hereby adopt the following articles of incorporation:

ARTICLE I.

The name of the company hereby formed shall be Red Lake Milling Co. The general nature of the business to be done and the manufacturing of lumber, flour and all other products manufactured from wheat, and any of the same; the buying, selling and dealing in timber lands, water-power, machinery and other real and personal property as may be desirable, convenient or necessary in the operation of the manufacturing business, and may buy, own, sell or lease such elevators, warehouses and buildings as may be necessary in storing and handling wheat, flour and other cereals required in the operation of the business here specified, and shall have power to purchase, lease, acquire, possess, own and lease such property, real or mobile, together with all other buildings, railroad tracks, water power and machinery as may be necessary for the proper and profitable conduct of the company's business in the manufacturing of flour, feed, meal and such other products as can be manufactured in flouring mills, and do all other things necessary and incidental to its said manufacturing business. The functions of said corporation shall forever be limited to the business of manufacturing the articles hereinbefore mentioned and the business incidental thereto.

The principal place for the transaction of the business of said company shall be at Red Lake Falls, Minnesota.

ARTICLE II.

The time of the commencement of this corporation shall be the 8th day of June, A. D. 1894, and the period of its continuance shall be thirty years.

ARTICLE III.

The amount of capital stock of said corporation shall be sixty thousand dollars, which shall be paid in such time and in such installments as the board of directors may determine.

ARTICLE IV.

The highest amount of indebtedness or liability to which said corporation shall at any one time be subject is the sum of sixty thousand dollars.

ARTICLE V.

The names and residences of the persons forming this corporation are as follows: C. E. Cawley, Red Lake Falls, Minn., L. Van Hecke, Kirkella, North Dakota.

ARTICLE VI.

The names of the first board of directors are as follows: C. E. Cawley, Charles E. Hyde and L. Van Hecke; and C. E. Cawley shall be the president, and Charles E. Hyde shall be vice-president, and L. Van Hecke shall be secretary and treasurer, all of whom shall hold their offices until the first annual meeting of the stock-holders, which shall be held on the first Tuesday of August, 1894, and until their successors are elected and have qualified.

The government of this corporation and the management of its affairs shall be vested in a board of directors consisting of three persons, who shall be elected by the stockholders at the annual meeting of such corporation to be held on the first Tuesday in August at the annual meeting of the stock-holders, and the board of directors shall hold office for one year and until their successors are chosen and have qualified.

The officers of this corporation shall be president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer, who shall be elected by the board of directors annually and shall hold their offices for the term of one year and until their successors are chosen and have qualified. The board of directors shall have power to appoint such other officers and agents as may be found necessary, and to remove any officer or agent appointed by them at any time or in any of the offices caused by resignation or otherwise may be filled by the board of directors. The directors of said board of directors shall hold office until the next annual meeting for election of directors or other officers and until their successors have been elected and qualified.

The annual meeting of the stock-holders for the election of directors shall be held at the office of the company at the annual meeting of the Board of Directors of the Red Lake Milling Co. The number of directors on the board shall be three, and vacancies in said board occurring between the annual meetings of the stock-holders may be filled by the board of directors at any annual meeting.

ARTICLE VII.

The first meeting of the stock-holders shall be held on the 8th day of August, 1894.

In witness whereof the undersigned have hereunto set our hands and seals this 8th day of May, A. D. 1894.

THE SENATE BRIBERY COMMITTEE GETS TO WORK.

Kyle and Hunton Give Their Testimony, Certain Butts Was the Man — The Major's Testimony Will Be Spicy Reading — What Wade Hunton Knows.

WASHINGTON, May 21.—The committee to investigate the charges of bribery in the senate were on hand promptly at 10 a. m. in the room of the committee on privileges and elections. Senator Hunton was at the meeting on a witness and remained with the committee about half an hour, and after he emerged from the committee room his son, Ephn Hunton, Jr., was called in and asked to state what he knew of the alleged effort to bribe his father. He was dismissed only about 10 minutes. Both witnesses were examined by Senator Gray Mattet giving the newspapers any report of the proceedings, the reason for remarking that when this branch of the inquiry should be concluded the proceedings would all be made public.

Certain Butts Was the Man.

Both Senator Hunton and his son stated that C. W. Butts was the man who approached Senator Hunton. The latter did not state what materially from the story heretofore given to the press by Senator Hunton.

Senator Kyle was before the committee for more than an hour and was interrogated by Senator Gray after being called again. He put the committee in possession of all the information in his power, stating that he was first approached by Butts about two months ago with the proposition to vote against the tariff bill and receive pay for his vote, the amount offered being $14,000. In reply to a question Senator Kyle said he was confident Butts represented other parties, and the proposition, if it had been accepted, would have been made good.

Butts on the Stand.

Major Butts was the principal witness during the afternoon session. He was accompanied by his attorney, E. H. McClain. Butts was before the committee for about an hour and was excused with the request that he be in attendance again in the morning. He said when he left the committee room that he had been sworn to secrecy and could not reveal a word of the proceedings, but fragmentary references to the proceedings leave little room for doubt that when the report of Butts' testimony is published it will make very racy reading. He first demanded a transcript of the testimony of preceding witnesses, but compromised by accepting a proposition that the reporter should read portions of the testimony of the other witnesses which reflected upon him in any way. He explicitly denied any intention on his part

To Corrupt the Senators.

It is also understood that he politely declined to answer some of the more pertinent questions put to him by members of the committee. Another witness of the afternoon session was Duncan McFarlane, Senator Kyle's clerk, and James W. Walker, attorney of this city, who gave Butts a letter to Epha Hunton, Jr. Mr. Walker stated that when Butts had asked for a letter to Mr. Hunton he had he wanted to employ him as attorney in a land case and had given no other reason for wanting to know that gentleman. Mr. McFarlane told how, after Senator Kyle had referred Butts to him, he had talked with him about the notes signed by Hunton. He confirmed Senator Kyle's statement and said explicitly that Butts had made a direct proposition to bribe the senator to vote against the tariff bill. He also submitted his notes on his conversation with Butts.

WAITE'S LATEST BREAK.

If Bullets Can't Overthrow Wall Street Ballots Must Do It.

PUEBLO, Colo., May 23.—Governor Waite, in an address here, classed Congressman Bland, whom he claims sold out silver in 1878, with Vice President Carlisle in their surrender to the forces of silver. He advocated coining Mexican dollars to be made a legal tender in Colorado. He expressed the hope that the ballot would soon overthrow the domination of Wall street, but if that was not successful, the man who would not bare his breast to bullets was not a man.

Adjutant General Tarsney made a few remarks and said that unless something was done, the Republican party of Cozey's men were clubbed at Washington would be the first in a new revolution.

HOW TO KEEP BREAD.

It Should Be Exposed to the Air When It Leaves the Oven.

Don't shut bread in airtight boxes to keep it moist. Such barbarous treatment of bread may be efficacious in keeping it moist, but bread from which fresh air is excluded soon has a disagreeable, clayey flavor and is unpalatable to people of cultured tastes, who appreciate the nutty sweetness that is a prominent characteristic of all good bread.

The foolish notion of keeping bread moist had its origin in bad cookery. Most of the stuff made by bakers has to be eaten fresh and moist or not eaten at all. It is so light and woolly that if exposed to the air a few hours it grows soggy and husky and is almost as unsavory and indigestible as chips.

A large proportion of homemade bread is similar in character and is affected in a similar manner by exposure to the air. But properly made bread—such bread as ought to be in every intelligent homesand on every Christian table three times a day—grows sweeter by exposure to the air and is not at its best until two or three days old. Bread should be kept in a well covered box or jar, but it should not be wrapped in cloths, and the box or jar in which it is kept should have small holes in the top or sides, through which the fresh air can have access. As soon as loaves of bread are taken from the oven they should be exposed freely to pure air, and no time afterward should they be excluded from it. Made good bread, put it in a well ventilated box aft'r it is perfectly cool, and it will keep sufficiently moist at least a week.

MOBS IN CONTROL.

An Attempt to Resume Work in Pennsylvania Mines Causes Trouble.

IRON BARS USED AS WEAPONS.

Operators of the Central District Issue an Ultimatum to Miners.

LATROBE, Pa., May 22.—Interest in the strike situation here has the call over the flood excitement. The state of affairs is extremely critical in this region and trouble is imminent. The attempt to resume work by the Latrobe Coal company was met by ugly opposition, principally from a big mob of Slavs and Italians, who were armed with clubs, bars of iron, big steel files and other weapons equally formidable. Only one man was allowed to go to work. At the Ligonier works a dozen deputies were confronted by a mob of 200 strikers. One deputy was struck over the head with a club and his ribs wrested from him.

ULTIMATUM OF OPERATORS.

Miners of Central Pennsylvania Given Until May 28 to Return to Work.

PHILADELPHIA, May 22. — An important meeting of bituminous coal mine operators from the Central Pennsylvania region, where the miners are now on strike, was held in this city during the afternoon. Every operator in the district was present and it was unanimously agreed that the men should be given until May 28th in which to return to work. If they fail to do so by that time the mines will be thrown open to whoever seeks employment and those men who decide to go to work will be protected by operators.

A resolution was adopted to the effect that the operators unanimously agree that it is impossible to pay their employes more than their present wages of 40 cents per ton for digging coal.

RUM RIVER RAGING.

A Million Feet of Logs Carried Out of the Booms at Anoka.

ANOKA, Minn., May 22.—Rum river has reached the danger line and is rising steadily. About 1,000,000 feet of logs broke loose, carrying booms, piers and several outbuildings of Page Bros.' Lumber company down stream. Most of the logs are lodged against the upper bridge, endangering that structure so that traffic had to be suspended. The new starch factory is inundated and will stand the strain for some time to come. The west bank of the river has caved within 20 feet of the Commercial hotel. A crew of men is at work building up the side of the dam as the water is within six inches of the river bank. Hundreds of anxious citizens have been watching the rushing stream all day. Should the river raise a few inches more, which is quite likely, there is no question but that the upper bridge will go, carrying everything before it.

Condemned Senator Walsh.

ST. PAUL, May 22.—The Brotherhood of Engineers adopted resolutions condemning Senator Walsh of Georgia for his bill making it a crime to interfere with any train carrying United States mails. Insurance was then discussed the balance of the day.

The auditory installed its officers, finished a little routine business and adjourned.

Six Anarchists Executed.

BARCELONA, May 22.—The six anarchists, Codina, Corezuela, Sagas, Berual, Villarubia and Mir, sentenced to death after having been convicted of complicity in the attempt of Pallas to assassinate Captain General Martinez Campos, and of being concerned in the Liceo theatre bomb tragedy, were executed at 4 a. m. outside the citadel of Mont Juich.

Wisconsin Treasury Cases.

MADISON, Wis., May 22.—The Beetz and Keehn treasury cases, which were to be argued before the circuit court during the afternoon, have been postponed until later in the week and will come up Thursday. About $185,000 interest is involved, the state claiming that amount from ex-treasurers.

Gambling Prisoners at Des Moines.

DES MOINES, May 22.—John Krouu and Barney Hammill have been arrested for the murder of Conductor Redpath Sunday night. The third man implicated, George Weems, is still at large. The sheriff has put an extra guard at the county jail, as there have been threats of lynching.

An Attorney Held.

DULUTH, May 22.—George W. Post, the attorney charged with abornation of perjury in connection with land office frauds, was given a hearing before Judge Carey and held to the United States grand jury, which meets at St. Paul in June. Bail was fixed at $1,000.

More Iowa Mines Out.

DES MOINES, May 22.—Three hundred and twenty-five miners have gone out at Coalfax and 115 at Dunean. The Rock Island is consuming 75 cars of coal daily and receiving but 25. The situation is grave and traffic may be suspended.

Entire Family Poisoned.

PERU, Ind., May 22.—William Seifert, his wife and five children, are dangerously ill from the effects of trichinosis in packing home sausage. Three of the children are in a critical condition.

Smallpox at Dubuque.

DUBUQUE, May 22.—A case of smallpox developed here during the day. The victim is a laborer named Dooley from the smallpox district in Chicago.

ALONG THE ATLANTIC COAST.

Small Sail Boats Wrecked in Great Numbers.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., May 21.—For 36 hours the waves have been dashing along the coast from Sandy Hook to Cape May. Railroad tracks were covered with sand, vessels were in distress, while small sail boats were wrecked in great numbers. Trees and fences have been blown down and great damage inflicted upon farmers and gardeners. Along the Delaware river the damage from high water is extensive, and at Camden and Bordentown high water is the rule.

Lehigh and Delaware Rising.

EASTON, Pa., May 21.—The Lehigh and Delaware rivers are rising rapidly. The Lehigh is higher than at any time since 1865. The people living along the banks of the latter stream have been compelled to move all their goods to a place of safety. The water has undermined the foundation walls of the Bushnell Manufacturing company's building at Catasauqua and other industrial points along the Lehigh are threatened.

Operators Driven Out.

SUNBURY, Pa., May 22.—The Western Union operators at Milton were driven out by the flood at 3 p. m., since which time there has been no telegraph communication north of this place. The Reading railway bridge at Muncis is washed away, as is the wagon bridge at Allenwood. The town is sure to be inundated and the people are moving their furniture into upper floors and other places of safety.

CAN'T LIVE WITHOUT DOGS.

Eskimos Find the Faithful Animal a Necessity of Their Miserable Existence.

"Without dogs the larger portion of the great Eskimo family peopling the barren northern coast of America would find it impossible to exist in its chosen home." So writes E. W. Nelson in his "Mammals of Northern Alaska." They are used in winter for hunting, sledge drawing and the like, but in summer are mostly left to shift for themselves. They receive much hard usage, as well as do much hard work, but are described nevertheless as a rollicking set, full of play, fond of human society and quarrelsome as schoolboys.

Mr. Nelson credits them with a vein of humor and declares that their varying character-istics can be read in their faces. They are worth from $3 to $15 apiece, according to age, size and intelligence. For sledge drawing they are harnessed in teams of either seven or six—three or four pairs and a leader. The load is from 800 to 700 pounds, and the course is nearly twenty miles unbroken over or over rough ice. With a team of seven dogs and a load of more than 900 pounds Mr. Nelson made a journey of more than 1,200 miles in about two months. The last 60 miles were made over a bad road in a continuous gale of 24 hours. They are much affected by the moon. During full moon half the night is spent by them in howling in chorus.

"During the entire winter at St. Michael's," says Mr. Nelson, "they were regularly given a chorus every moonlight night, and the dogs of two neighboring villages joined in the serenade." He speaks of its "wild, weird harmony" and seems to have found it agreeable rather than otherwise. The influence of the moon is also very apparent when the dogs are traveling. They brighten up with the moon rise, and pricking up their ears start off as if they had forgotten their fatigue. The fur traders take advantage of this fact and sometimes lie over during the day and travel at night. The dogs endure an astonishing degree of cold. Mr. Nelson saw a female with two newly born puppies lying upon the snow near a hut, with no sign of shelter, when the thermometer ranged from 30 to 35 degrees below zero.

THE MODISTE.

In Paris new petticoats of silk or satin are made with featherbone hoops which reach quite to the knees.

Sleeves are still made very wide, no longer the least wrinkled, but drooping, the large cape collars and sleeve caps still further deepening their fullness.

A novel way of edging a dress skirt is to put a roll as thick as the little finger at the bottom edge, covering it by two velvet-or mousier piping, in fact.

Fine openwork summer stockings can now be purchased. They look almost as "dressy" as lace fronted silk and hide hose, at the same time being much warmer.

A new ornamental shoe is made of fronted with dressed kid or patent leather. A new slipper for bedroom or boudoir is of white kid edged with fur and lined with pink kid.

Tiny aluminum wires are inserted in the facings of the tailor-skirted walking dresses to give them the approved flare. Tabs to skirmish locks very much again like the shadow of a coming very girlish.

Tailor gowns for afternoon wear are made of woollen cloth of fine quality in dark fruit colors, terra cotta, russian green and silver blue, with narrow trimmings of persian lamb fur on the waist and the same material sewn on the circular skirt.—New York Post.

Service For New Members.

Shall we or shall we not have some service of recognition and reception when new members are taken into the society? That question is often asked, and in consequence I take this means of making an answer, appreciating the fact that my answer is not to be considered authoritative.

Let the "service" send by the society at the time when the new member is received leave an impression upon the new member that the step that he is taking in joining the society and the reception that is being given to him on the part of the society is in no way as important as that on joining the church, then I can see good, and only good, in a form of service that will give some appropriate recognition and welcome to the new member.—John Willis Baer.

DIET OF THE GREAT.

Favorite Dishes of the World's Illustrious Generals, Philosophers and Poets.

"Man is what he eats," said Feuerbach, the German philosopher, or, as he expressed it in his native language, "Der mensch ist was er isst," a play of words which is not without its deep meaning. Man's food is never without influence on his temper, nor is the choice he makes in his meals without a certain reflection of his character. John the Baptist in eating locusts and wild honey was indicative of his mind and motives, as was Zoroaster's predilection for bread and water crusses of his ethics and doctrines. Plato was satisfied with honey, bread, vegetables and fruit, Mohammed preferred mutton and milk to all other dishes and drinks. Hannibal, the Carthaginian warrior, lived on olives, while the Roman General Sulla's favorite meats were wild ass, chickens drowned in Falernian wines, ortolan and field snails.

Charles the Great was a lover of venison. Henry IV of France had a gluttonous appetite for oysters; Frederick the Great for potatoes, a sort of Italian pudding; Emperor William I of Germany for lobsters and oysters. Napoleon III has an abnormal fondness for coffee, of which he took 20 to 25 cups daily.

Artists, poets and philosophers evince a larger variety in the choice of their meals and beverages. Goethe was very fond of champagne, Schiller of wine. Klopstock indulged in truffle pastry, smoked salmon and peas. Lessing's favorite dish was lentil soup, a predilection which he shared with Kant, while Hahnitz delighted in apple cake. Torquato Tasso was a lover of sweet things and heaped his salad with sugar. So did Moses Mendelsohn, who mourned the impossibility of sweetening sugar.

Byron took only one daily meal, consisting principally of old Chester cheese, pickles, red cabbage, wine or liquors. He used to drink great quantities of tea. Bismarck in his younger days was very fond of hard boiled eggs and cognac, which he preferred to "pretzel and beer," a beverage which he considers the chief cause of German poltroon politics and lack of resolute and harmonious action.

William II, the present emperor of Germany, loves his wine and prefers the sparkling juice of the Rhine, which unfortunately loosens his tongue. Champagne he avoids, lest "it cause his heart to run away with his head," as he once remarked, but probably because it is too French for him.—Baltimore Sun.

Brain Surgery.

Sawing out sections of the skull in order to give the brain room to develop symmetrically seems a rather delicate and dangerous operation, but it is one that has been performed in many cases and with perfect success. Children apparently in a condition of hopeless idiocy have been restored to sense by this and are in prospect of developing the faculties usual in those of like age. The operation is performed by removing the unduly hardened permits growth, and the clouded intellect may become clear and logical.

Attention has been called to cases in which the skull has been so much exposed, upon the silk ligatures used in internal operation. In one case an abdominal tumor was removed and some years later there were calculi present in quantity that caused great distress. It was thought that the ligatures used had not been present in the silk, and that this acted as a nucleus around which the gritty particles gather.—New York Ledger.

Population of the Ocean.

A striking proof of the vastness and variety of the population of the ocean has been furnished by the results of explorations made by a committee of the zoological department of the British association in that part of the Irish sea surrounding the isle of Man.

Out of 1,000 species of marine animals collected, 224 had never before been found in that region, 36 were previously unknown as inhabitants of British waters, and 17 were entirely new to science. Indeed they were animals whose existence had never been suspected.

If such discoveries reward a few weeks of searching in so minute a spot of the sea, how many volumes would be required to contain a list of the still undiscovered inhabitants of the great oceans?—Youth's Companion.

A Bottomless Lake In Sweden.

In Thomas Nashe's "Terrors of the Night"—published in 1594—he says that Sweden, Gothland, is bottomless. He also tells other peculiar things respecting it. "Over it no fowls flies but it forces to death nor man dare pass but is mummed like a statue of marble. Awle ye inhabitants around about it are deafened with ye hideous roar of hits waters when out of its midst as out of Mont Gibell a mightye stinking smoake issues that will poysons ye whole countrie about."—St. Louis Republic.

THE FALL OF A TAILOR.

The Free Trade Times Have Nearly Cooked His Goose.

I was in Pennsylvania last week and had occasion to visit Germantown. That used to be one of the busiest sections of the country. It is full of factories, which used to be all running full time, and many of them overtime, in 1892. But the fear of free trade played havoc with Germantown, its streets and its workingmen, thousands of hands have been idle or working only on part time, and many of them have not had a dollar to spend in a retail store for months, being dependent upon relief societies and soup-house organizations for their very existence.

While in Germantown I met a friend and asked him how things were. He used to have a fine position in a factory, and I was astonished to hear him say:

"Times have been very bad with me. I lost my job at this factory because it closed down, and I have been trying to keep up the payments on our nice home for my wife and children by working as a bill collector. There has been plenty of business in that line, but it is hard work to make shoe leather because the people have no money to pay their bills.

"I am indeed sorry to hear this," was my reply, "but is there no chance of your factory resuming?"

"I don't like to think when that will be," said my friend, the new bill collector. "I would rather think of the troubles of other people than my own."

"Are the people here in distress and trouble with all these factories, emblems of industry, around us?" I asked.

"Yes," he said, "they are emblems of idleness now. I have just left a sad case. Let me tell you about it."

"Certainly," I said. "Try a good domestic cigar." He lighted up and began:

"A few years ago a humble tailor came to Germantown. He had a few hundred dollars saved up and rented a room in the mill district where he could do work and take odd jobs of repairing. He had an industrious wife, who assisted him, and they got along nicely, adding to their savings.

"Finally he had his window enlarged and bought a few portions of pieces of cloth at a time, with the necessary trimmings, and paid cash for his purchases. He did well and was able to buy a whole piece of cloth from the manufacturer, and as his custom increased he bought several pieces at the same time. His trade was among the mill hands; he gave them good satisfaction and had quite a nice little business, increasing more and more year-ons every year and always paying promptly for all his purchases.

"He explained that some of the mill operators in the district in which he was located were his customers. They had ordered suits of clothes to be made; the mills had shut down; they were thrown out of employment and were unable to take the clothes they had ordered. They asked him to carry the garments for them until the mills started up and their circumstances became brighter.

"The cloth and trimmings that he had purchased were hanging in his store in the shape of suits of clothes that had been made up for some of his regular customers who had been unable to take the clothes; he was without payment for them. Therefore he was cramped for means to meet his obligations to the bank, his home. That is about the whole story in a few words, and it illustrates the condition of many thousands of others similarly situated, many of whom can now daily forced into contact with through my now business as a bill collector.

"It is a hard case indeed," I said. "It shows how the loss of work affects the manufacturer in the case of trade, a condition that will be worse instead of better if the Wilson bill becomes a law and allows large foreign importations to come into our markets. Our manufacturers must make less goods or our men must work less. The trade must always cook the tailor's goose."

R THINKEN.

New York, April 29.

Before and After Election.

We have had enough cheap alien laborers flocking here to take the employment of our own workingmen.—New York Herald, Aug. 31, 1893.

"This was The Herald's opinion before the last presidential election, when fishing for votes. But during the last campaign The Herald has not done a thing to give back "the employment of our own workingmen." It advocates larger importations of foreign goods, which only help "to take the employment of our own workingmen." It advocates free ships to take labor from the workers in our shipyards, anything that will injure the United States and take from it "the employment of our own workingmen."

The Fruits of Protection.

"When Freedom from her mountain height
Unfurled her banner to the air,
She vowed to keep Home's heartthome bright
And to protect its loved ones there.

"Beneath those starry folds," she cried,
"My oppressed of all the world shall meet.
And rich and poor shall, side by side,
Learn Liberty's magnificent."

Lo! at her word across the land
The forges' fires inflamed the night,
And Capital, with kindly hand,
Led eagar Labor to the light.

Each infant industry built up
In home and harbor for all whose skill
And faith and toil filled Plenty's cup
And bade the Nation drink at will.

Peace smiled anew the smiling scene,
Contentment wreathed the matron's face,
While boy and girls of sturdy mien
In virtuous knowledge grew apace.

Freeman, with heart and vote and voice
For aye present its inspiration,
And unborn millions like the choice
Shall yet fill up the roll of honor.

"About four years ago my wife was troubled with salt rheum. Although we tried nearly everything it got worse instead of better and spread over both of her hands so that she could hardly use them. Finally she commenced to use Hood's Sarsaparilla and when she had taken two bottles her hands were entirely healed and she has not since been troubled. In December, 1892, she was covered with boils of a HEARING ORDERED.

Decision in the Ashland Land Cases by Secretary Smith.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—Decisions in the famous Ashland land cases of Wisconsin, in which perpetuation of extensive frauds are alleged, have been announced by the secretary of the interior. The cases involve the right of entry to lands within the limits of the land grants of the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha railway vs. the Wisconsin Central. In the case of England vs. Martin the contest was dismissed. In view, however, of the fact that a report was made by a special agent, supported by affidavits, charging that the entry of Martinson was made in the interest of W. E. McCord, the secretary has decided that a hearing be ordered for the investigation of the charges. A similar order for a full investigation was made in other cases in which the same charge was involved.

HILL HAS NO BILL.

The New York Senator Thinks There Are Enough Tariff Measures Now.

WASHINGTON, May 22.—Senator Hill was in his seat in the senate today for the first time in two week. He stated in reply to a question that he had been at Albany during the greater part of his absence from Washington. When informed of the story which had been current about the Capitol last week, that he was preparing a new tariff bill as a substitute for the pending bill, he simply replied: "Haven't they enough tariff bills now? The criticisms seem to be general that there are too many."

He said he might deliver another tariff speech later in the debate.

COXEY GOES TO JAIL.

The Leader of the Commonweal Army Gets Twenty Days.

WASHINGTON, May 22.—Judge Miller, in the police court, sentenced Coxey, Browne and Christopher Columbus Jones to 20 days imprisonment in jail for displaying a banner in the Capitol grounds on the occasion of the May day demonstration. Coxey and Browne were also sentenced to $5 fine or 10 days imprisonment in default thereof, for trespassing on the Capitol grass.

HALF FRAUDULENT.

Senator Kyle Talks of the Indian Depredation Claims.

WASHINGTON, May 22.—Senator Kyle, who has been investigating the allegations of frauds in Indian claims, has returned to this city. At Pine Ridge and Rosebud agencies, he found much to confirm the charges of the claims which he has investigated. He thinks fully fifty per cent of the claims are fraudulent. The total of these claims is $600,000.

Breckinridge Drops Out.

WASHINGTON, May 22.—It is stated upon excellent authority that a new plan has been decided upon to end the row over Colonel Breckinridge in the Kentucky (7th) congressional district. Breckinridge the elder is to be subtracked in favor of his son, Desha Breckinridge, who is to be nominated for congress. Breckinridge's followers in the district believe Desha can be elected, while his father is sure of defeat.

Requests for Bland.

WASHINGTON, May 22.—Upon the desk of Mr. Bland, in the chamber of representatives, was a huge bunch of La Franco roses, bearing the inscription, "To the Next President." It was in recognition of his success on the Missouri convention last week. Paul J. Sorg, the newly elected successor of the late Mr. Honk, took his seat as representative from the third Ohio district.

First Trip on June 8.

WEST SUPERIOR, Wis., May 22.—The new steamer Northwest, the exclusive passenger steamer of the Great Northern railway, will leave here on her initial trip June 8. There was a rumor current that the boat drew too much water to get through the Soo canal. This is emphatically denied by the general agent.

Asked For a Receiver.

DECATUR, Ills., May 23.—Stockholders representing a majority of the $50,000 capital stock of the Sc ott Manufacturing company have asked Judge Vail to appoint a receiver for the company. They claim that the company is insolvent and being run at a loss.

Stocking the Redwood.

REDWOOD FALLS, Minn., May 22.—Fifty thousand wall-eyed pike were successfully placed in Redwood river Sunday. This is the first time the fish commission has sent them without an attendant. Not one was dead.

Telegraphers in Session.

DENVER, May 22.—The ninth annual convention of the Order of Railway Telegraphers of America convened in Oxford hall Monday with several hundred delegates present, one-third of whom were ladies.

Will Meet Biennially.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., May 22. — The Switchmen's association was busy all day amending the constitution and bylaws. One of the changes effected provides for biennial sessions instead of annual sessions.

THERE WAS NO STRING TO IT.

But He Had Abundant Reason Nevertheless to Be Suspicious.

There was a bright new 50 cent piece lying on the pavement on Jefferson avenue, near Griswold street, when a how hacked man with a satchel came along from the depot. He saw the coin while he was yet 50 feet away, and he made a sudden forward rush to get it. The movement was almost instantly checked, however, and he walked slowly forward and hacked to the curbstone and stood there and gazed at the coin with a fixy look on his countenance. In about a minute a pedestrian came up, saw the coin and reached for it and put it in his pocket. Observing the attitude of the old man at the same time he turned and queried:

"It didn't belong to you, did it?"

"Wall, I swan!" was the reply.

"What's the matter?"

"This is the queerest durned town I ever struck in all my life. I was coming up this street last year and met this man whom I saw a 50 cent piece lyin jest about here. I made a grab fur it, fell on my nose and rolled all over and finally got up to find that a boy had astring on the money and had pulled it into that doorway."

"And so you were shy of this one?"

"Yaas, I was shy."

"And are half a dollar behind the game?"

"Yaas, I'm half a dollar out. Say, are you in a hurry?"

"Yes—great hurry."

"Wall, I'll have to find somebody else then. I want to find a feller who'll not down with me fur about two hours and post me up. I'm comin to Detroit once a week now, and I want to find out what's got strings to it and what's lyin around loose and kin be picked up."—Detroit Free Press.

How He Wore His Shoes.

"I'll bet any one in the party," Colonel Jack Gambill said to a group of acquaintances one day, "that I can tell something when a growing boy out in old Tennessee that has never been done by any one before or since."

"What was that, colonel?"

"I wore out my first pair of shoes without both feet being shod at the same time."

"Explain."

"You see, it was this way. Shoes were a novelty to me. The shoemaker was slow, and I was impatient, as all boys are, for a new thing. He finished one of the shoes on a Saturday and told me I would have to wait another week for its fellow. I couldn't stand that, so I took the one shoe and wore it in such an extent that when I went back to other I had to leave the first one for repairs. It went on this way week after week, and somehow I never could bring that pair of shoes together on my feet. The family was too poor to think of buying me an additional pair. Odd things wasn't it, to have one foot in leather and paddling the boot with the other? Boys'll do queer things sometimes."—San Francisco Call.

The Natural Death.

The natural death is no utopian dream. Self Destroyers and euthanasists are within the reach of mankind. Not a few have already secured both, while many more may find them. I have seen the man. Ho was old. He had neither pain, anger nor sorrow. Finally his intellect began to lose its power. His ambition changed to a desire for repose. His ideas of space, time and duty lingered for a moment, then passed away. Step by step his powers waned. Happily, painlessly, carelessly the moments flew. The merry sounds of youth at play and the hum of the busy world only rocked him gently to sleep. His mind as he passed until his intellect ceased and consciousness was no more. This is the true euthanasia. It suggests no terror. It inflicts no pain; it brings no agony.

Harsh.

A RETIRED BUSINESS WOMAN.

A Page From Her History.

The important experiences of others are interesting, but the following is the experience of a lady, well known in this city for many years, much of that time very seriously ill. Five years I was treated by one physician continually. I was in bed most of the time, subject to rotten on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could live but a month. My feet and limbs were badly swollen, and I was inflated, as it seemed, with water. My kidneys paid no attention to it. Milbs' New Heart Cure, which I had a friend, who had been afflicted with heart disease, had been cured by the remedy, and was again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I could perceive decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. In a few days the inflation so much more my ankles, somewhat like a pair of bone for months, and my limbs had been swollen so long that the swelling was painful. Before I had taken one bottle of the New Heart Cure the swelling had all gone down, and I was so much better that I did my own work. I have recommended it to others since, and the result has been satisfactory.—Mrs. Morgan, 662 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure is recommended as an excellent specialist in heart disease, treated by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle. Six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from all opiates or dangerous drugs.

OUT OF THE FRYING PAN

Has come not a little knowledge as to cookery—what to do, as well as what not to do. Thus we have learned to use the most pure and perfect and popular cooking material for all frying and shortening purposes.

COTTOLENE,

PROGRESSIVE COOKING

is the natural outcome of the age, and it teaches us not to use lard, hut rather the new shortening, which is far cleaner, and more digestible than any lard can be.

COTTOLENE,

A SCOUT'S ROMANCE.

[Copyright, 1894, by American Press Association.]

THE red autumnal sun was not more than an hour high when a little band of Confederate troopers, rounding at a sharp trot a curve in the road near Winchester, came suddenly upon an old negro man, crouched by the wayside, building a fire of leaves and twigs. He looked up in seeming alarm as they halted and saluted them with an obsequious "Good eb'n'n, Mars Cun'l. Good eb'n'n, gemmu'n," rising and doffing his tattered hat as he spoke. He was very ragged, very bald and as scared as he was both ragged and bald.

"Who are you? Where do you come from? What are you doing here?" demanded Captain Monroe, a large, sallow, saturnine looking man in command of the detachment.

"Ma name's Biddle, sah—Gus Biddle. Ah wus jist wukkin ma way ovuhlong, sah, f'm Shaw'sdale to d' Winchester, sah, fob to see of Ah couldn't find ma dah'ter's man Sam an git a piece fob to ky ma ole hair an line a mouffle fo' ot. Mighty hard'd times deso on a po' ole niggah, sah."

"What have you there?" asked the captain, pointing to a battered, handless old coffeepot standing by the thickening little fire.

"Dat's ma medicine tea, sah,'foh ma blood an do mizz'ry in ma stummick."

"Hand it up here." The old man obeyed promptly, and the officer, after sniffing its contents, with a look of disgust remarked, "Sassafras," as he handed it back.

"Yes, sah, an alder roots an duck an 'sang. It's a mighty good compoun'tion, sah."

"Luckiy for you it hasn't the smell of a Yankee coffee 'compoun'tion,'" growled the captain, who asked a number of questions, like a suspicious and siarwed cross examiner. They were all answered cheerfully enough, and yet he did not seem satisfied. "I think, I'll give you a good whipping anyway," he concluded.

"Oh, fob de Lawd's sake, don't do dat, sah! Ah'ze too ole an sick to stan it, cun'l."

"I wouldn't hurt the poor old fellow if I were you, captain," spoke up a bright, clever looking lieutenant riding by his side. "He hasn't done anything to deserve it, has he?"

"No, possibly not specially, but he ought to have it on general principles. Every nigger is a spy for the Yankees."

"Mars Cun'l, dem sto'-made Yankees buhn't Mars Gaines' place, wha Ah had a good home, an drobe me out on de cole wuhld an has'd wintuh a-comin on. Oh, Ah don't fabor no Yankees, Mars Cun'l."

The captain grinned grimly, then, turning away, replied indifferently to his lieutenant. "Well, Townly, have your way about it—let him go," and rode on with his troop. Before following them the lieutenant threw a Confederate bank note—the best money he had—to the negro, who caught it eagerly and with profuse gratitude continued calling: "Tank you, sah! Gawd bless you, sah!" as long as he could be heard by his benefactor.

* * * * * * *

The troopers stopped that night in Winchester, and Lieutenant Townly availed himself of the opportunity to pay a visit to the residence of the late Judge Chandler, where he was on the enviable footing of an accepted suitor for the hand of the only daughter, Miss Edith Chandler, a charming girl of 18. In the absence of the family the parlor he saw as he entered a girl loved over a TOWNLY AND EDITH.

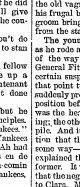

table and weeping almost hysterically. Thinking her Edith, he walked quickly toward her, but at the sound of his step she raised her head, and he recognized her as Miss Clara Farwell, Edith's cousin. She did not wait for him to address her, but fled in haste through a back door, still weeping bitterly. Hardly had she disappeared when Edith, who had been notified of his arrival, came into the room, and after their usual affectionate greeting and a little purely personal conversation natural under their relations as lovers he asked her sympathetically: "What is the matter with Miss Farwell? She was here, crying as if her heart would break, when I came in and ran away when I was about speaking to her. Has she a toothache?"

"A toothache!" replied Edith indignantly. "How like a man that idea is! Nothing but a physical pain stirs your beastly sensibilities. Poor Clara! She has heard that her father is killed, and she loved him very dearly."

"He was on the other side, wasn't he?"

"Yes, in a Michigan regiment, I believe. Oh, how sad is all this dreadful work of murder among fellow countrymen who should be brethren! All for a question of states rights! I'm sure the rights of the wives and children are a great deal higher."

"Don't let us get into a discussion on that now, dear Edith. Many a good and true man in the south thinks as you do and yet feels that honor and duty compel him to give his life to resist the invasion of his state. The man is not worthy of living who does not in his heart wish it were all well over. I am very sorry for your cousin."

"Poor motherless girl—tender, loving and helpless! The death of her father was her altogether alone in the world. She will always have a home with us, of course, while we have one, as she has had for three years past, since her father joined the army and sent her here. But her heart is broken."

* * * * * * *

Lieutenant Townly occupied the best guest chamber that night and saw nothing more of the unhappy orphan, nor indeed did he even think of her while in company with the betrothed, but when he was going to bed she recurred to his remembrance, and he recorded her a sigh of sympathy. At daybreak, having to join his comrades early, he arose and began dressing with soldierlike haste, but suddenly stopped short in his toilet and stood as if paralyzed, listening.

A girl's voice, fresh, strong and sweet, caroled and lilted, not in the set measures of any song, but in such an exuberant outburst of roulades, trills and flourishes of melody as seemed the upbubbling and outgushing of a purely happy heart, free from care and sorrow.

"My God," he exclaimed to himself, with a look that was almost fright, "that is Clara singing! I am sure of it! I know her voice!" He sat upon the edge of the bed, listened and gasped: "Great heavens, what an utterly heartless creature the girl must be! Has turned her brain."

Miss Farwell appeared at the breakfast table and demonstrated the possession of more spirits than all the rest of the family added together. The lieutenant looked upon her with icy disapproval, but she did not seem to be aware of it. Finally he said in his most solemn manner, "I learned last evening with sincere regret of your recent bereavement, Miss Farwell."

"About papa, you mean" she replied laughingly. "Oh, I guess it was not true. There are so many stories flying about now one never knows what to believe." And with that she seemed to dismiss the subject.

He had no appetite. Her callous indifference sickened him. Never before could he have believed her capable of it, and the hideous question forced itself upon him, "Are other girls like her, or is she an exceptional monster?" Soon he got up from the table and paused to glance out of a window into the back yard. There upon the wood pile, with a piece of corn bread in one hand and his "medicine tea" pot in the other, sat the old vagrant darky. He was eating his frugal breakfast and looking at the goose bringing the lieutenant's horse from the stable.

The young officer pondered gloomily as he rode and had gone full five miles of the way back from Winchester to General Fitzhugh Lee's camp before a certain suspicion occurred to him. At that point two widely distinct things suddenly presented themselves in juxtaposition before his mental vision. One was the mysterious girl merrily singing; the other the old darky on the wood pile. And it came to him as an inspiration that the purpose of the latter in some way—if he could only see how—explained the astonishing change in the former. It was by no means impossible that the negro should have brought news to Clara. Anyone was doubtless good for looking upon all of that race as, potentially at least, Yankee spies. Should he confide his suspicions to the captain, he would get himself laughed at if he was wrong and if right terrify and grieve the family by what might very well prove were the negro luckless enough to be caught. After much cogitation he concluded to keep his mouth shut, which under most circumstances is about the wisest thing a man can do.
